PASSING COMMENT

The myriad friends of Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler in the musical world will rejoice with her in the success of her sons—Leonard Bloomfield Zeisler, Ernest Bloomfield Zeisler and Paul Bloomfield Zeisler.

A copy of the Convocation Program of the University of Chicago contains the names of all three a remarkable number of times and in most flattering connections, with honors various, and a letter from the famous pianist to the Editor of Music News contains the further information that the eldest son—Leonard—has just been appointed secretary to Chief Justice White of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mrs. Zeisler is brilliant in many ways other than piano playing, and her husband, Sigmund Zeisler, is one of the finest lawyers in the country.

The three sons, therefore, come very naturally by their brilliant minds!

Congratulations!

Widespread interest has been manifested in the announcement that special prizes will be given by the Chicago Musical College in the season that will open Sept. 16. Already many inquiries have been made in regard to the grand pianos that will be given by the Mason & Hamlin and the Cable Piano companies, and to the recitals respectively offered for vocal and violin students by Carl Kinney and Felix Borowski. As some uncertainty appears to exist as to whether these prizes are thrown open to all students regardless of any conditions, it is well to explain that the Mason & Hamlin grand piano is restricted to competitors in the graduation and post-graduation piano classes of the Chicago Musical College; the Conover grand piano, presented by the Cable Company of Chicago, to students in the piano classes of the Senior Diploma class; the vocal recital, all expenses of which will be paid, to students in the graduation and post-graduation classes, and the violin recital to the same classes in the violin department.

That Ebenezer Church is very musical was proved in the big success of the Festival given last week, and that it is equally patriotic is shown in the fact that ninety-eight members of the church are now in war service.

GODOWSKY AND MARK TWAIN

A letter received recently at the offices of Haensel & Jones addressed simply thus and nothing more: "Professor Leopold Godowsky, New York City," reminds one of the story told about another letter addressed simply thus and nothing more: "Mark Twain—God Knows Where," upon receipt of which the great American humorist sent the following reply: "He did." We do not know what reply the great Polish pianist-humorist will send, but we'd like to, because we can wager it will be a good one.

WHITNEY TEW PRESENTS MLLE. D'OEX IN SONG RECITAL

The appended program was given on Thursday evening at the Tew Studio by Roxan D'Oex, an advanced pupil of Whitney Tew, who was scheduled as contralto-mezzo-coloratura.

The reason for this is that Mr. Tew believes implicitly that any one who is properly taught should have a very long range, regardless of what may be the supposedly "best" part of his or her voice and, while Mlle. D'Oex is patently a coloratura, he still has her sing, as reference to the program will show, in every other range and style.

Particularly adept was she on Thursday evening in the "Lakme," "Mignon" and "Dinorah" arias, her fiature being definite and clear and her tones very ringing.

In "When the Heart is Young" she gave an example of real dramatic power, and in "Last Rose of Summer" (encore) and "Comin' Thro' the Rye" proved that the most suave and sentimental of ballad singing is also within her metier.

Mlle. D'Oex has a very beautiful voice, as well as a charming personality, and her growth in technic and musicianship is thoroughly gratifying and seems to point irresistibly to a career.

Program:

Come raggio di Sol—(Contralto)...(1671-1763) Caldara
With Verdure Clad—(Soprano) (Creation).....
.....(1732-1809) Haydn
Nel cor, piu non mi sento—(Soprano) (La Bella Molinara) .....(1741-1816) Piaesello
Ou va la jeune Indoue—(Soprano) (Lakme) (1836-1891) ..... Delibes
Je suis Titania—Polonaise from Mignon (cadenza interpolated of more than three octaves).....
..... Ambroise Thomas
Ombre legere—Shadow Song (Dinorah).....Meyerbeer
A Summer Night—(Contralto) ..... Goring Thomas
Thy Beaming Eyes—(Contralto) .....McDowell
Toming Thro' the Rye—(Soprano).....Old Scotch

LEGINSKA GETS THIRD RE-ENGAGEMENT WITH CINCINNATI SYMPHONY

Leginska is a breaker of precedents, as well as a wizard of the keyboard. For proof comes her third consecutive re-engagement by the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra as soloist for a pair of concerts on Feb. 28 and March 1. The famous little pianist played both last season and the one before with this organization and created such a furore that her re-engagement was inevitable.

Ernestine Schumann-Heink

Adored by the artistic world and beloved of all the people who patronize music, Mme. Schumann-Heink holds an enviable and an ever-growing regard of the public in this country.

And now that her work is all for the government she has become the idol of all the camps.

Everywhere she is heard with joy, and everywhere she creates the utmost of enthusiasm.

The recent birth of a grandchild in her Chicago home emphasizes once more her citizenship and her loyalty to the United States.

For she became a citizen of this country ten years before the European war began, she has invested her money here and spends practically all her time here.

Her youngest son is named George Washington, and in every way, including the fact that she is at present devoting her entire time to singing for the United States government, she has shown her unswerving devotion to the good of the cause.

That her regular concert work is delayed because of the war is a sorrow to everyone, for her voice is in superb condition and her art is today without limit in effectiveness.

But, when she again enters the concert field she will be greeted with such enthusiasm as will show her how much she is being missed just now by the regular concert-goers of the country.

ALLEN RAY CARPENTER

The Summer Normal Class for singers and teachers of singing conducted annually by Allen Ray Carpenter in his Kimball Hall music rooms will convene Monday, July 15, at 9 a. m. There are ten daily lessons of three hours each.

The course is designed to equip students with the fundamental principles of voice culture, both physical and mental, and to show the lines of development from them. The substance of the final analysis is embodied in the seven important departments: Musicianship, tone, breathing, registers, resonance, execution and expression.

GEORGE W. MUNRO CLASS CONCERT

"I know that you all have friends on the program," said George W. Munro in introducing his class in song program at the West End Woman's Club last Saturday night, "for otherwise you would not be here—no one goes to a song recital of pupils and sits through its pains unless attracted by a special reason. Nevertheless," he continued, "we hope that you will find something of good in all our work, for we shall all do our best to please you."

And that best was, Mr. Munro may be assured, very good indeed.

A vocal class concert to be pleasing must be not too long, it must be well staged, well dressed, well managed.

All these items were carefully attended to, the only fault being that the club auditorium is poorly ventilated and there should have been more fresh air.

Other items which contributed to make the concert a success, besides the nice appearance and manners, the pretty dressing and the abundant flowers, were the facts that there was great variety, both of voices and in presented repertoire; there was absolutely sincerity of purpose, musically and interpretatively; there was a very generally good enunciation of all texts used, and every number had been so well prepared that, though the program was given entirely from memory, there were no lapses, no blunders.

It is possible to give but brief mention when so many appear at one time, but each of the Saturday singers must have that much at least and each one deserves much more.

The Ladies' Club, which appeared twice, is a small ensemble, but very charming to behold and very fine to hear.

Enunciation is a strong point, much better in fact than some of the solo offering of the evening.

This body of singers, under direction of Mr. Munro, gave "Rest Thee on This Mossy Pillow" (Smart), "An Indian Lullaby" (Beach), "Ave Maria" (Abt), and "Evening Shadows" (Ricci), comprising much variety and a great deal of merit.

Elizabeth Bliss was very good in MacFayden's "Cradle Song," and in Salter's "Cry of Rachel" showed that she is growing toward big dramatic expression.

Edna Peterson was clear in "Jean" (Burleigh), and sparkling in "O For a Burst of Song" (Allitsen), and Ruth Nelson, in the sweetest of the "Messiah" solos, "Come Unto Him," was sympathetic, and in "Chanson Provencale" (Del Acqua), was decidedly facile.

Mabel Plein was very charming in "Wings of the Morning" (Wood), but not virtuosic enough in "The Victor" (Kaun), which is really a big song, and Gwen Griffiths showed exceptionally sweet quality as well as considerable quantity of voice in "Alone With Thee (Bancroft), and "Awake, 'Tis the Dawn," the last named being the much better song.

Julia Bock had the old-fashioned, but still charming "Berceuse" of Bevginani in which to show her nice quality, and Ware's elastic "Sunlight" to prove her budding skill.

Elizabeth Wehrheim very bravely elected to show the audience the beauties of the three songs of Odysseus (Charles Wakefield Cadman), and easily proved herself the possessor of both voice and good musicianship, and Angie Montgomery pleased the audience a great deal with her clarity and style in numbers by Goetz and Saint-Saens.

Minnie Lang, the possessor of a remarkably big dramatic soprano voice, which soars upward with great ease, and who is aldeady an established young artist, showed great style and much finish in an aria from "La Gioconda (Ponchielli), and was remarkably brilliant and effective in MacFayden's setting of "A Birthday."

Alphild Anderson, a very pretty personality and the possessor of a light but very lovely voice, sang the Polonaise from "Mignon" and a song by Herbert, which gave her much coloratura scope and success.

Harry Navison, the lone masculine of the list, showed himself the possessor of a very remarkable tenor voice, which he used with proper passion in the "Lament" from Pagliacci, and "Where Blossoms Grow" (Sans Souci) which, in spite of its slight texture is still a very effective short song.

SAMUEL B. GARTON GOES TO FRANCE

Samuel B. Garton, director of the music department of Hedding College at Abingdon, Ill., has enlisted with the Y. M. C. A. and will leave for overseas war work about August 1. Mr. Garton is well known in this city as a tenor soloist and choir director. Two years ago the choir of the Warren Avenue Church, under the direction of Mr. Garton, won the first prize of $50 in the Baton Club contest, and since Mr. Garton has had charge of the conservatory at Hedding College it has doubled its enrollment. Under the direction of Mr. Garton the Choral Union of Abingdon gave two performances for the benefit of the Red Cross, at which over $200 was realized.

Mr. Garton has brought to the city such artists as Else Harthan Arendt, Harriet Case, Ruby Evans, sopranos; Jessie Lynde Hopkins, contralto; Grant Kimbell, tenor; Frank Parker, Thomas Remington, baritones; Clarence Eidam, pianist; Charles Mitchell Mixer, violinist, and Mme. Kaethe Pieczonka, cellist.

RAVINIA A HIT WITH JACK TARS AND ARMY MEN

Ravinia Park with its varied attractions yesterday became the mecca of sailors with a bit of leave time hanging idly on their hands. It was the opening day of the season's recreation work for the fighters of the United States service at the north shore summer home of music and innocent gayety, undertaken by the Illinois War Recreation Board and the Ravinia Club.

Hundreds of men from the Great Lakes Naval Training Station and from Fort Sheridan took part in the opening festivities and demonstrated that the programs planned are the sort that will make a strong appeal throughout Ravinia's season.

Sailormen took the lead in numbers attending and in the features they contributed to the program, but when it came to baseball the Fort Sheridan visitors swiped the glory, winning, 6 to 5, after thirteen peppery innings.

The jackies, however, caught the spectators in the crowded stadium with their exhibition drill and showed their pep in the sham battle. The strife was rich in thrills, the men becoming so filled with the joy of combat that one or two stretcher bearers were bandaging the wounded long after the baseball game was started and eliciting very real murmurs of sympathy.

Lieut. George Payen of the French artillery, who is in charge of the School of Fire at Fort Sill, was a guest in the box of Mrs. Bruce MacLeish and spoke about his own experiences on the French front. Lieut. Payen's quaint accent and his use of American expressions made his talk one of the features of the afternoon and he was given one of the famous Great Lakes "sky rockets" when he lauded the "pep" of the American boys.

Mrs. Ford Rodman Carter was in charge of the clubrooms, which have been especially decorated and made comfortable for the boys by members of the Ravinia Club, with Mrs. W. A. Alexander as chairman of the committee on decorations. There is a kitchen in connection with these rooms and free supper is served here to men in uniform.

It was in the clubrooms that the stunt parties were given under Mrs. Carter's direction. There was also a lucky number dance and a rag cotillon between 5 and 8 o'clock.

There were continuous movies, as well as a public dance pavilion, where Smileage Tickets might be used.

Admission to the park is free to men in uniform through a fund of $10,000 raised by the Ravinia club by the sale of $5 books of coupons. Smileage tickets are accepted for admission to the movie theater and dance pavilion.—Chicago Tribune.

J. S. FEARIS

J. S. Fearis of 4547 North St. Louis avenue has closed his studio for the summer and will spend July and August at his summer home, Osowee Lodge, at Bass Lake, R. R. 3, Knox, Ind.

A number of pupils and friends will spend their vacations with Mr. Fearis, and he says he intends making farmers of them all, for he has a good-sized war garden growing.

A young voice pupil, Fred Kraemer, is spending a two weeks' vacation with Mr. Fearis.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

In the recital room at the American Conservatory in Kimball Hall on last Friday evening Crawford Keigwin presented two of his piano pupils in joint recital, which proved different in many ways from the general run of pupils' concerts.

The young ladies in question are extremely youthful, yet their work denotes adult minds and capability for effective exploitation.

Little Helen Pollenz (aged eleven) is spontaneous to the last degree. Nothing she does seems studied or worked out, so offhanded does she do her pieces, yet the result bespeaks undeniably that she has spent time and thought in preparation of the work at hand. Her program was of great variety and comprised many compositions of master writers. In the Bach Invention in F major she was exact both in tone and interpretation. Beethoven's Bagatelle in E flat was daintily given, and in the Mozart-Grieg Sonata in G major (arrangement for two pianos) her tone was solid.

The second group effected a change into the modern, MacDowell and Scott being well represented, the former by the rhythmic Rigaudon and the airy Shadow Dance, and the latter by the bold Etude. Careful preparation and sane execution marked this group.

Lavalee's "Butterfly" gave Helen the chance to indulge in some splendid light finger work, and for contrast the brilliant "Sparks" (Moszkowski). As a happy medium she gave the elusive "Bird as a Prophet" (Schumann). This bore out the fact that she is a good musician, possessing a crisp, true tone.

Bach and Beethoven were Dorothy Pilkington's choice to open with, and while a little nervous at first, she soon gained her poise and proceeded to give a good account of herself. The introspective Schumann Novelette in E major, Schubert-Liszt's Cantabile "Thou Art the Rest" and the broad, brilliant Rondo Capriccioso (Mendelssohn) gave her the opportunity to go the gamut of pianistic style. The last group this writer was unable to hear. It was made up of Chopin, Sauer and Liszt.

Mr. Keigwin was effective at the second piano for Miss Pollenz.

Blood—Blanche Blood presented pupils at Gary, Ind., on last Friday evening with success. Those appearing were Tina Florios, Patsy Shelly, Miriam Little and Gladys Snyder.

EMILY V. WHITE

At the Hamlin Park Assembly Hall on Wednesday evening, June 26, Emily V. White presented her pupils in recital.

This is a splendid place for a recital; it is a comparatively new building, the hall has a seating capacity of perhaps 400 or 500 people; the acoustics are good, with a splendid stage and stage setting; the piano was fairly good, but, as usual, in a place of this kind, was not in the best of tune.

Miss Edna Custin sang for her first number "Jewel Song" from "Faust" (Gounod), and later on the program, "Summer" (Chaminade), displaying a good voice and technic, but she might perhaps have given greater pleasure to the audience by using a slightly quicker tempo. She was heartily received, however, and was a pretty picture when she sang for encore, "Roses in June" (German), with her arms full of flowers.

Miss Katherine Jacobi was a bit nervous in her first number, "Heart's Delight" (Gilchrist), but recovered sufficiently to give a good account of herself in "A Little Pink Rose" (Bond), which she sang for encore, and "O Fair, O Sweet and Holy" (Cantor) later on the program, was delightfully given.

The aria from "Traviata" (Verdi), sung by Miss Gertrude Heim, displayed a lovely coloratura voice, and well managed, considering that the young singer was ill; for the second number she sang "Ah! Je voux vivre," the lovely aria from "Romeo and Juliet." These arias are taxing on a young singer, but Miss Heim gave them with remarkable skill which delighted the big audience. She was compelled to add encores after each number, singing for one of them, "Annie Laurie," and demonstrating that she could sing a sustained song, as well as the florid music.

Mrs. Oscar Gibson only sang once on the program, but she "delighted" the audience by her rendition of "Delight," by Luckstone, and she very graciously responded with an encore, "Dearest, You Have Made Me Happy."

Despite the babies at home, or, perhaps, because of them, Mrs. Aloys Neveling sang the Tacea la notte placida" aria from "Il Trovatore" in a charming manner, displaying not only a beautiful and well-schooled voice, but quantities of style and temperament. A pretty little sentiment was added to the occasion after her first song, when her two little boys each presented her with a bouquet, after which she sang the "Boat Song" by Jessie L. Gaynor. For second number, Mrs. Neveling sang the "Flower Song" from "Faust," which brought out the lovely dramatic quality of her voice.

Miss White gave excellent support in all of the accompaniments, playing many of them from memory.

The program opened with the singing of one verse of the "Star Spangled Banner," and closed with "America."

KURT WANIECK

Kurt Wanieck, pianist, was heard in recital at Kimball Hall on Wednesday morning, July 3, at 11 o'clock. He played compositions by Schumann, Brahms, MacDowell and Saint-Saens.

Kurt Wanieck's pupil, Philip Warner, will play the Tschaikowsky Concerto at Ravinia Park on Friday, July 5.

VIOLA COLE PRESENTS A YOUNG PUPIL IN PIANO RECITAL

On last Wednesday evening at Recital Hall in the Fine Arts building, Miss Viola Cole presented a very talented young girl—Isabel Schrage—in the following beautiful program:

From a Wandering Iceberg, Op. 55, No. 2
Starlight, Op. 55, No. 4
Song, Op. 55, No. 5
Tarantelle
Etude
—MacDowell

Bourree—Bach-Saint-Saens
(From the Second Violin Sonata)

Two Larks, Op. 2, No. 1—Leschetizky
Etude de Concert, Op. 9—Giuseppe Martucci
Concerto, Op. 25—Mendelssohn
(Miss Cole at second piano)

Miss Schrage has nice presence and style and in her technical equipment an interpretative facility is characteristic of the fine training always in evidence when Miss Cole presents her pupils.

That so young a player could so well interpret MacDowell is astonishing, but, as a matter of fact, Miss Schrage did it beautifully.

The Saint-Saens - Leschetizky - Martucci group was full of grace as also glowing with color, and the Concerto was played in a way to prove excellent musicianship as well as musical feeling far beyond the years of the young pianist. C. E. W.

Magnus—Mrs. Florence Magnus, the distinguished teacher of vocal art, will close her Fine Arts building studio for the summer, and spend her vacation, as usual, at her New Hampshire farm, where she will, during the summer, entertain a number of her pupils, including Cora Libberton, Edith Ayers McCullough, Mary Peck Thomson, and others.

Music in Chicago

METROPOLITAN CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

The annual commencement exercises of the Metropolitan Conservatory of Music took place on Tuesday evening, June 25, in Kimball Hall. One of the interesting features of the program was the student orchestra, which was directed in part by Dr. J. Lewis Browne. The first number following the "Star Spangled Banner" was rendered by Miss Alice B. Gray, organist, artist pupil of Dr. Browne, who played "Concert Fantasia in F Minor" (Arthur Bird) and "Capriccio" (Herbert J. Wrightson). Her work showed good comprehension of the possibilities of the instrument with which she was dealing, and her skill in utilizing these possibilities to the best advantage throughout the group.

Margaret Conrad, a charming young violinist, played the first movement of the Mendelssohn Concerto in E Minor with great ease and musical feeling. She was followed by Lila Butler at the piano in "Berceuse" (Chopin) and "At the Spring" (Joseffy). A vocal aria, "Thou Charming Bird," from "The Petrel of Brazil" (Felicien David), followed, sung by Laurine Olesen, who possessed a sweet, flexible voice of great range and lyric quality, together with a pleasing stage presence.

George Kayser played the Paganini "D Major Concerto" for violin in a manner which revealed him at once as a young musician of exceptional talent. His double stopping was unusually clear and true. Other numbers on the program were the aria, "O Mio Fernando," from "La Favorita," rendered by Blanche Baxter, the Saint-Saens "B Minor Concerto" for violin, played by Edna Gansel, and in conclusion the Liszt "Hungarian Fantasie, Aeolia Martin at the piano.

Following the program, teachers' certificates were awarded to the following: Piano—Phyllis Greene, Evelyn Krueger, Aeolia Martin, Dorothy More and Signe Person. Violin— Vi Verne Buckborough, George Kayser and Maybelle McClanahan. Academic certificates to Samuel Gurevitz, Max Jack Goldstein and Laura Frances Smith, while preparatory certificates were granted Bennie Burstein, Virginia Elizabeth Dimond, Charles Georgopoulos, George Georgopoulos, Arnold G. Houlton, Celia Kaplan, Elinore Kaplan, Josephine Maloy, and Ethel Marie Neff.

MRS. GALE IN OAK PARK

Oak Park had a rare treat musically last week.

Mrs. Permelia Gale, beloved and full of renown in her own country, sang twice in two days to two brilliant audiences.

The first occasion was a hospital benefit at the home of Mrs. J. Fletcher Skinner, Friday afternoon.

The program was given in the Italian Garden in a setting of flowers and fountains.

The harp accompaniment of Madame Amelia Conti, harpist of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, completed the magical charm of the scene.

Mrs. Gale, most happily costumed for the occasion, instantly captivated her brilliant audience with her rare gift of sympathy, ingenuousness and vivacity. Despite the technical disadvantages of singing in the open air, Mrs. Gale's vocal work was of an order to more firmly fix her amongst the country's great contraltos. The native warmth and richness of her voice have gained, rather than lost, through intense cultivation, especially during the last two years, when the growth in this already well finished voice has been little less than spectacular. Surely Mrs. Gale is now ready for bigger things.

On Saturday evening Mrs. Gale delighted her second audience at the River Forest Tennis Club. A record company came out upon the news that she was going to sing. Many said she had never sung better, which, considering her habit of improvement, is not impossible.

CENTRALIZING SCHOOL DRAMATIC RECITAL

At the Centralizing School on last Tuesday evening the presentation of the academic certificate was made to Jack Hager, who gave a dramatic evening of readings, assisted by Esther Lang, soprano, and Caroline Stevens, with Gertrude Ogden Fleming at the piano. Miss Lang, a pupil of Miss Fleming, gave two very telling groups. The first contained "Jane" (so the program read), but most likely it meant "June" (William Lester), "The Enchanted Glade" (Barker), "Because" (d'Hardelot). With each she gave an interesting tone picture, adding attractively a pleasing personality, good intonation and excellent phrasing. In Oley Speaks' "When the Boys Come Home" she was properly dramatic in interpretation and sympathetic in tone.

The readings of Mr. Hager were of great variety, embracing primitive days when great warriors ruled by their brawn rather than their wits, and the modern days of warfare, telling of the humane struggle side of the conflict experienced in an army base hospital, interspersed with three dialect readings of "I—Mary MacLane" calibre.

A snappy comedy bristling with laughable dialogue was "The Silent System." The cast (husband and wife) gave Caroline Stevens and Mr. Hager the opportunity of indulging in some intimate domestic situations. Jealousy, unreasonable jealousy, on the part of wifey, who imagines her spouse is faithless because he returns after 12 without an explanation as to where he has been spending the evening. Whenever he does try to explain she hushes him up with a gift of gab that only a woman possesses. But "all's well that ends well" and as he presents her with a bracelet, she decides that after all friend husband is a pretty safe bet to have around the house. Miss Stevens carried everything before her as the green-eyed wife. Crying fits, as well as hysterical tantrums, were naturally depicted with skill. Mr. Hager had little to do, save to utter "My Dear," etc., yet he was always in the picture. This young man has accomplished wonders with our language. A little over a year ago he came to the Centralizing School, unable to speak English, and today his English is well nigh flawless, save for an occasional lapse when under an excited strain. For this the dramatic department may well be proud. Young Hager has certainly done justice to its teaching. Perhaps it is an innovation, and then perhaps it is not, but Hager was the recipient of two very Oscar Wilde-ish nosegays from admiring friends. Miss Fleming was thoroughly adequate at the piano.

AUDITORIUM CONSERVATORY COMMENCEMENT

Auditorium Recital Hall was filled to the last seat and many turned away from the annual commencement of the Auditorium Musical-Dramatic Conservatory last Friday evening, June 28. The departments represented were piano, vocal, violin, and dramatic art. A high standard of excellence was shown throughout the whole program, and a poise and ease of public appearance was evident, with practically all the students presented. The audience gave evidence of its appreciation of this, as well as for the very good work done by the young artists.

Of the pianists, Miss Anna Weske deserves special notice for her playing of a Raff number with clean technic and with scholarly appreciation for the musical feeling, though the other pianists also showed the same characteristics.

Miss Tatiana Vojan's playing of Liszt and Leschetizky was splendid, and Miss Sylvia Haas opened the program with a spirited rendition of the Scharwenka Polish Dance. Miss Hazel Quirk played a concert waltz by St. A. Erst, the head of the piano department, which is not only a brilliant number of its kind but gives the player a good opportunity for showy execution.

Miss Jane Havens also deserves special mention as a dramatic reader, possessing remarkable force in delivery, combined with a capacity for depth of interpretation seldom attained by readers. Her reading of a serious story was thrilling. But the other readers were keen in their interpretation and expression as well. Miss Alice Zimmer was splendid in her negro dialect story, and the tale of "Sally Ann" was exceptionally well done by Miss Florence Haack. Rosalie Anderson also pleased the audience with her clever impersonation of the "Old Maid," showing both the humorous and pathetic sides of the character.

The vocal department was represented first by Miss Emily Kartak, who has a soprano voice of extraordinary beauty, well trained. She sang a brilliant concert waltz in true bravura style. William Schwartz then gave a rendition of the famous Lament Song from "I Pagliacci" with force and feeling, and though this song fits a singer better on the operatic stage than in concert, he was able to bring the spirit of the story vividly to the audience. Mr. Schwartz also sang "Longing for Spring," a new composition by Karl B. Stein, who accompanied at the piano. It made a distinct impression, and both singer and composer were recalled.

The good work of the violin department was shown by the playing of Massenet and Beethoven numbers by Jacob Steinert, a violinist of much talent and ability. Alfred Buelwitz played the Vieuxtemps Concerto with pure tone and very good control of his instrument.

A delightful operetta, "The Bargain Hunters," was given by nine vocal students, each sustaining his part with vivacious acting and good voice, making a twenty-minute ensemble having all the completeness and finish which are characteristic of the opera department of this institution, under the direction of Dr. and Mrs. Karl B. Stein.

Certificates and diplomas were awarded by Dr. Stein, President. D. C. T.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK AGAIN TO PLAY FOR BROOKLYN INSTITUTE

Arthur Shattuck has been re-engaged for the concert series given under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences for a date next season. Mr. Shattuck made his first appearance in Brooklyn two seasons ago in a joint program with Olive Fremstad. The following season he was engaged for a recital program in the institute series.

Orchard—The Orchard School of Music will remain open throughout the summer.

THOMAS McGRANAHAN NOW IN WAR SERVICE

Thomas McGranahan, tenor, has given up an all-summer concert engagement as well as his church position in Brooklyn and has enlisted in war service.

He is now with Base Hospital Unit No. 11 at Camp Mills, N. Y., and expects to be overseas shortly.

THOMAS McGRANAHAN

Mr. McGranahan was offered work as a chorus conductor in camps, but preferred the more active and positive work in which he is now enlisted.

During most of the month of June he was on tour through the South and scored a series of successes in his concert appearances.

CLARA EDMUNDS HEMINGWAY

A record of 28 appearances, ranging from solo to recital, has been made by the composer-contralto of Gary, Ind., during April, May and June:

June 2—Substituted at First Presbyterian Church—"The Earth Is the Lord's" (Lynes).

June 5—Composition recital at Tolleston, Ind.

June 7—Assisted Marguerite A. Klumpner in her pupils' recital at Library Hall as whistler—"Felice" (Lieurance), "The Smile of Spring" (Fletcher), with Mrs. Klumpner at the piano.

June 8—Recital at Froebel School, for community music. Used songs by Seneca Pierce Zerbe, Vibbard, Hoberg, "Orientale" and "The Linnet" (Marion Bauer), and "Garden of Summer (Dorothy Forster); also gave two whistling solos and four child readings. Miss Florence Hemingway, accompanist.

June 14, Flag Day—Glen Park. Star Spangled Banner; 2 whistling solos (original); 5 child readings; "The Little Town" (Pierce); "Dear Old Glory" (Hamblen). Miss Hemingway, accompanist.

June 23, a. m.—Substitute at First Presbyterian; p. m.—Substitute at First Christian Church.

June 30—Substitute at First Presbyterian.

June 20 Mrs. Hemingway sang at a meeting of the Adelphian Society, using Thayer's "My Laddie" and "Who Knows" (Ball) as an encore. She was accompanied by Miss Cathryn Steadman. She then accompanied Miss Steadman, who sang "The Enchanted Glade" (Barker) and "Some Time You'll Remember" (Maurice Head), and later gave an original whistling solo as a request number.

THE CHORISTERS COME HOME

Back from a six months' trip, covering the whole country from Portland, Me., to New York, to California, to the Northwest and twice across the continent, came the Paulist Choristers, and, on last Sunday afternoon, at the Auditorium, under the familiar baton of Father Finn, gave a victorious and rousingly good concert.

This program was the 238th of the series and was given in the presence of a capacity audience, which did not know when to curb its enthusiasm—in fact, the one and only criticism of the whole event was that it was much too long; this fact being entailed in the endless (and useless) list of encores allowed by Father Finn.

J. PARNELL EGAN

The choir was dressed in the blue of France and the whole tour has been a succession of benefits for various French needs—that of Sunday, which must have brought in a great deal of money, being for the benefit of the French Relief Fund.

The singing of patriotic songs, "Star Spangled Banner," "Marseillaise," etc., was attended with great enthusiasm, as also the appearance of Arthur Kraft and others in the khaki of the American army.

The work of Father Finn's boys remains wonderful. Wherever it may have been possible to gather together such an array of high soprano voices one can only surmise, but the fact remains that in this choir they seem endless in number and with a uniformity of pure, soaring tone which is wonderful.

Every chorus number is pitched very high on this account, and, if one wished to be hypercritical, it would be of the fact that excessively high tones are introduced so constantly as to lose all novelty after an hour or so, and one wishes, almost, for more solidity.

The shading of the whole ensemble is simply beyond words to tell of its perfection and the purity of tone is always marvelous.

A long list of Russian pieces were done beautifully — such introspectivity, such purity of musical form and style seeming impossible from a choir composed so largely of small boys.

A Bach number was not so good, in my opinion—it was too rapid and had a breathless effect not in keeping with the composer.

Some simple things were, on the other hand, absolutely flawless.

Father Finn may certainly be congratulated on the development of the most amazing vocal ensemble ever thought out in Chicago, and his removal to New York (to be accomplished at once) is a very great loss to our musical circles.

The concert of Sunday provided such an embarrasment of riches that it is difficult to detail even the bigger factors, and a report of much of the chorus work is left, perforce, to another time.

There was a wealth of soloists, both great and small, and every one was a distinct delight.

Master Donald Tobin in the solo part of "Deep River" was delightfully musical. Master Hallet Dolan in "Jubal's Lyre" (Handel) and "The Swallows" (Cowen) was a marvel for altissimo tones taken with absolute purity.

"Billy" Hallisey repeated his former triumphs in Father Finn's fluent arrangement of "Mocking Bird." "Billy" Probst was exceedingly charming in Brahms' "Lullaby," and "Dick" Finn showed silver purity of tone in MacDowell's "Wild Rose."

These were all arranged by Father Finn and the choral obligatos were managed superbly.

Also, en passant, one must mention an "Alleluia" of Father Finn, which, written unbelievably high, was yet managed by the boys beautifully, in great contrast to the solo obligato of Frank Dunford, which ran to equally unbelievable low depths.

Mr. Dunford sang also an aria from "Philemon and Baucis" (Gounod), which showed conclusively that his great voice is still intact and that the long tour has developed in him a certain fluency which he did not before possess.

For encore he gave "When the Boys Come Home" magnificently, and, on second demand, "The Four Leaf Clover."

J. Parnell Egan, more like John McCormack than ever in quality, but with a personal charm all his own, completely captured the house in "Where'er You Walk" (Handel) and his two encores, "May God

ARTHUR KRAFT

Be With Our Boys Tonight" and "Sweet Genevieve," the last named being one of the finest treats of the season.

Arthur Kraft, in khaki, sang a French song and one in English instead of the programmed number, and did them so delightfully that he also had to add an encore, using "When I Was a Little Lad," which he sings so admirably always and which at this time was a double delight.

Clay Hart, a third tenor, was also scheduled for a solo, but as it was probably 6 o'clock before the program rolled around to his name this writer could not remain to hear him.

The accompaniments were by Mary Anderson, and George Iott was programmed for an obligato to "The De'il's Awa'" (De Lamarter), which was not heard.

Father Finn was in excellent form and in a clever speech (greeted with volleys of enthusiasm) expressed his regret at leaving Chicago.

MRS. L. C. STUMPF AND MISS AIMEE STUMPF PRESENT THEIR PUPILS IN ANNUAL RECITAL

At the very cozy and comfortable First Swedish Church on Addison avenue, Mrs. L. C. Stumpf and Miss Aimee Stumpf presented their piano pupils in characteristic and thoroughly enjoyable piano program.

These teachers—mother and daughter—have lived for a long time in the neighborhood, and are known far and wide as conscientious and artistic workers.

It goes without saying that they have very large classes, and that the program of Wednesday was a long one.

However it was so varied in character, and was kept moving along with such celerity, that no one could weary of it, especially as there was a constant crescendo of achievement throughout the evening.

Small pieces, played by small hands, began the program, and by degrees the ages, as well as the difficulty and importance of the pieces, increased until at the end there was quite a feast of Liszt in his dizziest of pianistic manifestations, although even here the years of the players were still few, the oldest on the whole program being but sixteen.

It was certainly a cunning sight to see, at the beginning of the program, one tiny tot after another, ranging from 6 to 9 years of age, approach the piano and, in business-like style, as well as with good musical ideas and a very evident intention in each case to please the audience, play his or her "bit" with good technic and tone, and then quickly pass off the stage just as "next" came up the steps.

The pieces chosen for these children were so interesting and so much worth while as to prove the skill of the Stumpfs decidedly.

The pupils of this group were: Viola Weil, Irma Huchberger, Marion White, Francis Huff, Adrienne Springs, Edward Jackson, Edith Kaufman, Bartley Wilson, Hortense Nelson, Allan Dellheim and Rose Lewi.

Following these there came to attention a second group, somewhat older, a little bigger in technic growth and with more mentality, of course, and, like the first group, thoroughly trained and thoroughly musical.

These were Clarence Lang, Arloa Springs, Leila Whitney, Jane Girton, Teddy Peterson, Carol Roy, Mildred Schaefer, Bernice Wexberg, Ruth Carter, Eleanor Oeler, Edith Prosser, Margaret Miller and Margaret Nimtz.

It is impossible to tell how well each of these worked out, but it is permissible, perhaps, to detail the experience of Teddy Peterson.

This boy, a fine appearing and manly little fellow, when he first went on the stage had a sudden lapse of memory and "couldn't get his piece started."

But instead of retiring in defeat, he marched off the stage to the retiring room, secured his notes, came back, gave a glance or two at the printed page, then sailed in and played his number as well as anybody on the program.

The last group of the list consisted of pupils from 12 to 16, and constituted the advanced pupils of the two teachers.

Each of these did such fine work as to be worthy of special comment and much commendation.

Marjorie Craft played the "Scotch Poem" (MacDowell), with much musical feeling. Ruby Bullerman was exceptionally clear and full of repose in the C Sharp Minor Prelude of Rachmaninoff. Lucy Shaw disclosed a good tone in a Liszt "Love Dream." Pearl Doran did some clever shading and contrasting in the "Eleventh Rhapsodie" (Liszt), and Mary Horan showed individual style in the "A Flat Ballade" of Chopin.

The program was closed by Dorothy Heywood, who gave a careful and effective reading to the "Eroica" of Liszt.

Twice during the evening a pleasant diversion was afforded by Florence Odil, whose good voice and nice style were shown in "The Sweet of the Year" (Salter), "Ma Curly-Headed Baby," "Love is the Wind" (MacFayden), and "The Old Refrain" (Kreisler). C. E. W.

PAUL ALTHOUSE SINGS FOR BOYS AT CAMP DIX

Upon the conclusion of a very strenuous series of festival dates, Paul Althouse departed immediately for Atlantic City for a much-needed resting spell. "Am going to do nothing but bask in the sun and relax for the next week, and nothing short of an earthquake can move me," was his farewell speech to the writer.

It was therefore somewhat of a surprise to find out some three days later that Paul Althouse was singing for the soldiers at Camp Dix, on a program with Mischa Elman and Florence Macbeth. To our query, "How about that rest which nothing short of an earthquate was to interfere with?" the tenor patriotically replied, "There's no rest for me when I'm wanted to help cheer 'our boys.' I'd give up any kind of a vacation, no matter how much I needed it, when it's a question of 'doing my bit.' In fact, my only concert manager for the forthcoming summer is to be Uncle Sam, and wherever he books me I'm ready and willing to go."

EDNA WINIFRED COOKINGHAM SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Pupils' Recital

On last Monday evening the commodious Myrtle Masonic Temple was filled to the last place, and there was unbounded enthusiasm for the appended program given by pupils of the Edna Winifred Cookingham School of Music.

It is, of course, impossible to detail the work of very member, but, beyond question, every one deserves praise, and it is true also that this was the best of all the concerts ever given by the school, which is also, in itself, high praise, inasmuch as these concerts have been noted always for their fine show of preparation, as well as for the artistic impulse they invariably demonstrate.

Miss Cookingham teaches technic very carefully, and she specializes on the fact that her pupils thoroughly understand pedaling and apply its best principles.

The program of Monday was well chosen and beautifully built up and contrasted, and the total effect was pleasing indeed.

The first half of the program was devoted to small children, all of whom displayed ease and finish.

Dorothy Dasch, only 5 years of age, did herself and her name full credit, and her sister Elizabeth also proved herself a talented little girl.

James Kaun and Elsie Desmond were decidedly impressive, and Lily Zukowsky, Rose Nakitin, Olive Marsh and Edith Retchin were thoroughly convincing.

All the concertos were played with surety and dash, having the artistic support of Miss Cookingham, and the violin numbers, songs and readings were all so skillful as to add very much to the total of value and enjoyment. Program:

SWIFT & COMPANY CHORUSES; D. A. CLIPPINGER, CONDUCTOR; CHARLES W. CLARK, SOLOIST

The first concert of Swift & Company's Choruses was held in the Chicago Theater, formerly the American Music Hall, on Thursday evening, June 20, under the direction of D. A. Clippinger, with that "Master of the Song World" Charles W. Clark, soloist. It was made up of two distinct choruses, the Men's Chorus and the Women's Chorus. The men evidently have been under training longer than the women, for they gave the greater portion of the program, singing "Invictus" (Huhn), "Carmena Waltz Song" (Wilson), "He'll Come Back From Somewhere" (William Yule), "In Absence" (Buck), "Rolling Down to Rio" (German), "The Rosary" (Nevin), "Annie Laurie" (Scott-Buck), "Alexander" (Brewer), "Mammy's Li'l Pigeon" (Fearis), "Winter Song" (Bullard), and "Land of Mine" (MacDermid).

These were all sung with good body of tone, much sweep, and an unusual regard for shading in such a new chorus.

The Women's Chorus sang "Barcarolle" (Denza), "A Hong Kong Romance" (Hadley), "Chit-Chat" (Old English, arranged by Moffatt, and "Sandman Am a-Comin'," arranged from Dvorak's Humoresque, by Rix. This chorus did exceedingly good work, and so insistent was the applause that they were forced to repeat both "Chit-Chat" and "Sandman Am a-Comin'."

Mr. Clark is so well known and such an artist that it seems almost impossible to add anything to the comments and honors won by him on so many former occasions.

His first group consisted of "O Thou, Billowy Harvest Feld" and "Morning" (Rachmaninoff), "A Dissonance" (Borodine), and "Serenade" (Tschaikowsky.) He sang the aria "Vision Fugitive" (Massenet), for second, and for third, "My Love is Like the Red, Red Rose" (MacDermid), "Uncle Rome" (Homer), "A Messenger" (Sturkow-Ryder), "When I Walk With You" (Arthur Hartman), "Gospel of Pau" (Leach).

These were all done with such purity of tone, artistry and clarity of diction that it was a joy to listen to him.

Mr. Clippinger conducted at all times with authority, and seemed to get every thing from his choruses that they were capable of giving, which is saying a great deal.

The concert was given for the benefit of the Military Welfare Association, maintained by Swift & Company's employes to provide the "small necessities which are not furnished by the government" for their fellow-workmen who are in the service of their country.

ELEANORE CAPPS-HOSTLER.

Park—A musical tea was given Saturday evening, June 29, at the residence studio of Ralph Munroe Park. A very enjoyable musical program was heard. Among the guests were Roy David Brown, Minnie Morris and others.

PUPILS OF GEORGE G. LEWIS IN RECITAL

A very enjoyable and finished recital was given on Friday evening, June 28, at the Cosmopolitan School of Music by pupils of George G. Lewis, who were assisted by Marguerite Beckman, vocal pupil of Shirley M. K. Gandell.

Mr. Lewis's pupils were without exception in giving proof of the merits of their instruction, as well as showing in their playing the results of original talent and conscientious study. It is seldom that a teacher is able to put on a recital so consistently good, presented by students so equally well prepared.

As may be seen from the program, the soloists were all able to play compositions requiring great technical facility and brilliance of interpretation. The numbers were given as follows:

Nocturne, G major ..... Chopin
Danse Negre ..... C. Scott
Gertrude Graham

Prelude, G flat ..... Chopin
Polonaise, B minor ..... Liszt
Neita Mullenix

Novelette, B minor ..... Schumann
Rhapsodie, No. 11 ..... Liszt
Lucy Bellerive

Sonata, B minor ..... Chopin
Last three movements
Carnie Newcomb

Songs—
Chant Indoue ..... Rimsky-Korsakow
Le coeur de mamie ..... Dalcroze
Marguerite Beckman

Concert arr. Blue Danube Waltz ..... Strauss-Schutz-Evler
Dorothy Huey

Sarabande and Gavotte ..... Bach
Vogel als Prophet ..... Schumann
Scherzo ..... Kullak
Marian Ulrich (age 7)

Polonaise in E major ..... Liszt
Catherine Smith

Gertrude Graham gave a splendid reading of the Cyril Scott "Danse Negre," though that of the Nocturne was a trifle cold. Neita Mullenix was received enthusiastically, especially after the Liszt Polonaise, which was rendered with great ease and facility.

The Liszt Rhapsodie, No. 11, was played by Lucy Bellerive with great warmth of feeling. The difficult and ambitious B Minor Sonata (Chopin) was given a most acceptable interpretation by Carnie Newcomb. Dorothy Huey displayed a splendid technical equipment, together with clearness of tone in the Evler arrangement of the "Blue Danube," and Catherine Smith brought the program to a successful conclusion with the Liszt E Major Polonaise.

One of the chief attractions of the evening was the talented 7 year old child, Marian Ulrich, who has been heard before, always with great pleasure, at Mr. Lewis's recitals. She possesses unusual talent and technical ease for one so young and with wise tutelage will undoubtedly develop extraordinary gifts. Mr. Lewis has partially promised her a recital of her own next winter, to which we should all look forward with great interest and expectation.

Ormsby—Madame Phroso Ormsby, one of the south's greatest lyric sopranos, has been spending a short vacation in Chicago as the guest of Clarence Rogerson, musical director of the Shubert productions. During her sojourn here she received several flattering offers to return to the operatic stage. Madame created the title role in "Dolores" (Breton) at the Royal Opera, Milan. Last Sunday she entertained the jackies at Great Lakes.

DUNNING SYSTEM DEMONSTRATION

A demonstration of the Dunning System of Improved Music Study was given by the pupils of Miss Nell Sansom at Miss Loofbourrow's School in Oak Park, Tuesday, June 25. To an audience accustomed to the stereotyped piano recital the work of the children was an interesting surprise, for the smaller part of the program was devoted to piano work.

The teachers of this system lay stress, in the pupils' beginning work, upon ear training; the writing of music from dictation; its transposition into any or all keys, both at the blackboard and at the piano; the writing of the piano solos from memory; sight reading, and the training of the sense of rhythm by drawing pictures to music in three-quarter time, two-quarter time, six-eighth time, etc. In all this work the little pupils showed marked ability after only eight months' training.

One little girl with three months' teaching played without hesitation a Lullaby in G, in E sharp major, in E flat major and in C sharp minor, as the audience named the keys.

That the piano practice is not neglected is proved by the excellent tone and good fingering shown in the solos and two piano numbers.

Miss Sansom is deserving of much praise and of success in her work for the coming year.

E. L.

SAM THOMPSON SCHOOL SOLOIST

From among the 125 graduates of the grammar grades at the Graeme Stewart School, Sam Thompson was chosen to sing the solo on the occasion of the presentation by the class to the school of a fine United States flag.

His number was "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall," and his reception amounted to a genuine ovation.

ANNE WILLIAMS

On Tuesday evening, June 25, Anne Williams presented her class in piano, in recital at Community Hall, Oak Park.

Those appearing on the program were: Clara Lorge, Ethel Thomas, Jeannette Bentz, Philip Nieman, Stella and Catherine Williams, Fred Booty and Angela Bourke, some of them appearing both in solos and duets. They played selections from Behr, Lacome, Smallwood, Lemont, Rogers, Oesten, Foster, Hall, Goddard, Schutt, Holst, Nevin, Paldi, Leschetizky, MacDowell and Goerdeler.

Miss Williams has been teaching for some years in Austin and Oak Park. She is a thoroughly good musician and a conscientious teacher.

The program was not too long, and the selections were very well chosen, and for the most part played very well, indeed. There was an occasional slip in memory, but they recovered so quickly that it was scarcely noticeable.

After the program, Miss Williams presented medals for excellence in scholarship and attendance to Catherine Williams, Jeannette Bentz, Philip Nieman and Angela Bourke.

Miss Marie Herron, pupil of Rose Lutiger Gannon, assisted on the program with two groups of songs. Her first was the aria "Il est doux, il est bon," from Herodiade (Massenet), the second, two songs from "The Cycle of Life" (Ronald), "Down in the Forest," representing Spring, and "Love, I Have Won for You," Summer.

Miss Herron has a lovely voice, good stage presence and splendid interpretative abilities, and her singing was one of the attractive features on the program. She was ably assisted at the piano by Miss Williams. Miss Williams played a bit of her own composition, a patriotic song, words of which were written by a relative and which was much enjoyed.

MENDELSSOHN CONSERVATORY

Reviewed by CHARLES E. WATT

Distinctly unique is the plan of the Mendelssohn Conservatory in holding its Commencement Concerts at the big west side churches and equally impressive and agreeable.

Last year the New First Congregational was used and this year it was the big, old-fashioned but very beautiful Third Presbyterian on Ashland Avenue.

The audience completely filled the great auditorium, and the disposal of orchestra and soloists on the rostrum was distinctly effective.

A full orchestra was in evidence and gave some good accompaniments, although others might have been better than they were.

A. Alfred Holmes and Hjalmer Rabe officiated at the baton, and both accomplished wonders with the material at hand.

The program was not long, but was of distinctly fine solo character and presented also most agreeable variety.

Joel Mossberg, a teacher in the school, sang "Even Bravest Heart" (Faust), and made such a sensation that an encore was necessary, when he sang "When the Boys Come Home." It is a curious thing to say, but nevertheless strictly true, that the "Faust" aria proved a better war time selection than the Speaks song, which, after all, is not such a very good composition.

The orchestra, under Mr. Holmes' careful beat, played the "Jubel Overture" (Weber) with good style and some finish, and following this four piano pupils and two singers appeared in succession, each one scoring success and each being greeted with enthusiastic applause and rewarded with many flowers.

Maud Anderson played the Weber "Concertstueck" with very clear tone and good movement, showing special mastery of the more difficult cadenzas.

Mildred L. Sonne displayed good finger technic and nice tonal qualities in the Rosenhain Concerto, but had a tendency to run away from the orchestra at times.

Martha Johnson made some big effects in the Tschaikowsky B Flat Minor Opus and maintained her poise, even when the orchestra seemed to find the score beyond its powers, and Margaret Andersen, a young pianist with beautiful tone and fine musical qualities, gave a good account of herself in the scintillant E Flat Concerto by Liszt.

Hazel Reid, possessor of a nice mezzo voice and good musicianship, was much liked in the "Flower Song" from "Faust," and Rosa Larson showed that she is growing, both in style and virtuosity, in the "Waltz Song" from "Romeo and Juliet" (Guonod).

There was an elaborate address by Rev. M. E. Anderson, and honors were conferred as follows:

VIOLA COLE STUDIO

A recital by members of the interpretative class was given in the studio on Friday, June 21. All of the performers demonstrated the efficiency of their pianistic training, not only by their always adequate technical ability, but rather by the possession of a well-rounded musicianship really unusual in a student exhibition. Especially commendable was the treatment given to a group of MacDowell Sea Pieces by Miss Isabel Schrage; these were played with quite a poetic feeling for the charm and varied moods of the different numbers of the group. Miss Frieda Cohen manifested good technic and a serious attitude of mind toward the Beethoven G Major Sonata, whose minuet has enjoyed tremendous popularity among even lay music lovers. An unusual talent was exhibited by Miss Bess Clair Murray, a little pianist whose grasp of the keyboard is unusual. Her medium was the heavy fifty-page Fantasie of Schumann, and she brought to it an exquisite feeling for the ethereal charm of the composition, and a fine appreciation of its fantastic humor. To sustain a mastery of this stupendous work to the end is no small achievement. In fact, the only big soloist who has programmed it, to my knowledge, is Harold Bauer, who included it in one of his New York recitals a season or two ago. The little pianist is deserving of congratulations for her success.

A REMARKABLE LITTLE PIANIST

Among the children introduced to the public by Esther Harris, president of the Chicago College of Music, none has made a more prompt or emphatic success than Ruth Emily Parker, an 8-year-old pianist, whose picture is shown herewith.

At the commencement concert of the college last week, little Miss Parker played d'Albert's "Bonne Nuit" with specially arranged full orchestral accompaniment, and did it in a way to prove herself mistress of good ensemble powers, as well as showing solo gifts which enthused the big audience present.

This point is dwelt upon because of the fact that Music News inadvertently stated last week that Miss Parker did not play with orchestra.

TWO GREAT ARTISTS AT THE CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

One of the most astonishing musical developments ever in evidence in Chicago musical circles was that of last summer, when Oscar Saenger, coming here as a guest teacher at the Chicago Musical College for the summer term, proved so extremely popular that the days were not long enough to supply "periods" for the throngs of students who wished to have lessons with him.

OSCAR SAENGER

And when, during the last week, it was announced that Mr. Saenger had promised to come again this summer, there was an immediate rush for "time," which speedily filled up his days to the last available half hour.

Under these circumstances the college decided to negotiate with another great artist teacher, with the result that some months ago it was possible to make the announcement that Herbert Witherspoon, also of New York, would likewise be a guest teacher at the College this summer.

This announcement brought an immediate response from the public of such proportions that long before Mr. Witherspoon began his work the last possible period of his teaching time had been engaged.

Therefore, these summer days at the college are busy ones and filled to the limit with interest also, for the pupils of these two great teachers are of a quality to ensure wonderful results.

Teachers and young artists from all parts of the United States are in the classes both of Mr. Saenger and Mr. Witherspoon and enthusiasm in vocal art at the Chicago Musical College is at fever heat.

Mr. Witherspoon brought with him from New York two excellent accompanists, while Mr. Saenger is depending upon local help, and when it is stated further that he has the services both of Isaac Van Grove and Gordon Campbell, nothing further is left to say, for every one knows that these two are supreme artists in their particular line of work.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON

Mr. Saenger in New York has long been noted as a teacher of vast ability and wonderful influence. A very great proportion of the concert and operatic artists of America have studied with him.

Mr. Witherspoon, though not quite so long in the teaching field, brought to his work a remarkable prestige gained on the concert and operatic stage, and his studios also are constantly filled with the finest of vocal material.

Mr. Witherspoon tells us that, in the fall, he will move to splendid new quarters in New York and promises to give the details of this move to the readers of Music News a few weeks later.

GRACE BRUNE-MARCUSSON

Mme. Marcusson has abandoned her western concert trip, which was to have begun July 1st, on account of the large number of new pupils who have lately applied for tuition during the summer months, and also war work which will occupy her spare moments.

In September Mme. Marcusson goes to Lockport, N. Y., to sing at the American Music Festival. She will sing three times during the week, including a group of miscellaneous songs, a group of Horsman songs, with the composer at the piano, and a group of duets with John Rankl, bass-baritone.

MRS. CHANDLER'S PUPILS IN RECITAL

Mrs. Agnes B. Chandler used the Sherwood Recital Hall for the musical evening she provided for her friends on Tuesday. The occasion was in the nature of a summing up of what many of her students had accomplished during the longer or shorter periods which they had enjoyed under her developing and fostering tutelage. Her class members evidenced that they came from homes of culture and musical taste, and the audience of friends and relatives were not slow to appreciate what was being given to them in the way of good music, well prepared. Those altogether admirable qualities of thoroughness and earnestness were so noticeable as to indicate the basis of Mrs. Chandler's instruction. Nothing was presented which had not been carefully studied and coached and a search made to present it so honestly and sincerely that its mood and color would stand revealed. In a highly creditable way these results were in the main attained, and the right impression produced. As is inevitably the rule, the distractions and nervousness attendant on public appearance interfered at times. A discerning auditor discounts these incidents as of no importance when the larger merit predominates. The reviewer rather thought the one lad who had his troubles with a bit of Mendelssohn had the earmarks of uncommon talent, and would place him among the leaders of the junior section. Mrs. Chandler's class was rich in the boy section, and their playing had the boy touch of individuality in its beginning. Among the more mature work may be mentioned a good performance of the Chopin Rondo for two pianos, enlisting Lillian Rust and Edna Friedlander. Dolores Smith and Dorothy Lowenstein also promise well. Other pupils on the program of good selections were: Fred Lewis, Willis Aronson, Elizabeth Wright, Alfred Engelhard and Marvin Mildenberg.

Varying the program pleasurably were violin numbers from David Pollackoff, a medal pupil of Ramon Girvin, and a decidedly gifted lad. Alice Weber, on this occasion, a capital accompanist, was at the piano for him, as well as in a concerted support to Telma's "Adoration," done very well indeed by Eliza Burling, who has a light, well placed voice. Stella Wendt played for her in another group. Altogether, a very enjoyable event.

RENE S. LUND AT GRACE CHURCH

One is more than paid for a trip to Grace Episcopal Church. The service is held in a most unpretentious room back of the ruin which was the beautiful Grace Church, but the spirit of the service is fine. How could it be otherwise, with Mr. Harrison Wild directing the music forces? His choir is not large in numbers, but the boys sing with splendid fervor, with solid big tone and surety. Last Sunday night they sang "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" in B Flat by Marks. The offertory solo was "The Lord Is My Light" (Allitsen), by Mr. Rene S. Lund. Mr. Lund is singing right up to his best mark. His interpretation and pronunciation are of high quality, and his tone even broader and richer. He is a valuable member of the choir.

RAVINIA PARK OPENS ITS SUMMER SEASON

The picturesque north shore amusement resort, Ravinia Park, opened its doors last Saturday evening for a ten weeks' run of condensed operatic performances, served, as formerly, under the leafy trees, with only a roof between the stars and mosquitoes that infest the grounds.

This year it is more than ever the rendezvous for the Sammies and the Jackies stationed at the neighboring training camps. It is here that they may come, assured that the entertainment is unapproachable and the dancing delectable, with plenty of winsome misses for partners in the ballroom that flourishes before and during the intermission of the opera.

For the opening Mr. Eckstein chose Verdi's standby, "Aida," furbished with a cast that during winter opera one could not hear for less than five dollars per sitting.

Metropolitan stars twinkle as brightly under the canopy of heaven as in the Manhattan playhouse, and their voices can easily be heard in and outside of the pavilion without pressing their tones. The newcomers, Claudia Muzio, dramatic soprano; Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Leon Rothier, bass, were welcomed with the favorites of long standing, who are Morgan Kingston, Millo Picco, Louis D'Angelo, Orville Harrold, Francesco Daddi and Mabel Garrison.

Muzio proved one of the definite hits of the evening. Not only can she sing, but she is an actress of accurate dimensions. The applause accorded her was overwhelming. Sophie Braslau opened the evening with a stirring rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner," which stamped her a favorite before she appeared as the jealous, scheming "Amneris." In this role she appeared for the first time and disported herself far better than we are used to having this Princess given, even at the Chicago Opera performances. Her voice, too, was in better keeping with the Verdi idea of the role. Altogether the ancient war horse of grand opera took a new lease on life as it was given on last Saturday evening, and we suspect that it will see a great many "repeats" before the ten weeks are up.

Morgan Kingston came first among the men. This tenor comes back each year fresher as to tone and more equipped as to roles, and on this occasion carried "Rhadames" to a successful climax. His beautiful voice is in exact accordance with the role. Setting a good example with "Celeste Aida," which comes early in the opera, he kept up the standard till the final drop of the curtain. It was good to have him back.

Leon Rothier, besides playing "Ramfis," sang (just before the intermission), as only a Frenchman can, the pulsating "Marseillaise" that brought our loved ally even closer and put us on common ground, as we watched the youth of our country in uniform all around us, who will soon join the lads of blue of M. Rothier's country in the battle to make this world a safe place to live in.

The dependable voice of Louis D'Angelo was utilized in making the small role of the King one of vital importance, and Millo Picco was at home as "Amonasro."

The three things that galvanized the attention were: The sterling work of the artists, the elaborate scenic effects, and the understanding and sympathetic supervision of Gennaro Papi at the baton, who conducted in superb style, with full knowledge of the score.

Sunday Afternoon

In spite of the threatening weather conditions there was a representative audience to welcome the season's debut of the popular Richard Hageman, who conducted the first afternoon concert of the season. He led the Chicago Symphony Orchestra through a series of standard orchestral compositions.

Sunday Evening

Excerpts from the Donizetti score, "Lucia," marked the second evening's bill. The coloratura role served to bring back to Ravinia Mabel Garrison, a former favorite. Orville Harrold, who last season was a bit "sung out," returns improved vastly and was welcomed as "Sir Edgar."

Millo Picco and Leon Rothier scored in their respective parts as on the previous evening, while Louis Derman and Cordelisa Latham filled out the cast. Richard Hageman conducted the destinies of the opera.

Other Bills

On this afternoon (Friday) is announced the first artist-student concert. Philip Warner, who created a reasonable sensation on the American Conservatory Commencement program, is listed to play the Tschaikowsky "Concerto, No. 1, B Flat Minor," with Kurt Wanieck at the second piano. Other names are Eleanor Eastlake and Kathryn Keirnan, both vocalists. This evening Sophie Braslau is announced as soloist in connection with the regular Friday evening concert program.

For Saturday, "Rigoletto," with Garrison, Braslau, Harrold, Rothier, D'Angelo and Picco, is announced, while on Sunday evening we have "Tosca," exploiting Muzio, Kingston, Rothier and Daddi.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The regular Saturday morning concerts at the Chicago Musical College were resumed on last Saturday, with a fine program and a large audience.

The pianists were four in number, Irene Zinter, a pupil of C. Gordon Wedertz, making a fine impression in the well-known "D Flat Etude" of Liszt; Adelyne Morrison, who has as her teacher Karl Reckzeh, showed talent and skill in "Nenia" (Sgambati); Herbert S. Johnson, under the expert tutelage of Alexander Raab, made brilliant work of "Rigoletto" (Liszt), and Sydney Marks, a talented and advanced pupil of Rudolph Reuter, played with style pieces by Reger and Rachmaninoff.

Amy Genevieve Puterbach, Lilian Dyer and Naomi Hamilton upheld the credit of the vocal studios in fine style, and Ethel Elkins and Harold Ayers again proved that the college is fortunate in its violin teachers and pupils.

VIRNA HARMAN WALKER

Virna Harman Walker of the Walker Studio of Dancing gave "Tantoli," a wooden shoe dance, at the wooden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon A. Reese, 919 North Kedvale avenue, June 25.

Nine pupils of the Walker Studio of Dancing, members of the graduating class of the Spencer School, danced in the Tumult of the Elements at the commencement program at the Tilton Assembly Hall, June 28. In the ballet, representing water, were Lenore Schade, Evelyn Lavezzerio and Vera Manlove; wind, Katherine Skehan, Dorothy Schneider and Nellie Nielson; fire, Mary Fitzgerald, Helen Pearl and Emily Snyder.

A Very Successful War Song

"When the Flag Goes By"

Mrs. Newton D. Baker, wife of the Secretary of War, has been singing with much success George B. Nevin's popular song, at Camp Lee, and Mrs. Baker is an accomplished musician with a ringing soprano voice, and the soldiers are delighted with her singing. "When the Flag Goes By" is now issued for solo voice, quartette, mixed voices, orchestra and band. An arrangement for men's voices will shortly be issued by the publishers.

"WHEN THE FLAG GOES BY"

FIRST ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ILLINOIS FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS AND FESTIVAL ASSOCIATION

By ELEANORE CAPPS-HOSTLER

The first annual convention of the Illinois Federation of Music Clubs and Festival Association was held in Peoria from June 13 to June 16, inclusive.

Morning and afternoon sessions of the convention were held in the Woman's Club and it might almost have accommodated the audiences at all concerts.

Peoria is a delightful city of about 100,000 inhabitants, with perhaps the best park system of any city of its size in the United States; it is easily accessible from all parts of the state, being situated almost in the center of Illinois; so for many reasons a better place for a convention could not have been chosen. There is also a great community spirit in Peoria, and the president, Mrs. William A. Hinckle, being an indefatigable worker and full of optimism, has a faculty of imparting this same spirit to her co-workers. However, we failed to see why this same feeling could not have pervaded to the extent of filling the Coliseum for the symphony concert on Friday evening, and Medinah Temple for the war song concert on Saturday evening. But sometimes people expect those things to sell themselves and do not realize that they need a great deal of publicity and personal work in disposing of tickets.

A number of people, since my return, have expressed a feeling of regret at not being informed of the convention, as they would like to have attended.

The convention opened on Thursday evening with a banquet at the Jefferson Hotel. During the banquet a verse from each of the following songs was sung: "Star Spangled Banner," "America" and "Illinois," with J. Lawrence Erb directing and Henry Purmort Eames at the piano.

Willis Evans, representing the mayor and business men of Peoria, gave an address of welcome. He spoke of Emma Abbott as our first great American prima donna, and likened the president, Mrs. Hinckle, to her, not so much for her singing ability, but for her work of pioneering in this great movement and her ability to inspire others. He said that Peoria stands on its own foundation and is a city of merit; that the business men were a busy lot of people, but that they had given much time and thought to the finer things in life, and that in so doing had become a greater and more useful city. He said that Peoria stands with hands outstretched, and on behalf of these interests bade a very cordial welcome to the guests assembled at this convention. He then introduced the toastmaster of the evening, Mr. J. Lawrence Erb of Urbana.

Mr. Erb spoke of the wonderful things which Peoria is doing; that America is a good place to live in; that the cities are not altogether beautiful and artistic, but that the business man is beginning to see the esthetic side of life, and it makes it easier to live with. The business of music makes better people; it makes homes more homelike, making a better place to live. He spoke of the government taking up music—that they could not have financed the third Liberty Loan without the patriotic songs. He spoke of the bill before congress for a national conservatory, and among other things he said that it created new life—a new spirit—when Uncle Sam puts his shoulder to the wheel.

He then introduced Mrs. Hinckle, president of the hostess organization, president of the Illinois Federation of Music Clubs and second vice president of the National

ANNA GROFF-BRYANT

Federation of Music Clubs. Mrs. Hinckle said in part:

"Friends of music, it is not confined to local people, but to the world at large—not limited to sphere. The Red Cross has taught us to work together. There is no use in one town being musical unless all are musical—we must get a larger view. We should discuss what we think of music; organizations should not rest content until people are ready to spend as much as they do for other welfare purposes; that it is a serious propaganda; that we should democratize music, get together in the spirit of song." She spoke of the important part which music plays in our lives, of the help in trouble, how it calms our fears in time of danger — citing the instance of the band on the Titanic playing while the boat sank. She spoke of the festival zones—that there should be at least eight or ten festivals during the year throughout the state. She spoke of a recommendation from Governor Lowden, which was closely akin to a proclamation, regarding the festival zones and state orchestra. She read greetings from Mrs. A. J. Oschner of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs; also from Mrs. David Allen Campbell, New York City, chairman of the publicity committee. She then introduced the state officers, some notable musicians, who were guests, and others less notable.

She next introduced Miss Dickenson of Alton, who, in turn, introduced Mr. Loeb, who spoke on behalf of the mayor of Alton, two of the best musical organizations, the Alton Board of Trade and Retail Association. He read a letter from Mayor Savage, inviting the assembly to meet in Alton one year hence, adding "That to be neighbors we must be hospitable." An informal vote was then taken, which seemed to be unanimous in favor of meeting in Alton in 1919. Mr. Loeb made a plea to furnish as much music as possible to the boys at the front to relieve the awful strain, saying "they played 'Yankee Doodle' when scaling the awful heights." He also made a plea for more music at home, saying that "not all of the battles are fought in the trenches."

Mrs. Seiberling of Akron, Ohio, chairman of the Endowment Fund of the National Federation of Music Clubs, brought greetings from the national organization and the state of Ohio, and said they thought Ohio had done wonderful things in music until they found out what Illinois was doing and that she should take away something practical and inspiring, that we should make Ohio and all America sing. But she said people usually did not go at music from a strictly business foundation; that we should build in music the same as we build houses; that the bringing together in musical things breaks down the barriers; that we should inspire our artists to work, so when the great struggle is over we will be prepared for that great song of victory; that music makes soldiers courageous.

Princess Watahwaso, the Indian princess, sang "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance) and "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water" (Cadman), disclosing a lovely dramatic soprano and there were numerous demands for encores, for which she sang "The Crow Maiden's Prayer Song and Dance," revealing wonderful histrionic ability; also in her explanatory remarks, a beautifully spoken English. She was forced to respond to another encore and sang a "Chippewa Melody." The pronunciation in the songs was a little faulty in one or two spots, but this may have been due to nervousness, for it was afterwards learned that she was married to a Peoria man, who is now in the government service. She was afraid his friends might not like her and became extremely nervous, almost to the point of not appearing on the program; but if she had any misgivings before she sang, they must have disappeared, for seldom does any singer receive such hearty and enthusiastic applause as did she upon this occasion.

Henry Purmort Eames spoke on "Sidelights on Community Music." He said he had one message and that was, "Back up the source of American art." He spoke of the Indian folk songs, that there was a theme for every symphony, that "The Songs My Mother Taught Me" also give practical inspiration. He spoke of the theoretical side—ear training and counterpoint. He said that the average teacher has not the time to teach these subjects—that the place for theoretical music is in the high school, but the place for applied music is not in high school. He spoke of the disciplinary value of music—one thing in particular, "the sincere message of beauty." He said we should take care of the higher thoughts in community music; that, as far as possible, community choruses should use the better grade of music. He also spoke of the school credits, and said that we are now getting results in this line. He thinks the festival zone idea a good thing, that we should support and encourage the American composer, to give him a broader view, that we should stand by and be national before international, that we become international by the true American spirit.

CHARLES W. CLARK

Eugene Simpson spoke on "Russia's Attitude Toward Music." He said he was cosmopolitan in every sense of the word and a Slav enthusiast. He told many incidents in the lives of a number of Russian composers. He said when Rubinstein began to play there were no piano recitals. Rubinstein's vision was to do something for the nation. He told of the conservatory at Moscow; said there were no orchestras, as the distances in Russia were too great. He touched upon some of the modern composers and the political situation in Russia.

Mme. Marie Yahr sang a group of songs, "The Stars Are Brightly Shining" and "Turn Ye to Me," an old Scotch ballad.

Herbert Hyde gave an interesting talk on the "Civic Music Association of Chicago." He said there was no community spirit in Chicago, that it must be a local spirit—that each locality, the north, west and south sides, was different and they needed different tools to work with; but that they had accomplished much: the south side parks are to have eight concerts during the summer, Lincoln Park six and the west side parks four in July, which will probably be further extended. He spoke of the music at Great Lakes, saying that the Civic Music Association was directly responsible for that, also that the popular concerts given by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra had been fostered by the Civic Music Association. He said eight settlements have sings seven nights in the week, and that the association was now encouraging industrial sings, the Dunbar Manufacturing company being the first to inaugurate these songs.

This meeting closed with the singing of one verse of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Friday Morning

Friday morning's session was given to the reports from the different musical clubs throughout the state, several of which have not yet joined the state organization. Just here it may be apropos to say that when this organization had its incipiency at Chicago in November of 1916 it was stated that the dues should be 10 cents per capita, one-half of that to go to the National Federation for dues in that organization. At this meeting it was stated that the dues would be 10 cents per capita, to belong to the "Illinois Federation of Music Clubs and Festival Association." It is presumed that the membership in the National Federation is still 5 cents, as it has always been, but there has been a movement on in that body for some time to raise the dues to 10 cents. So, if this is done another year, it would make it very expensive for even a club of ordinary size to belong to both organizations. Ten cents per capita sounds small, but when a club of 500 members pays 10 cents per capita into two organizations it means one hundred dollars, and I fancy some clubs will think twice before they leap.

But the puzzling part about this whole thing is, how an organization can impose certain dues to include affiliation in two organizations, and then change, leaving out one and including another, without taking a vote of the delegates from the different clubs represented, or a change of by-laws, nor even the existence of a single by-law being in evidence, either in printed form or by discussion; at least none were in evidence when the writer was present, and she was absent only a few minutes from any session—not to exceed one-half hour—during the entire convention. And she repeatedly asked the President for any information in regard to the objects and ideals of the organization, but received nothing. All that is incorporated here was gathered by attendance at the different sessions of the convention.

If the writer is in error she will be very glad to be set right on these questions.

Reports were heard from the Helping Hand Club of Moline, by Mary Lindsay-Oliver; Birchwood Morning Musicale, Chicago; Comrata Choral Club and Dominant Ninth, of Alton; Chicago Woman's Musical Club, by Eleanore Capps-Hostler; the Litta Musical Club, Pekin, by Mrs. Cattron; the Bloomington Musical Club, by Miss May Christian; the Amateur Musical Club, Springfield, by Mrs. Albert Myers; the Musicians' Club, Galesburg, Mrs. George Kimber, and several others. All reported excellent work being done, with much interest in the various activities relating to war work.

Mrs. Ruth Sexton of Streator sang a group of songs, "It Was a Lover and His Lass" (De Koven), "Morning" (Speaks) and "My Laddie" (Allitsen), in which she displayed a light but well-poised coloratura voice.

Eugene Simpson spoke with much enthusiasm upon his favorite theme, a state orchestra, and pointed out where it might be of great assistance to the different festivals throughout the state.

Much valuable information may be gained by attending a conference of this sort and a great deal of good accomplished in the necessary interchange of thoughts and ideas.

Friday Afternoon

The first part of the afternoon session consisted of a concert by representatives from several different clubs in the state. Mrs. E. L. Kellogg of Kewanee opened the program with a group of songs, "Spirit Flower" (Campbell-Tipton), "The Magic of Your Eyes" (MacDermid) and "Robins Come" (Floy Little Bartlett), singing also an encore by this same composer. Mrs. Kellogg has a lovely voice of lyric quality and a very charming personality, and she presents the message to the audience with telling effect, whether it be of a serious or lighter character.

Mrs. Albert Myers of Springfield sang "Ah, Love, but a Day" (Beach), "The Spirit House" (Clarence Mayer), "Yesterday and Today" (Spross). Mrs. Myers has a rich dramatic voice, and her interpretation of the group, although slightly faulty in intonation, was sincere and musicianly. "The Spirit House," by Mr. Mayer, was a choice bit of composition. The words, by Sara Teasdale, are very worth while, and the musical setting is of such a high character that it made one long to hear it again and have a copy in one's library. Mrs. Myers had the able assistance of Mr. Mayer, composer, at the piano, which added greatly to the enjoyment of the song, as well as the rest of the group.

Mr. Mayer studied abroad for a number of years with August Spanuth and Scharwenka. He has composed a number of songs and is the enterprising President of the Springfield College of Music and Allied Arts.

Mrs. George Kimber, President of the Musicians' Club of Galesburg, sang a group of MacDowell songs, which was thoroughly enjoyed. She has a glorious soprano voice and a fine stage presence, with excellent poise, and in the interpretation of her group she brought a musical nature and charm of manner which was entirely convincing. She was very ably assisted at the piano by Miss Elyda Burkhalter, who has been for some time one of Peoria's best piano teachers. A number of years of study abroad, coupled with her varied experience as concert pianist, teacher and organist, have won for her a reputation which far outreaches the boundaries of Illinois.

After this concert Mrs. Chubbock introduced Mrs. Scott of the Grand Chapter of the D. A. R., who read a very thrilling and stirring paper on "Our Flag and Patriotism." This was quite appropriate on account of its being Flag Day.

Mrs. Edward MacDowell

After this Mrs. Chaffee, in introducing Mrs. Edward MacDowell, said she was seeing a dream come true—that she had always been a MacDowell enthusiast, and that it had been her greatest desire to have Mrs. MacDowell come to Peoria. She mentioned an incident many years ago, when Paderewski was asked what America should do for its music? His answer was: "Endow Edward MacDowell so that he need do nothing but compose music."

The writer has heard Mrs. MacDowell's lecture a number of times, and it never grows old, for she usually says something different, or the listener usually finds some new thing each time which seems to stand out more than the rest. Of course, just now the particular thing is that the 500 acres of ground, with the fifteen studios and Mrs. MacDowell's own living quarters, are to be given over to the government for the use of sick and wounded musicians who have been engaged in the war. Her lecture-recitals are always very informal, and, coupled with the profound devotion to her work, she has a quaint charm which makes it both interesting and fascinating.

To be eligible for entrance to the MacDowell Colony at Peterboro one must be engaged in big creative art; and she spoke of how much one needed isolation in the creative art, for one cannot give of his best unless he has intervals of rest. She also added that unless we take care of art through these war years we will miss a great opportunity.

Her musical program consisted of the usual MacDowell favorites, Prelude, Opus 10; "The Eagle," Opus 32; the Woodland Sketches, "To a Water Lily," "Will o' the Wisp"; Largo from "Sonata Tragica," "From a German Forest," and "Brer Rabbit," from Fireside Tales; "To the Sea," "Song," "A. D. 1620," from Sea Pieces; "From a Log Cabin" and "The Joy of Autumn," from New England Idyls; Improvisation" and the "Witches' Dance," Opus 17, besides a number of encores, closing with "The March Wind." These were played with a rare comprehension and sympathy born of her intimate knowledge of the purpose with which they were written and with a style and musicianship which is all her own. She said afterward that she wished the people would allow her to play something new, but that they always wanted the old favorites.

We were then taken for an automobile ride through the city parks and boulevards, ending at the Country Club, where we were served with light refreshments.

Friday Evening

Friday evening's concert took the form of a June festival, given by the Peoria Symphony Orchestra (Harold Plowe, conductor) and the Catholic Choral Club (H. W. Seitz, conductor), with Charles W. Clark, baritone, of Chicago; Jeannette Powers

CARRIE JACOBS BOND

Bridal Chorus from The Rose Maiden, 'Tis Thy Wedding Morning .....Cowen

The Peoria Symphony Orchestra was organized twenty years ago, with a membership of twenty-five musicians, and gradually increased to forty-five, and two years ago was further increased to sixty musicians. It has been a potent influence in the music of the city since its birth. Mr. Plowe has continued as its conductor during the entire time, and although modest and unassuming, he directs with much authority, keeping absolute control of his musicians. It is now an organization of which Peoria may well feel proud. The playing on this occasion was thoroughly inspiring.

The Catholic Choral Club was organized in February of 1918 with 200 members, all untrained voices, with H. W. Seitz, conductor. They have given one public concert previous to this. Mr. Seitz is also a teacher of music in the public schools. While his conducting flavors somewhat of the sensational, he nevertheless gets results. While he does not strike as many poses, yet he makes one think a little of Morgan Eastman of the Commonwealth Edison Orchestra. However, the chorus is a good thing, and it is doing remarkably good work, considering the length of time they have rehearsed together. It is one of the good things that has grown out of the campaign for more and better music in Peoria.

Mr. Clark's singing of "Ten Thousand Times Ten Thousand" (Bond), with orchestral accompaniment, was of his usual high standard, the song being particularly suited to his voice, and so insistent was the applause that he was forced to respond, which he did very graciously with a group of songs with piano accompaniment: "Vision Fugitive" (Massenet), "In Flanders Fields" (Susan Ware Hubbard), "A Song of Riches" (Leo), "In the Balmy Night" (Tschaikowsky). Mr. Clark pays particular attention to the business of giving the message to his audience, and this he does with telling effect. His vocalism is so pure and his enunciation so perfect that it is a wonderful example for any artist to follow.

Mrs. Block's playing was that of a really fine artist. She draws a big, virile tone and plays with much dash and skill.

Miss O'Leary sang the solo from the "Inflammatus" with lovely tone quality. While not a big voice, it is well schooled and was noticeably clear and sweet.

The concert was held in the Coliseum, but could easily have been housed in Medinah Temple or perhaps in a smaller building.

Saturday

The greater portion of Saturday morning's session was given over to the "Seashore Tests of Musical Ability," conducted by Esther A. Gaw, from the University of Iowa. This is indeed a great revelation. It was tried out on a dozen or so children, with about the same number of grown-ups. Perhaps some of the wise heads who have absolute pitch might find by this test that they were not always absolutely true, or some who are perfectly accurate in their sense of time and rhythm might find that they were not infallible.

The elements of musical talent, according to Seashore, are divided into the following:

1. Musical sensitivity; combining sense of pitch, time, rhythm, timbre, and consonance.

2. Musical action; natural capacity for skill in accurate and musically expressive production of tones (vocal or instrumental, or both), in control of pitch, time rhythm, intensity, and timbre.

3. Musical memory and imagination; auditory imagery, motor imagery, creative imagination, memory span and learning power.

4. Musical intellect; musical free association, musical power of reflection, and general intelligence.

5. Musical feeling, musical taste, likes and dislikes, emotional reaction to music, and emotional expression.

This was all intensely interesting and we were sorry when the time set apart for this demonstration was consumed.

Mr. McConathy, president of the Supervisors' League, followed with a few words of approval of these tests, with also a few words of warning, saying: "Don't read anything in Seashore tests which he disclaims; just use common sense." He said also that a person of musical capacity should have training in order to get the greatest enjoyment out of life. Among other things, he said: "America is a musical nation; things have come to a point where we can say what we think—where music can come into its own—where America can come into its fulfillment."

The afternoon session consisted of a concert by young artist winners of National Federation contests, in the Woman's Clubhouse.

Carol Robinson opened the program with a group consisting of the following: "Nocturne, Opus 15, No. 1"; "Fantasie Impromptu, Opus 66"; "Mazurka, Opus 67, No. 4," and "Scherzo, Opus 20," by Chopin. Her second group embraced the following: "Spring Night" (Schumann-Liszt); "Romance" (Brahms); "Birds of Passage," "Golden Rod" and "Coasting" (Cecil Burleigh), and "Cracovienne Fantastique" (Paderewski). Miss Robinson's playing of the Nocturne was sympathetic, while in the "Birds of Passage" one seemed to hear the chatter of the birds, and the "Scherzo," "Spring Night" and "Cracovienne Fantastique" were of that dazzling brilliancy which has made Miss Robinson so popular. She was forced to play an encore after each group.

Wallace Grieves played "Sarabande and Allegretto" (Corelli-Kreisler) and "Sonata" ("Devil's Trill"), by Tartini, for violin. The "Devil's Trill" is enough to try the technical ability of any big artist, and this was done with wonderful skill and agility, and almost perfect intonation. His last group, consisting of "Ave Maria" (Schubert-Wilhelmj), "Reverie" (Grieves), "Prophet Bird" (Schumann-Auer), "Country Dance" (Weber-Elman) and "Ballet Music," from "Rosemunde" (Schubert-Kreisler), were also extremely well played, despite the fact that it was a hard day on strings. Mr. Grieves is associate director of the Springfield College of Music and is deserving of wide recognition.

Edith Ayers McCullough added more laurels to those won on previous appearances. She chose for her group, "Plus Grande dans son obscurite," from "Queen of Sheba" (Gounod); "Meet Me by Moonlight Alone" (Old English); "Dear Lad o' Mine" (Branscombe), and "The Year's at the Spring" (Beach). In her aria she disclosed a glorious dramatic soprano full of warmth and color. The Old English air and "Dear Lad o' Mine" were well done, and the Beach song was beautifully rendered. She sang for encore "Last Hour" (Kramer) and "He Met Her on the Stair."

The rest of the afternoon was taken up in discussions, with J. Lawrence Erb in the chair. "Neighborhood Festivals with Chorus" was thoroughly discussed by Elias Bredin, and William F. Bentley spoke on "Professional Choral Clubs." He spoke of the professional chorus being a high form of community chorus. He said that particular pains should be given to good discipline and regularity of practice.

Mary Lindsay Oliver of Moline spoke on "Choral Organization."

"Anna Groff-Bryant of Galesburg read a very interesting paper on "Community Grand Opera." She called particular attention to the "small town" or community grand opera as one of the most constructive and educational features in the musical world today; that the establishing of community grand opera will do for America what small town grand opera has done for Europe—make America musical. The establishing of community grand opera in America will meet with a series of problems. She said it was most unfortunate for America's real musical development that we know opera only by the standards of New York and Chicago grand opera productions, with their artistic equipment similar to the early history of opera when it was closely interwoven with the pleasure-loving monarchs and the wealthy aristocracy. In Europe of late years opera has been given in hundreds of small towns for the entertainment of the people and at a price within reach of all. Commendable as this all has been, it has achieved a greater purpose—that of serving as a school of experience for the greatest artists of today.

America's greatest need today is the "small town opera" to help America become musical and to give its singers and musicians the opportunity to gain practical experience and routine indispensable to the development of the artist, musician and opera.

The world war is causing a readjustment of the musical situation. Community sings, victory choruses, a singing army and navy, are all signs of a new era in the musical life of America, and community grand opera will be one of the innovations of the times.

A community grand opera is not intended for a luxurious amusement, but as an educational factor, capable of instilling artistic ideas into plebeian minds and inculcating an appreciation of the beautiful in art.

Other discussions followed concerning plans for "Zone Festivals" by Mrs. Hinckle, Mr. McConathy and others, in which the keynote was, "I hear Illinois a-singing, I participate and help to sing. I see America go singing to her destiny—a wonderful privilege, that of making the world a greater democracy."

The concert in the evening was in the nature of a "war song concert" and was held in Medinah Temple, to a small but appreciative audience.

It is hard to judge of the relative merits of these compositions, never having heard some of them before. In one song there is perhaps more literary value in the text, while in another there is greater merit in the musical setting and one has a very catchy and singable air and will no doubt be whistled and sung regardless of its real poetic or musical significance. "The Birth of a New Flag" was an innovation, both in the words and the spirit which it was rendered, being sung as it was by the Methodist Church Choir and the Catholic Choral Club. It is a forerunner of what may be a new religion, when the Methodist choir and the Catholic choir can sing together. Let us hope that some day they may also worship together.

Perhaps the greater portion of the honors for solo work were due Herbert Miller, baritone of Chicago. He was in splendid voice and his interpretation of the several solos allotted to him was all that could be desired. Mr. Kellogg, tenor of Kewanee, brought forth a storm of applause by his singing of his wife's song, "Flag of Mine." Stella Weston Berger of Springfield and Mme. Marie Yahr of Chicago also came in for their share of honors. Claudie Page Smith draws a beautiful, smooth tone and her playing of the "Spanish Dance" was indeed quite remarkable, but she is a big girl to wear her hair bobbed.

The new officers of the organization are: J. Lawrence Erb, Urbana, president; Mrs. Emil Ritter, Chicago, vice president; Julia Cattron, Pekin, second vice president; Frances Kees, Harvard, recording secretary; Aurelia Ott, Pontiac, treasurer; Leila Miller, Cairo, auditor. The names of all the directors were not ascertained, so am unable to give them.

A Note of Warning

One thing to be regretted about this movement is that some unscrupulous people use it as a source of social aspiration and the sooner the Illinois State Federation of Music Clubs and the National Federation of Music Clubs divorce themselves of these so-called social climbers the better it will be for the organizations and a greater amount of good will be accomplished for and in the cause of music and humanity. It is believed that the new president, Mr. Erb, is big enough to do this and that he will not be dominated by these influences.

Sunday

While Sunday morning's services were not exactly included in the convention, the service at the Universalist Church was so significant as to make it worthy of mention. The organ solos, including "Grand Chorus in March Form" (Guilmant), "Meditation in D flat" (Kinder), "Offertory; Andante Cantabile," from "Fourth Symphony" (Widor), and "Grand Chorus in D" (Renaud), were played by Mr. Erb of Urbana. His playing is of a very high order, being scholarly yet withal spiritual. Rudolph Kafka, whose playing with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra attracted such favorable comment, played "La Folia" (Corelli) and the "Traumerei." These were done with his usual frank musicianly style and with a true regard for the spiritual which was altogether inspiring. Mr. Kafka is to give at least a part of his time to teaching at the Cosmopolitan School of Music of Chicago in 1918-19. We congratulate the school upon the acquisition of such a fine artist and teacher, and one who is so truly a gentleman.

Stella Weston Berger, regular soloist at the Christian Church, Springfield, sang "But the Lord Is Mindful," from St. Paul's" (Mendelssohn). She was in superb voice and sang with a style and finish which merited much commendation.

The hymns and accompaniments for Mr. Kafka were played by Miss Elyda Burkhalter, the regular organist of the church, and were both musicianly and sympathetic.

The sermon, on the subject, "Music and the Soul," was delivered by Dr. Carpenter, the regular pastor, and was as unique as it was beautiful. "Music and the soul," both words, he said, "are indefinable." That this something called "soul" is beyond reach of the mathematician or scientist. "I am a soul," and that it is our business to develop our souls. Food for soul is a source of inspiration and life.

Music is the direct source in which we come in touch with the great fundamentals of wisdom. He likened music to the pine tree or cone which carries history of 1,000 years. He said, "If you cut out art and music, the soul would wither and die; music is the oldest and most powerful of all the arts."

Life is a great musical instrument on which we play each day and if we do not make music out of life it is because we are not in harmony. Harmony is the basic element by which we are able to exist and when harmony is the law of the universe so it will be of the soul. The best music lifts our souls to the gates of heaven, so the low, down to hell. He stated that music is no longer a luxury but a necessity.

Sunday Afternoon at Bradley Park

The big meeting of the Convention was at Bradley Park, when 5,000 people gathered together in one big "community sing." The Municipal Band, with Mr. Le Barre, conductor, played a number of selections, also the accompaniments for most of the solos and choruses. The Moline Chorus was heard again in two selections, besides leading the singing of "We're Here, La Fayette, We're Here."

Lloyd Livings, an "old-timer" on the vaudeville stage, but now a resident of Peoria, gave a rousing interpretation of "Our Boys," composed by Clara Rees, also of Peoria.

Willis Evans, acting for the Mayor, introduced Hon. Hugh McGill, who spoke on the "Illinois Centennial." Among other things, he spoke of the spiritual element contained in the one hundredth anniversary of Illinois; that our hearts should be lifted up; that real patriotism must be founded upon knowledge, making it very fitting that we celebrate at this time, and that "true government of the people and by the people must not perish from the earth." He spoke of the many generals from Illinois in the Civil War and said, "May the spirit live again as in the past."

"Illinois," with many patriotic and old, familiar airs, was sung with a spirit, making the forests ring. These were conducted by Franklin Stead of Peoria and J. Lawrence Erb of Urbana.

Mrs. Seiberling sang "When the Boys Come Home," with the audience joining in the chorus, while Mmes. Weston Berger and Marie Yahr gave again of their talents.

And so closed the first annual convention of the Illinois Federation of Music Clubs and Festival Association, in a blaze of glory; and here's wishing that the new regime will be equally as successful as the past and that their efforts may result in great good for the cause of humanity in general, and music in particular, throughout this grand and glorious State of Illinois.

MUSIC AT THE HYDE PARK PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The Hyde Park Presbyterian Church has a very pleasant auditorium and a fairly good organ, although the latter is not nearly what it should be for the exploitation of so good an organist as is possessed by the church—Hugh B. Porter.

Mr. Porter, who graduated from the American Conservatory this spring, played at the Commencement Concert at the Auditorium, and was one of the sensations of that event.

In fact, it was the generally expressed opinion of all who heard him that his achievements with the very-much-run-down organ at the Auditorium were the best that have been in evidence for many moons, and that Mr. Porter proved himself adept in manipulation of his instrument, as well as thoroughly skillful in every musical sense.

He has a remarkably fine musical feeling, a technic which can be named as nothing less than virtuosic, and musicianship which covers all phases of directing and composing, as well as the mere fact of fine solo work at the organ.

On last Sunday evening this writer witnessed an exhibition of his various powers at the evening service at the Hyde Park church, and has no hesitation in pronouncing Mr. Porter far beyond the usual average of church organist.

He is one, indeed, of whom it may very confidently be predicted that he will work his way to the very top of the concert field, as well as being certain to shine in church music circles.

His musicianship was especially shown at this time in his own fine composition, "Chromatic Fantasia in D Flat," which is truly a master work as to structure and style, and into which he has injected technical requirements which put it quite outside the possibilities of any one except an expert.

He played it wonderfully well, and in the elaborate pedal cadenza showed himself master of that department of organ playing, exhibiting also such knowledge and skill in registrations as to prove himself exceptional, indeed.

For offertory he played a dainty "Capriccio" by Lemaire, and in this disclosed the fact that he has facility of touch and style, while in the "March aux Flambeaux" (Guilmant), at the close, he showed dignity and breadth, as well as positive rhythm.

His achievements did not stop here, for he is director of the music at the Hyde Park church, and to him must be given the credit for a well-chosen vocal program, which also he accompanied with true feeling for texts and music, and with a constant play of organ color.

The quartette, on Sunday night, was composed of Edna M. Ross, a soprano, who, in recitals at the studio of Leila

HUGH B. PORTER

Breed, her teacher, as also in events all over the city, particularly in church circles, long ago proved her musicianship and her general worth.

She has a fine voice and definite style.

Frances Papert, contralto, has a beautiful voice and distinct style, which, while they had not much chance for play on Sunday night, were yet so much in evidence as to keep her part in fine balance with the occasion.

Mr. W. C. Eichenberger, tenor, was similarly deprived by the program list of any definite display opportunity, but he also fitted into the scheme musical with exactitudes and artistry.

Dr. Joseph B. Sonnenschein, bass, joined with Mrs. Ross in a very beautiful reading of Smart's standard, "The Lord is My Shepherd," both singers being fully effective.

Two quartet numbers were used, absolutely dissimilar in content and development, and both so well presented as to prove the quartet versatile, as well as distinctly musical.

Dr. Tertius Noble's unique "Fierce Was the Wild Billow," a turgid work very suggestive of modern Russian writing, was given dramatic breadth, and Scott's suave (not to say sugary) "I Cannot Find Thee" afforded special opportunities for each voice to show nice quality and smooth production.

MISS HELEN M. BROWNE PRESENTS PUPIL

A most enjoyable recital was given in a delightful drawing room on Saturday evening, June 29, by a charming little pupil of Miss Helen M. Browne of Ravenswood. The soloist of the evening was Madeleine de Smet, the 14 year old daughter of Madame de Smet, who heads L'Academie La Fayette, where the recital was given.

It was a great treat to this writer to be entertained in as restful and homelike a fashion by so gracious a hostess and in so cultured a home.

The audience was so warm and friendly that the young soloist could not help appearing perfectly at ease. She gave the following program:

Sonata, Op. 26 ..... Beethoven
Andante con variazioni
Spanish Dance, Op. 12, No. 4 ..... Moszkowski
Prelude, Op. 28, No. 20 ..... Chopin
Mazurka, No. 2 ..... Borowski
Cradle Song ..... Kjerulf
Octave Etude, Op. 44, No. 4 ..... Leschetizky

The most ambitious number was the Beethoven Sonata, Opus 26, which she gave very well in opening. Her playing throughout was clear and precise, with good interpretations. Perhaps a little nervousness made her use of the pedal a trifle too heavy in one or two places, though for the most part she gave ample proof of the excellent character of her instruction and of her own thorough enjoyment of what she was doing.

Her rendition of the Borowski Mazurka, No. 2, and of the Leschetizky Octave Etude at the close, was especially fine.

Miss Browne and her pupil are both to be complimented upon their excellent team work.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

WINNIPEG, CANADA

On May 27, a farewell recital was given by the pupils of Miss Charlotte Ellen Powers at Manitoba Hall. More than thirty pupils assisted on the program, making a splendid variety of vocal art and numbers. All showed the same ease in singing as a result of the Lamperti method, which this teacher uses. All showed the same ability to freely use the vocal organ as a medium of expression. The recital had unusual interest to Winnipeg people, as it was the final summing up of Miss Powers' vocal instruction in this city. Miss Powers will shortly go to San Francisco, where a larger field for her splendid work awaits her.

Stella Wendt

All the young singers proved themselves worthy pupils of a teacher who not only comes from a fine musical family (Emma Abbott was a sister of Lizzie Abbott Clark), but has also fine knowledge of method of singing and repertoire of song.

There was a large audience and much enthusiasm for the well-selected and charmingly presented program.

The accompanists were Genevieve Laubach Davidson and Clara Merriman.

PUPILS OF MISS WILSEY HEARD

Ruth Ann Wilsey of the Centralizing School of Music presented students in a successful recital on Wednesday evening, June 26, in the recital hall of the school.

The following students played: Richard Conover in a group of patriotic songs, Mildred Merrill, Miss Florence Jesperson, Marjorie Hite, Margaret Buckie, who recited and played to the great delight of the audience four Mother Goose rhymes set by Rogers, and Mildred Roger, Mary Sidney Muriel Chon, Mildred Boger, Mary Sidney Branch, Vera Mockel and Leo Sagel, who completed the program with a most vigorous and interesting rendition of the "Wooden Shoe Dance" (Barbour).

Miss Wilsey demonstrated in the work of her pupils all the qualities of a good teacher, and she is to be congratulated upon having brought her year's work to so successful a conclusion.

The class was ably assisted by dramatic and dancing students of the school in a charming children's play, "In the Forest of Every Day," by Lindsey Barbee.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

———♯♯♯———

Parry—Julia B. Parry gave a successful concert with her piano pupils at her Oak Park studio last Saturday afternoon.

SARAH E. PAINE PUPILS

The Western Conservatory parlors were not commodious enough to hold all those who were attracted to the recital prepared by Miss Sarah E. Paine on Saturday evening. The overflow had to be content with standing room in the hall.

Miss Paine has a standard all her own by which, having once set it, she is apt to be measured. It is a thoroughly fine standard, based on quiet sincerity, integrity and musical enthusiasm. When Miss Paine played, or when her students gave of their talent, there was a hearty pleasure in the self-imposed task. And pleasure is a large factor in musical expression. Enjoying what they did themselves, the pupils made that enjoyment get into what they did, and, naturally, it infected those who heard it. The music was all of excellent grade; there was good tonal color and expression that was convincing.

In its completeness the occasion might be summed up in the presentation of two movements of the lovely "G Minor Concerto" of Mendelssohn. The andante is still an exquisite period of musical delight and calls for tenderly intelligent treatment, while the allegro demands a technical speed and skill that are not trifles.

Serene Cohen and Miss Paine met these requirements admirably indeed. The pupils listed and who all did very well were Hortense Foss, Mildred Lazarus, Edith Goldsmith, Charles Fischer, Ruth Farnham, Leonore Ross, Ruth Ruhman, Nat Weinfeld, Marjorie Shewell, Evelyn Katz, Helen Andrews and Marian Cohn.

Very agreeable songs were contributed by Ruth Hillman with nice voice and style.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

Clark—Charles W. Clark, baritone, will give a recital at Bush Conservatory, Tuesday afternoon, July 9, at 3 o'clock. The program will be given in the new Conservatory Building, at the corner of North Dearborn avenue and Chestnut street.

LOUIS VICTOR SAAR

Mr. Louis Victor Saar, one of the foremost of this country's composers and head of the Theory department of the Chicago Musical Colloge, attended the sessions of the Ohio Music Teachers' convention in Cincinnati, June 24 to 28.

Mr. Saar was elected president of the organization last summer in Cleveland, but had to resign his position when he entered upon his Chicago activities last fall. He delivered two addresses and played a group of his recent piano numbers during the composers' symposium. A number of his latest songs were on the convention programs.

A great number of new works, which seem to flow easily from his prolific pen, in spite of his heavy pedagogical duties, are being issued this summer. A new and important piano study work, on which the composer has been busy all during the year, is shortly to be issued by the Willis Music Co., Cincinnati. In "The Word from Willis" the following announcement of the new work is made:

"The writer of 'The Proficient Pianist,' the new and important piano study work which The Willis Music Co. has in preparation, is a pianist, composer and pedagogue whose work is known throughout the United States. Mr. Saar's genius is founded on profound knowledge and skill in music in all its details and ramifications; and intellectual and broadly comprehensive education in literature and art; a most charming personality, and a sympathetic understanding of the limitation and need of the average music student. Not a few of the more eminent educators in the piano-teaching world are looking forward to 'The Proficient Pianist' with pleasant anticipation; and we are certain, by reason of our examination of the proof-sheets prior to publication, that they will not be disappointed, no matter how much they expect."

MINNEAPOLIS

Minnesota Music Teachers' Association Meets June 25, 26, 27, at Roof Gardens of St. Paul Hotel, St. Paul

The program was very attractive. The chief solo artist was Frances Ingram, contralto, Chicago Grand Opera, in recital on Thursday evening. Mrs. Katherine Hoffman added her superlative accompaniments.

The sessions began Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock with the President's address and a welcome from Mayor Hodgson.

Brahms' Requiem was given at the House of Hope by the augmented choir of Westminster Church, Minneapolis; Harry Phillips, bass and director; Miss Clara Williams, soprano; Mrs. Alma Johnson Porteous, contralto, and Walter Mallory, tenor; Hamlin Hunt, organist, and a chorus of forty voices. This was followed by a reception in the church parlors.

Wednesday evening was chosen for the annual supper and frolic, at which time was presented an operetta by Stanley Avery, a comedy by the John Seaman Garns players and solo dances by Lorna Dunn.

It had been the endeavor to have the papers upon topics which would be of universal interest. Various subjects were presented by Mrs. Harry Palmer, Misses Grace Boutelle, Margaret Dougherty, Ruby Westenhaver, and Donald Ferguson, Carl Jensen, W. M. McClintock, G. A. Thornton, Gustave Schoettle and R. Buchanan Morton.

Illustrative class lessons were given by Wilma Anderson Gilman in public school work and by Emily Minett in the Upton harmony method.

Vocalists were Mrs. Malcolm McMillan, Mildred Langtry and Beatrice Troendle, and pianists, Misses Gertrude Cleophas, Margrathe Petterson and Helen Sklenar.

An organ recital was given on the superb House of Hope organ Thursday afternoon by H. Chandler Goldthwaite.

Results of Class Voice Teaching Shown

The following program was more than ordinarily interesting, as it gave a very commendable demonstration of what can be done in class work on voice placement, and also because of the interesting numbers contributed by blind young people. In both unique branches has Miss Hall shown herself most skillful:

All Through the Night ..... Old Welsh Silent as Night ..... Bohm Voice Placement Class
(In unison)
A Dream ..... Bartlett
Elmer Soderstrom
My Laddie ..... Thayer
The Awakening ..... Spross
Lillian Frendin (blind)
Duet—L'Addio ..... Nicolai
Lillian Frendin and William Jordan (both blind)
Liberty Anthem .....
..... Katherine Gordon French (St. Paul)
What's in the Air Today? ..... Eden Vocal Class
(In unison)
Violin solo—Mazurka ..... Drdla
Beata Hanson
Duo—Shadowtown ..... Lynes
(Won in competition by vocal class)
Myrtle Brandlee and Sophie Nedrebo
At Dawning ..... Cadman
Danny Boy ..... Old Irish
An Open Secret ..... Woodman
Susan Hymes
The Kerry Dance ..... Molloy
On the Road to Mandalay ..... Speaks
William Jordan
Song of the Flag (The Knickerbockers) ..... De Koven

Musicians Contribute Talent to Girls' Liberty League

The program committee for the Liberty League is meeting with splendid co-operation on the part of local musicians in supplying entertainment at Fair Oaks, the home of the organization and clubhouse for 15,000 girls who have enrolled within the last month. Every evening a leader for informal singing takes charge from 9 to 10; every Saturday volunteer musicians play for dancing, and every Sunday professional musicians give of their best for the cause.

The Sunday afternoon program for June 23 was given by George Klass, violinist of the symphony orchestra; Miss Mildred Langtry, contralto, and Miss Lillian Crist, pianist. On June 30 the program will be given by Carlo Fischer, cellist; Miss Lena Gjertsen, soprano, and Miss Louise Chapman, pianist. On July 7 Mrs. Fryberger will conduct a community sing on the beautiful Fair Oaks grounds.

Sonata, E minor ..... Grieg
Sonata, E minor (first movement) ..... Grieg
Nocturne ..... Borodin
Romance ..... Sibelius
Spinning Song ..... Raff
Souvenir de Moscou ..... Wieniawski
Ballade, A flat ..... Chopin
Ave Maria ..... Schubert-Wilhelmj
Perpetual Motion ..... Ries
Painted Desert ..... Ensign Hale
Witches' Dance ..... MacDowell

Minneapolis School Graduates Have Contest for Honors

A most interesting contest was given by members of the junior and senior departments of voice and piano recently before three judges selected from among local musicians not connected with the school.

The junior graduates in piano, three in number, each played the Mozart Sonata in F and a Leschetizky Nocturne. Gertrude Dunham won first place.

The senior piano graduates each played the first movement of the Beethoven Sonata, Opus 10, No. 1, and a Chopin Nocturne, first place being attained by Elsie Gannerud.

Junior voice pupils sang two songs selected by the school and one of her own selection. First place was shared by Mabel Larson and Janie Gunn, soprano and contralto, and honorary mention was given to Kathleen McGrath.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Mrs. F. D. Bevitt gave an organ recital last Thursday afternoon, June 20, at the First M. E. Church, for the benefit of the Red Cross. This was Mrs. Bevitt's first public appearance in Jamestown and she soon demonstrated that she is a thorough musician and an organist of high rank. Her technic was excellent and her playing was at all times clean-cut. The opening and closing numbers afforded ample opportunity for tone coloring, and Mrs. Bevitt produced many orchestral effects in playing them. Mrs. Bevitt was assisted by Mr. Fred B. Anderson, baritone. His singing delighted the audience.

Miss Lillian Gustafson, Jamestown's best known soprano, gave an excellent song recital in Norden Hall, Thursday evening, June 20, under the auspices of the Jamestown Conservatory of Music. The hall was filled to its capacity and the audience heard a well selected program. The soloist is one of the most talented young musicians in this city. She has a beautiful voice, a sincerity as well as a breadth of style, and her musicianship is undoubtedly so far advanced as to place her in the class of artist. Miss Gustafson was assisted by Miss Vivian Burklund, reader, and Mr. Samuel Thorstenberg played the accompaniments. Miss Burklund gave two splendid readings, and Mr. Thorstenberg rendered a piano solo.

The Sunday band concert season in Allen Park will open tomorrow, June 23, when the First Lutheran Church band, Mr. Thorstenberg, director, will play an excellent program. The concerts, which are given under the auspices of the Municipal Park commission, will be held every Sunday afternoon until Sept. 1.

Miss Anna A. Knowlton will present her pupils in a piano recital in the Mozart Club rooms Wednesday evening, June 26.

The Jamestown Choral Society, Mr. Thorstenberg director, will give a concert for the benefit of the Italian M. E. Church in the First Lutheran Church, Tuesday evening, June 25, when "The Rose Maiden" by Cohen will be sung.

Miss Mary G. Lawrence will present her pupils in a piano recital in the Mozart Clubrooms this afternoon, June 22.

The Strand

For the week ending June 30 the offering consisted of the presentation of Cora Tracy, mezzo-contralto, in two popular renditions, "A Spirit Flower," by Stanton, and Newton-Tate's "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling." The singer showed not only that she possesses an unusual voice, but sings also with exquisite taste—an unusual feature in the best movie houses. Oscar Spirescu conducted excerpts from Puccini's "Mme. Butterfly."

Tamaki Miura Engaged by Campanini

The Japanese soprano, the only one from the Mikado's land known as an opera singer —especially as an interpreter of the Japanese Maiden, by Puccini, and as Iris, by Mascagni—has been engaged for several performances by Maestro Campanini. It is understood that she will appear in several performances of "Mme. Butterfly" and possibly in a revival of "Iris." A good acquisition.

Open-Air Concerts—Anna Fitziu Inaugurates the Summer Season as Soloist with the Stadium Symphony Orchestra.

Last summer the Civic Orchestra Society, with Pierre Monteux as the leader, entertained the lovers of music at the St. Nicholas Rink. This summer we traveled from 66th street to 137th street, where the City College Stadium is located. Neither of the two places is enviably located for summer music, but as we lack in this metropolis the proper environments, we might as well be contented with poor substitutes—for the sake of music.

A committee of prominent citizens has offered the sum of $10,000 as a guarantee for two weeks. Should the concerts prove a success they may be extended to several. Now it is a question of location. It is a difficult task to travel such a distance, and besides, the numerous inconveniences might prove detrimental to the financial support of the enterprise. It was poor judgment on the part of the committee to announce that the City College Stadium has been transformed to such an extent as to make possible comparison with the Casinos of Aix les Bains, Spa, Evian les Bains and Enghien. Not only that, the Stadium does not equal either of the above mentioned summer casinos—places unique in the world. But there is no possible chance to compare it with the pavilion of Ravinia Park, Ill., a place unique in this country.

Has any of the committee ever visited Ravinia Park? Hardly. The Stadium is a vast field, perfectly adapted for baseball and other similar games. Had the organizers employed their efforts to make this location the proper place for summer music, then we would have avoided the criticism. The affair was organized in haste. An escalade resembling the patriotic stands was constructed in haste, being uncovered. The musicians are at the mercy of the capricious weather, more so detrimental to the vocalists. The effects of the instruments are lost in the air; the beautiful voices of the vocalists lose their resonance, brilliance and quality. There are galleries which could be made available for several thousand listeners, but one is compelled to sit on uncomfortable stones, tight as sardines in a box, and if the rain happens to arrive suddenly much excitement ensues.

Under such circumstances and with such inconveniences we succeeded in listening to an entire orchestral and vocal concert. The ninety-five musicians were recruited from the various orchestral organizations. The material is good, but the leader, Arnold Volpe, is not the ideal conductor. Wishing to convince us of his knowledge of the compositions rendered, he directed without score, where the partitura would have been a necessity to the leader, the orchestra played not smoothly and not with brilliant effects, and this is due to Mr. Volpe's limited powers as a real leader. It is useless to detail each and every composition rendered. The good effects at times were lost in the clouds, for the weather was cloudy and chilly—more of the autumn kind than "a midsummer night's dream."

The real success of the first concert was Anna Fitziu of the Chicago Opera Company. She sang "Ritorna Vincetor," from "Aida," and one asked himself why Mr. Campanini did not allot her the part during the past season. Her voice carried wonderfully well; the timbre has grown in power and volume; the quality of the voice has grown in beauty, and the aria was sung with the proper spirit and in the proper mood. Notwithstanding the improper location and the capricious weather, the singing of Anna Fitziu was another striking example of American talent. The Easter Song from "Cavalleria" was given a splendid interpretation, and she took single-handed the vocal honors. The assistance of the Metropolitan chorus under Letti was not of the same artistic status to which we are accustomed at the opera house. The chorus was uneven, and it looked like a makeshift. The women singers were better than the men, and the orchestral accompaniment was practically inaudible.

The concert opened with "The Star Spangled Banner," followed by the march "Pomp and Circumstance" (Elgar); symphony, "New World" (Dvorak); overture "William Tell" (Rossini), and "American Reveille," a patriotic fantasy for orchestra and chorus, arranged by Arnold Volpe.

The concerts are under the management of the Metropolitan Musical Bureau, and some 4,000 people attended. Prices are popular. And again the question of Americanism is to be raised. Even the popular concerts are not being conducted by pure Americans. Why the committees on musical entertainments do not dig into American musical circles is a puzzle to us. Arnold Volpe's loyalty to this country cannot be disputed, but as a leader of orchestras he ranks with the mild conductors. I am quite sure that hundreds of American conductors can do better. Why should not the Yankee musicians be pushed to the front—if not for concerts at $2 a ticket, at least at 25 and 50 cents? The only answer which can be given is "red tape, protection, influence," besides the apathy of our own American musicians. How many Toscaninis can we produce in this world, and how many of the foreign conductors in America are to be rated as "great"? None—from New York to San Francisco.

Other Stadium Concerts

On June 24th an opera night was the feature of the second concert. In point of attendance it was as large as that of the previous night. It is encouraging to note the audience's interest in these popular entertainments, and if the attendance doesn't decrease, New Yorkers will benefit by an increase of summer music; the future may endanger the future summer enterprises. The public should have this in mind. The Metropolitan Chorus sang "March" from "Faust." The interesting item was the Kirmess scene from the same opera, sung by Arthur Middleton (Mephistopheles), Mario Laurenti (Valentin), Phyllis White (Marguerite), Ernest Priora (Faust), and Fernanda Pratt (Siebel). Mario Laurenti of the Metropolitan sang the "Largo al Factotum" from "The Barber of Seville." Arthur Middleton and the chorus sang the Toreador song from "Carmen." The orchestral program consisted of compositions by Verdi, Saint-Saens, Thomas, Offenbach and Ponchielli; of the patriotic anthems, "The Star Spangled Banner," "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "La Marseillaise" and Garibaldi's Hymn. Arnold Volpe conducted.

On June 25th Adam Didur of the Metropolitan Opera Company was the soloist in a rendition of the "Prolog" from Boito's "Mefistofele" and the Coronation scene from "Boris Godounoff" (Moussorgsky), assisted by the Metropolitan Chorus. The orchestra numbers enlisted as composers Henry Hadley, Cesar Franck, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Tschaikowsky. On June 26th the popular night concert featured Mary Jordan, contralto, in a rendition of "Mon Coeur," from "Samson and Delilah," and the "Anvil Chorus" from "Trovatore," assisted by the Metropolitan Chorus. Orchestral numbers by Gomez, Tschaikowsky; solo, "Meditation," from "Thais," played by Ilya Scholnik, Mascagni, Dvorak and Volpe.

June 27th, opera night, with Rita Fornia of the Metropolitan Opera, Rafael Diaz, tenor, and Pietro Biasi, basso of the San Carlo Opera Company. The "Miserere" from Verdi's "Trovatore" and the Temple scene from Verdi's "Aida" were rendered by the soloists. Mr. Volpe conducted. Compositions by Massenet, Bizet, Gounod and Meyerbeer. Rafael Diaz sang "Cielo e Mar" from "La Gioconda," and Rita Fornia sang the "Page Song" from "The Huguenots." The allied anthems were also given. Lenora Sparkes, soprano of the Metropolitan, was the soloist on June 28th, singing the "Waltz Song" from "La Boheme." The chorus rendered the dance music from "Prince Igor" (Borodin), and the "Bell Song" from "Pagliacci." Orchestral numbers consisted of compositions by Chabrier and Glazounoff. June 29th was a popular night, with the following soloists: Eva Didur, soprano, singing the "Jewel Song" from "Faust"; Mario Laurenti and chorus, "Marinaresca," from "La Gioconda"; Giovanni Martino, basso, aria "Il Lacerato Spirito" from Verdi's "Simone Boccanegra," and the Church scene from "Faust" with Eva Didur as "Marguerite" and Giovanni Martino as "Mephistopheles," assisted by the chorus. Orchestral numbers by Gounod, Grieg, Tschaikowsky, Offenbach and Massenet.

The Tollefsen Trio Play at the N. Y. S. M. Y. A.

That the Tollefsen Trio has been specially engaged to play at the N. Y. S. M. Y. A. is a tribute well deserved; also, praise should be bestowed upon the officials of the teachers' organization for the discriminative judgment in selecting the excellent trio to furnish the musical program. Chamber music is one of the much neglected arts on our shores. The limited number of chamber music organizations is proof that this branch of art has not yet gained as much ground as the rest of the branches. The teachers' organization has never given such intelligent proof of selecting artists and the form of entertainment as it has at the three days' convention held at the fashionable Hotel Majestic, located on picturesque Central Park, West. Luckily the atmospheric conditions unusually retarding the summer days contributed much to the enjoyment of the musical program. The Tollefsen trio, following the new era of Americanism in music, offered a program of purely American music. One might have had a chance of grudging and growling prior to the concert because only American composers were announced, but after listening to the program, the Tollefsen trio received special commendation for featuring the "made-in-America" music. Tuesday, June 25th, was the opening of the convention. Preceding the musical program the president of the Association predicted in a brief but eloquent discourse that America is destined to be the leading country in the world of music, and it may be said that such prediction is not an exaggeration of statement—only we wish our inhabitants more ambition and more activity in bringing this factor to a new and more solid basis. If the American musician did not profess a certain apathy which is detrimental to his own progress, the success of foreign artists would record less "eclat," as has always been the case with the European artist in past years. The Tollefsen Trio played trios by Charles W. Cadman and Arthur Foote. A composition called "From Old New England" for violin and piano disclosed its composer, Edmund Severn, as being a gifted musician. In this composition the playing of Carl Tollefsen and of Mme. Schnabel-Tollefsen was a source of delight. The harmony between the two musicians, the intonation, and the tone of Mr. Tollefsen's violin, and the liquid, limpid and clear touch of the pianist were admirable factors to give the composition the necessary execution required by its author. The trios (enlisting Michael Pennha, cellist), were exquisitely rendered, each and every one of the performers fulfilling brilliantly his task. As a whole, the event was quite out of the ordinary.

The Rialto

The week ending June 30th the musical program was somewhat more interesting. The orchestra, under Mr. Riesenfeld's baton, played excerpts from Massenet's "Manon." Mr. Sascha Fidelman, violinist, rendered Svendsen's "Romance." Mlle. D'Espinay sang the "Waltz Song" from "Mireille," by Gounod.

America Should Have Celebrated Gounod's Centenary

It is true that the musical season is over, but we should have honored one of the world's greatest composers, Charles Gounod, whose centenary falls this month. The Opera Comique and the Opera of Paris are paying just now well-deserved tributes to its genial son, and as a loyal ally of our sister republic we should have made an effort to celebrate in some way Gounod's centenary. Though times are critical, music and composer should not be shelved. Music has more beneficial consequences, especially in unusual times, than any other factor we know of. No one has come out to announce that Gounod's centenary is this month.

Combining Gounod's music in the form of a festival with a grand war gala, we should have attempted to pay a tribute to the composer of "Faust," "Romeo and Juliet," "Philemon and Baucis," "Mireille," "La Reine de Saba" and some of his oratorios. We have in the past honored bombastically the composers of our enemies today. No one attempted to honor Gounod. Spirited citizens, it is not too late. Who will undertake it?

Grace Hoffman and Dr. Jesse Willey Amey Married

The correspondent extends his greetings and best wishes to the splendid coloratura soprano, Grace Hoffman, on the occasion of her marriage to Dr. Jesse Willey Amey. The ceremony was celebrated on May 8th at the Church of St. Cornelius in New York.

Duncan's Dancers and Copeland, Pianist

A belated appearance of Duncan's pupils and George Copeland of Boston did not deter the public from filling up Carnegie Hall on June 27th. Programs were continued on June 28th and 29th before large audiences. The pupils and the pianist were cordially received.

THEATRES

"Hitchy Koo" 1918 at the Globe

Raymond Hitchcock presents his own revue, assisted by some of our best comedians, among them Leon Errol. A revue should be based on actualities, caricatures, cartoons, humor, impersonations of notable personalities, but we have had no opportunity to record such revue. We have been accustomed to elaborate scenery and a whole chain of pretty girls, who sing the same nonsensical tunes and give the same dances of yore, with slight changes. The French revues deal with our enemies, depicting them in their true light; our revues are usually patches of humor with no connections with the present spirits or situations. In the Hitchcock revue some of the scenes are totally a bore—too much wit wears one out. Some of Mr. Errol's scenes, especially "Dinner at Seven," get on your nerves when the so-called humor is uselessly prolonged. The final scene equaled Mack Sennett's silly comedies. The revue has its many enjoyable bits. "The Small Town Firemen's Ball" is amusing; "Somewhere in Brooklyn" would be the occasion of good entertainment if the scene did not contain so much vulgarity; "A Music Store" is pleasing.

Scene 2 of act second is also worth while. The balance of the entertainment consists of dry dances and uninteresting songs interpreted by voiceless interpreters. Mr. Raymond Hitchcock is the soul of the revue —clever and witty, he bores you not at all. Leon Errol is excellent in all respects; he is a worthy partenaire. Irene Bordoni should play sentimental parts in songs of the Boulevard; she is not the typical French divette. In patriotic songs she is more successful. The real hit of the revue was the Kouns sisters in their singing "Le Laran Rose," an echo duet. We were reminded of the opera stage. Nellie Kouns is the Galli-Curci of vaudeville and her sister Sara is the brilliant lyric soprano. It is a pity that these two Chicago girls are in revues and vaudeville—they should find appreciation on the legitimate concert and opera stage. The revue was written by Glen McDonough and Raymond Hubbell. Ray Dooley is appropriate in baby parts. The balance of the cast are more or less mediocrities.

PUZZLING QUESTIONS REGARDING MUSIC ANSWERED

Letters addressed to this department will be answered by Mary Bower, B. M., who has made an exhaustive study not only of piano playing, but also of music, and both the psychology of music and the psychology of teaching.

Q. Would you advise a piano student 11 years old, who does not intend to make music her profession, to study with a private teacher or enter a music school and be graded? A. L. B.

A. I would advise her to enter a school of music and be graded. Doubtless she wishes to be able to play for her own amusement and that of her friends, and to do that she must become accustomed to play before others, and there are many opportunities afforded for this in a school that a private teacher cannot give, and the examinations and the musical atmosphere are an incentive to practice.

Q. Which of the senses are most developed by piano technic? W. E. W.

A. Nothing comes to the mind except through the senses, and piano playing influences directly touch, sight and hearing. Touch is the most important of the senses, all the others being modifications of it; therefore, the greatest influence is brought to bear on this sense, and there are two aspects to this sense: One as a receiver of sensation, constituting the sense proper, and the other as a seeker of sensation, deserving the name of tact.

Q. What scale or scales is best to practice in order that I may become more proficient in velocity? B. M. S.

A. C major scale and arpeggios always for velocity, and also practice the A major scale with the right hand alone, and the E flat major scale, beginning on G and ending on G, with the left hand alone.

Q. I want to play the piano very much, but I have no talent for it. Is it worth while to spend money for lessons? W. A. B.

A. Yes, it is worth while. Seek a teacher who does not tell you how well her gifted pupils play, as those would find a way to express themselves without a teacher, but seek one who tells you how her less gifted pupils have learned to play interestingly, and who can tell you there has been no obstacle in her own life on which she did not make some impression, provided she did not actually remove it.

REMOVING STAGE FRIGHT BY PSYCHOLOGICAL TREATMENT

Stage fright removed by a psychological procedure, long the dream of the musical fraternity, has been accomplished by Daniel Bonus, of Decatur, Ill. He is developing a process that is attracting wide attention by its novelty and practical value. Leading authorities are inquiring about this new process and many who have already tested its value for the removal of nervous effects are spreading their favorable opinion of the treatment. Nervousness seems to be quite characteristic of teachers and students, so the usefulness of such a process may well find a very fertile field.

Here is a case of loyalty of a pupil for her teacher, and, as everyone in the music profession knows, this is indeed a rare thing.

Music News is in receipt of a letter from Alice Geer Ferguson of Gary, Ind., in which she voices her thanks for the review of a song program given by her in the Indiana city recently, but concludes the letter with the statement, "I am, however, more than sorry that you did not definitely mention in the review that I owe my success to my teacher, Agnes Leist Beebe of Chicago."

Mrs. Beebe, besides maintaining a studio at Kimball Hall in Chicago, teaches two days a week at Gary and is fortunate in having in her class such an attractive voice as that of Mrs. Ferguson, and the latter, in turn, is fortunate to have placed herself in the care of so good a teacher as Mrs. Beebe.

Gary, which, as you know, is a hustler in every respect, is no laggard in music and especially does it shine in the number of women composers resident there.

Marian Coryell, one of the earliest to spread music wings in the city, has since moved to New York, and at her studio there, as well as in local concerts throughout the city, has, during the past season, introduced a great number of her songs and piano pieces.

On last Monday evening the editor of Music News made one of his frequent pilgrimages to Gary for the purpose of hearing the annual concert of the Gary Musical Club, at which time the program was made up entirely of compositions by Gary women.

Clara Edmunds-Hemingway appeared as vocalist and pianist, and introduced a number of works in both lines with much success.

Alice Geer Ferguson, who has just been referred to above as a singer (and she is a good one), is also a reader and, better still, she composes everything she reads. At this time she gave a great variety of numbers, one of the most apropos of which

THE LAD AS GOES OVER

Oh, let's make a song
To the lad as goes over—
The lad as goes over the top.
He's fighting for you an' he's fighting for me,
An' a bloomin' big job has he got;
A what?
A bloody black job has he got;
For whether he's Scotty, or Irish, or Jew,
Or Frenchy, or British, or Yankee, like you,
He's a regular fellow with something to do—
The lad as goes over the top;
What! What!
Lord, leg him up over the top!

Oh, what will we sing
Of the lad as goes over;
The lad as goes over the top?
Is he cold in his skin, to be quit of the thing?
Is he keen for the job as he 'as got?
A what?
Why, he begged for the chance, like as not.
For whether he's Scotty, or Irish, or Jew,
Or Frenchy, or British, or Yankee, like you,
He's bit no more off than he'll jolly well chew,
For he's bound to go over the top;
What! What!
Lord, leg him up over the top!

ALICE GEER FERGUSON.

is reproduced in the center of this page.

Alice Margrethe Olsen, a long time pupil of Heniot Levy in Chicago and well known throughout the country for her concert appearances, is now teaching part of the time at Gary, and she also was introduced at this indicative concert in her own compositions.

Gary has still another woman composer in the person of Lida Browning White, who writes for both voice and piano, and whose work has been heard by this writer with great pleasure many times. She was co-star with Mrs. Ferguson in the concert recently given, when she played some of her own works and Mrs. Ferguson sang others.

An organization under the name of the American Musicians' War Service League, has been effected and recently, over the signatures of a number of well known Chicago musicians, sent out the following circular letter:

"To Musicians of Chicago—Greetings.

"At a meeting held June 18, 1918, at 64 East Jackson boulevard, of the American Musicians' War Service League, the following declarations and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Our country is at war, not from choice, but to maintain its honor as a people among the nations of the world, to enforce obedience to the rights and privileges of a free people and its free institutions, and to command adherence to and full performance of agreements between nations, whether great or small, weak or powerful.

"We are at war with a system of government unresponsive to the will of its people, disloyal to the attributes of human justice and violently opposed to the human conception that the powers of government should rest solely with those governed.

"Our nation is in conflict with a coterie of hereditary rulers of mankind, whose sole purpose is to enslave the human race, and by the use of violent and brutal force compel submission to the will of a few self-constituted and self-ordained rulers—men who, under cloak of divinity, would assume to themselves for the present and all future time the power to control the destinies of all people, their lives, their lands, their fortunes, and dominate all their human relations and activities.

"We are at war with nations who have no regard for womanhood, the sacredness of child life; to whom international covenants appeal only as instruments to cover a philosophy of conquest and forced annexations, and who recognize no moral force of restraint, but are guided only by blind, brutal and vicious force.

"In this world's contest for the supremacy of the rule of democracy, as opposed to the rule of autocracy—the dominance of moral restraint as against violent and brutal force—there can and is but one choice, and the musicians of Chicago are proud in the knowledge and loyal to the decision of our nation and its people to maintain the ideals of a free people and free institutions, and to expand the sphere of influence of the rule of democracy everywhere, among all nations of the world.

"In this contest all loyal citizens are called upon to do their utmost in carrying on to a triumphant victory this crusade for justice and ideals of democracy.

"The youth of America is even called on to carry out the declaration and determination of our people by force of arms—if necessary, meet this obligation by the sacrifice of life. To you and all of us our nation now appeals, each in our own station of life, to do our utmost in the helping to support our fighting forces of our land, and to meet the ever-changing conditions of our civil population and industrial life.

"To day we are appealed to to promote the investment of the savings of the workers in War Savings Stamps. As in the past, musicians are ever ready and more than willing—aye, anxious—to do their full share to help win this war. We, the undersigned, therefore call on all musicians, organized and unorganized, to respond to this call of our government. We urge each and all to invest all the money they can in the purchase of Thrift and War Savings Stamps. We call on all musicians to purchase the full amount of War Savings Stamps permitted by law, and request that every organization impress its members with the necessity of responding to this appeal.

"By responding to this call you are not making a sacrifice—you are only advancing and protecting your own best interests and those of your fellow musicians. You are indeed meeting a national obligation, with profit to yourself and all the people involved in this, the greatest struggle for freedom, justice and democracy.

"President Wilson has fixed upon June 28th as National War Savings Stamp Day. Every man, woman and child are expected to buy a War Stamp costing $4.17 or pledging to buy one or more between now and January 1, 1919.

"For the first time in history the American musician is given an opportunity to show his position and prove his patriotism by standing as a unit, for by purchasing his stamps and signing his pledge through the American Musicians' War Service League credit is given the musicians as doing their bit. The American Musicians' War Service League headquarters will be at Lyon & Healy Building, beginning June 25 to 28. Street booths on June 28, the National Stamp Day, will be at the Lyon & Healy Building and Kimball Building, corner of Jackson boulevard and Wabash avenue; McClurg Building, 218 South Wabash avenue; Chicago Musical College, 624 South Michigan avenue; Bush Temple, 800 North Clark street; Fine Arts Building, 410 South Michigan avenue. Members of the American Musicians' War Service League will be in these booths and will gladly sell you stamps or assist you in signing your pledge.

"Every patriotic musician will come to these booths and lend his money to the government and thereby help win the war—and at the same time help himself by honoring his profession by helping swell the total sum.

"Invite your friends to buy stamps and sign a pledge to buy during this year. Be sure to buy your stamps and sign your pledge with the American Musicians' War Service League. If you cannot come to the booths, write 725 Lyon & Healy Building, and they will be delivered to you."

Music News failed last week to see "The Claws of the Hun" at Orchestra Hall in time to have a review in the last issue. It was seen later in the week, however, and there is no hesitation whatever in saying that it proved to be a wonderfully fascinating study and one, too, with such a definite propaganda as to be worthy universal attention. If you failed to see it at Orchestra Hall, watch for other opportunities, for you will probably never see anything which more faithfully and effectively presents the perfidy and the diabolism of those Germans in this country who remain loyal to the land of the Hun rather than to America.

Thrilling indeed was it, on last Sunday night at Ravinia, to hear the spirited rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the orchestra, for it was a superb performance.

There is a reason.

It is rumored that, in selecting the men for Ravinia, Mr. Eckstein insisted upon "100 per cent Americanism" in every case, and this, of course, explains the spirit and the understanding with which the music was played.

BUSH CONSERVATORY

Saturday afternoon the Bush Conservatory presented two artists that have been recently added to the faculty. The recital was given in the new quarters of the conservatory at 839 North Dearborn avenue. The artists were Moses Boguslawski, pianist, and Hardy Williamson, tenor.

Mr. Boguslawski is indeed an artist in his line. Very reserved yet warm is his feeling for the pianoforte, and he gave most careful readings of his numbers, technically, musicianly and interpretatively speaking.

Mr. Williamson did splendid work, his singing being very enjoyable. His voice is beautiful, his enunciation very good, and one could listen and never tire of him.

The conservatory should be congratulated on its additions. Both artists easily could have responded to encores.

The following program was given in a positive style of brilliancy and poise:

Pastorale and Capriccio.....Scarlatti
G Minor Rhapsodie.....Brahms
Mr. Boguslawski
Che Gelida Manina (La Boheme).....Puccini

PREISER SCHOOL OF MUSIC FINAL CONCERT

Many concerts have been given during the past few months at the Preiser School of Music in Austin, and the number of these, no less than their unfailing excellence, is proof enough that the school has passed through a very successful year.

Mrs. Preiser is an enterprising, as well as a thoroughly competent woman, and has done wonders in maintaining and building up the school in its every department.

On last Tuesday evening the last of the spring concerts was given at the First Baptist Church in Austin and, just as in other years, there was a capacity audience and great enthusiasm for the work of the young people on the program.

FANNIE BARNETT PREISER

All departments of the school were definitely and adequately represented in the following list:

Fannie Barnett Preiser

The Preiser School was made essentially into a violin school, with a great deal of stress on ensemble in its first years by its founder, the late Albert Preiser, but, afterwards, with the expert and artistic help of Mrs. Preiser, who is herself a splendid pianist, as well as accompanist, it was developed into a general school, in which all branches of musical art have been taught most successfully.

On last Tuesday the old-time Preiser traditions were carried on and many of the old-time pupils of Mr. Preiser appeared on the program, as well as a lot of youngsters, who have been taught by his former artist pupils, who are now members of the faculty of the school.

Frederick Braucher, who gave a recital recently with great success, and Gladys Welge, who has often shown her artistic bent and who was on the program of last Tuesday, are among these young and very successful teachers.

Not alone was there a great deal of fine violin solo playing, both of children and youths, at this time, but the ensemble, quite as usual, was entirely exceptional in poise, assurance and artistic results.

The several voice pupils also were decidedly interesting and proof of the fact that this department is flourishing also.

Mrs. Preiser not only accompanied everything throughout the evening, but also stood back of the solo pianists, and in their work was proven anew to be a most conscientious teacher of musicianship and a thoroughly fine exemplar of interpretation and style.

ANNA TOMLINSON

One of the most charming numbers played at the commencement concerts of the Sherwood Music School was the Haydn Sonata No. 1, the young artist-pianist giving it being Anne Ludemann, pupil of Anna Tomlinson.

To play Haydn intelligently and pleasingly requires gifts of the most musical and dainty description, for Haydn exacts not only absolute positiveness and exact musicianship but also a tone of great beauty and a style at once suave and clear.

Miss Ludemann brought all this to her work and easily proved herself a talented and thoroughly well taught pupil. Her rhythm was exceptionally clear and her tone coloring delightful throughout the reading.

Her playing was a case in which the teacher might very correctly take much credit for the definite accomplishment.

Besides teaching at the Sherwood School Miss Tomlinson has a school of her own at Berwyn, Ill., where the following com-

PUPILS OF ROY DAVID BROWN GIVE RECITAL

At Lyon & Healy Hall the piano pupils of Roy David Brown gave a recital on last Monday evening. Nine of the numbers were represented by the fair sex, while Ralph Munroe Park stood alone as the only man of the evening's program.

The pupils made an excellent impression with their conscientious work, denoting careful preparation and good musicianship.

Especially brilliant was the playing of Carolyn Carlstrom in the Prelude (Rachmaninoff) and "Rustle of Spring" (Sinding).

Blanche McCauley in "Serenata" (Moszkowski) and "Menuet Moderne" (Conrath) deserves mention, as does Anna Spring, for her work in the "Hungarian Dance, No. 7" (Brahms) and Debussy's "Fireworks."

Helen Marshall distinguished herself in her selection of "Caprice Espagnole" (Moszkowski) and the Liszt Rhapsody, No. 4.

But it was Mr. Park that made the most lasting impression. Clear cut is his work and remarkable is his ability to deliver his best efforts. He is a combination of a pleasing personality and a level headed musician. He gave a wonderful reading to the "Pan's Flute" of Godard, while his temperamental nature enabled him to make more than an artistic success of Brahms' "Hungarian Dance, No. 6."

Others that contributed were Evelyn Mayer, Sylvia Schwartz, Rose Heywood, Olive Hays and Anna Peterson.

NORTH SHORE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The closing program of the juvenile and preparatory departments of the North Shore School of Music (Charles J. Haake, director) was given on Saturday afternoon, June 29. The following pupils were heard in piano and violin numbers and readings:

|---|---|
| Maud Jean Gail | Alice Clark |
| Catherine Smith | Marion Hodges |
| Jerome Leve | Sarah Berenice Larash |
| Agnes Spoerer | Olivette Milliken |
| Leslie France | Edith Whitehill |
| Eloise Holmes | Margeret Nyhagan |
| Cora Scheuer | Ida Levy |
| Grace Cole | Hilda Willingham |
| Marguerite Van de Merlen | Muriel Kreasan |
| Max Steinbook | Borghild Anderson |
| Marie Borman | Herbert Kinkaid |
| Theodore Bach | Emily Hard |
| Miriam Whitehill | Milward Adams |
| David Shipman | Lorraine Hibbeler |
| Lois Neilsen | Melvin Morsbach |
| Mary Louise Mayo | Beatrice Wade |
| Gertrude Mueller | Louis Haake |
| Viola Keating | Nell Foley |
| Lillian Ollmert | Frederick Fuller |
| Elsa Schuelke | Ruby Clauson |
| Eva Futterman | Mildred Blumenthal |

The following appeared in solo and group dances:

|---|---|
| Mary Louise Mayo | Lillian Ollmert |
| Dorothy Pearson | Olivette Milliken |
| Marie Borman | Edith Whitehill |
| Evelyn Pearson | Margeret Nyhagan |
| Beatrice Wade | Sylvesta Doose |

The program was one of excellence throughout. Of the older pupils who played especial interest was aroused by little Beatrice Wade, a pupil of Miss Alice Anderson. This very young lady has dash, temperament and sure fingers. She played the "Rhapsody Mignonne" (Koelling) with sure-fingered brilliancy.

Ruby Clauson, a thirteen-year-old miss, who is a pupil of Charles J. Haake, played the Liadov "Music Box" and the Godard "Barcarolle Venetienne," two pieces within her easy technical grasp, with fine rhythmic sense and a discrimination in the matter of pedaling and phrasing that promises fine things for her musical future.

APOLLO CLUB OUTING

Last Saturday 150 members of the Apollo Musical Club and their friends went to Fox River Park, with well-filled baskets, for their outing. The day was ideal and a most delightful time was had by all. Several games of baseball were played between tenors and basses, also sopranos and altos, and if the owners of the big league teams hear of the wonderful work done on the diamond on that occasion, they will, no doubt, make an effort to secure their services to replace their present leading players. Dancing was one of the features of the evening. On returning, at 10 o'clock p. m., the crowd was hilarious with song, and as we passed through Aurora, singing the "Star Spangled Banner" and other patriotic songs, the streets were filled with people, as on circus day, wondering what fine troupe it was. All were loud in their expressions of their enjoyment of the day and hopes of having another one next year.

LUCILE WYNEKOOP AND JAMES GODDARD

On Tuesday evening, June 2, Lucile Megahan Wynekoop and James Goddard gave delightful groups of songs at the commencement exercises of the Lakeview Hospital Training School for Nurses at Buena Memorial Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Goddard sang "Negro Spiritual" (Burleigh), "The Bitterness of Love" (James P. Dunn) and the Bergen setting of "Flanders Fields." In more than usually fine voice, Mr. Goddard sang with great smoothness of tone and warmth of feeling. His wealth of power and range were excellently well suited to the rendition of "Flanders Fields," which was enthusiastically received by the audience.

Mrs. Wynekoop, who possesses a voice of rich mezzo quality, sang a group of three songs, as follows: "One Golden Day" (Fay Foster), "Cradle Song" (MacFayden) and "My Son" (Del Riego). Her songs were well chosen and sung with excellent understanding and artistic ease. Both soloists were enthusiastically encored. They also sang the duet "'Tis Evening," from the opera "Pique Dame" (Tschaikowsky), with very effective interpretation.

Miss Grace Grove, at the piano, played exceptionally artistic accompaniments.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

DEARBORN SCHOOL OF LYCEUM ARTS

Last Thursday afternoon was the occasion of the delightful studio recital in the spacious quarters of the Dearborn School of Lyceum Arts in the Auditorium building.

Miss Eleanor Pogue, mezzo-soprano, presented a program consisting of modern songs, in which she was more than successful. Miss Pogue displayed a voice of broad, colorful quality, which was used in a well schooled and discriminating fashion.

Mr. R. B. DeYoung, her teacher, will present her again this summer, in addition to other studio activities.

Miss Grace Grove supplied artistic accompaniment.

The Dearborn School ladies' chorus has distinguished itself under the efficient and capable direction of Miss Lyravine Votaw. At the annual spring program, given in the Auditorium recital hall, an unusual variety of choruses gave them ample opportunity to display the fineness and finish to which their work had been brought.

Isabelle Suess Bellows, artist pupil of Estelle Mandeville, presented two groups of songs, especially remarkable for the tonal smoothness with which they were delivered. A large and enthusiastic audience greeted the performer.

Bohnet—Cleveland Bohnet, pianist, is spending the Summer at San Antonio, Texas, his former home. He reports that the heat has been very great, but that this has not prevented him from playing very often for the boys in camp there nor the forming of plans for numerous concerts throughout the Summer.

THE GARY MUSICAL CLUB GIVES ITS ANNUAL CONCERT

On last Monday evening the Gary Music Club presented a program of compositions by its own members, under the direction of the president, Clara Edmunds-Hemingway, at the close of which she made a very neat little speech of retirement and thanks, introducing, as well, her successor, the new President, Mrs. Eva L. Odell Diedell, who was equally felicitous and successful in her remarks.

The program proper was very delightful and was shot through and through with novelty as well as merit.

Mrs. Hemingway opened the ball with some whistling solos, a branch of work in which she is unique and which gives pleasure always, after which, with Mrs. Diedell playing the violin very skillfully, she presented a Suite of her own, including a Sarabande, Gavotte and Gigue, and later sang a group of her own songs, including "The Mists Aboon the Moor," "To Conquer or Dee" and "Twilight," in the last named having again the expert and artistic support of Mrs. Diedell, as well as that of her daughter Florence, as accompanist.

Mrs. Hemingway's songs are distinctly original and always effective, and, as sung by herself, the "Twilight" was particularly beautiful.

Mrs. Hemingway plays excellent accompaniments for herself, and her enunciation is always at such a point of clarity as to make her work definitely and strongly appealing.

Margrethe Olsen, a most charming personality as well as a pianist of the finest sort of attainment, played her own "Meditation," "By the Brook" and "Venetian Gondolier," all being pianistic and beautiful, but the first named being a trifle best of the three.

Miss Olsen has lovely tonal quality and a sense of musical interpretation, which make her work a great delight.

The last of the composer-artists to appear was Alice Geer Ferguson, who, although definitely known as a singer, chose at this time to appear only in original readings.

It would be possible to dilate at great length on the work of Mrs. Ferguson, for not only is she forceful and definite in her readings, but also her compositions show a very long gamut of emotions and are touched with colors and moods so various as to attract and hold the closest attention.

Her patriotic readings included three: the first a glowing tribute to Captain Knyvette, the second a remarkable genre picture entitled "The Sailor's Daughter," and the third being so good that this writer begged the privilege of reproducing it on the editorial page of Music News, where it may be found today.

The last group was made up of a lot of short bits, mostly in dialect, and including Irish, Italian and French, to say nothing of "colored" talk.

In all this Mrs. Ferguson was delightful, perhaps in nothing more so than in "Bigga Boy," an Italian picture, true and charming.

A group of Children's Pieces was equally felicitous and ended with the story of a boy who hated the constant changing of clothes prescribed by his mother and who ardently wished that he were a savage, because "they wear only skin, and you don't have to change that."

JOHN RANKL PRESENTS PUPILS

John Rankl, baritone and teacher of voice, presented his pupils in recital at the Rundle School of Music, Fine Arts Building, on Tuesday evening. A program of taxing song compositions enabled the young musicians to demonstrate their training, which reflected great credit upon Mr. Rankl as an instructor.

Dora Christopher, contralto, (in no partiality) was by far the most finished artist. She possesses a rare contralto voice, well under control, and the essential poise that goes to make an excellent singer. She gave "Melisande in the Wood" (Goetz), "May Day Morn" (Slater), "A Selection from Indian Cycle" (Bergen) and "Lullaby" (Ross) in pure, luscious tone, enhanced by clear enunciation.

Florence Cohan was most happy in Cadman's "At Dawning" and D'Hardelot's "Because," and Goldie Fisher's lyric soprano voice was in good keeping with "Rose in the Bud" and Mifanwy," both by Forster.

Clarence Robertson, tenor, sang two groups in John McCormack-like manner, depicting that famous tenor's liquid tone in the middle register, but failing to come through on the high ones. Elgar's "Pleading," Burleigh's "Three Shadows," Godard's "Berceuse from Jocelyn" and the quaint "Love in a Dutch Garden" (Loomis) made up his selections. Mr. Robertson is a good example of a hard-working, conscientious musician.

Harold Hansen, enlisted jackie, was a sensensation in "Keep the Home Fires Burning" (Novello), the reigning patriotic song of the day, and added a good account of "Eventide" (Deitrick) and "A Red, Red Rose" (Hastings). Mr. Hansen's baritone production is noteworthy in its evenness of tone and excellence of quality, yet it lacks any semblance of style.

Mrs. Christopher and Mr. Rankl proved a harmonious duo in their "Look Down, Dear Eyes" (Fisher), the perfect blending of tone and musicianship making this number a dominant feature.

Mr. Rankle provided entr'acte talks and piano accompaniments.

Music at RAVINIA PARK

RAVINIA AN OPPORTUNITY NOT SUFFICIENTLY APPRECIATED

By MARY CARVER WILLIAMS

"The Ravinia season is a wonderful opportunity which the people do not fully appreciate," was the remark made by Sophie Braslau of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and soloist at the concert last Friday evening, July 5.

"The fame of Ravinia should be established throughout the country," said Miss Braslau. "The East and the West should know about it as a unique institution, like which there is nothing in the country, offering to so many people, besides the natural beauty of the surroundings, an opportunity to hear good opera and good concerts through the summer."

Miss Braslau's sentiments were seconded by Richard Hageman, conductor of the evening, with a plea for better support from residents of the North Shore and the musically interested public of Chicago. There is no doubt that the people of Chicago should wake up, not only to their opportunity but to their obligation in supporting the Ravinia concerts by their attendance. Friday evening's concert was well worthy of a crowded house and should have had it.

Friday Afternoon

Friday's program introduced a new feature into the Ravinia plan by opening, in the afternoon, with the first of the Student-Artist concerts, which are to occur on Friday afternoons throughout the Summer. The soloists presented were Eleanor Eastlake, soprano; Kathryn Keirnan, contralto, and Philip Warner, pianist; Gennaro Papi conducting.

The orchestral selections were delightfully delicate and fantastic in character, though the shamefully small house made them sound more trivial than they rightfully should have. Mr. Papi conducted with his accustomed ease and sincerity.

Miss Eastlake and Miss Keirnan, who have recently taken their teacher's certificates at the American Conservatory, sang a group of three duets as follows: "Sous le dome epais," from "Lakme" (Delibes); "The Charm of Spring" (Mary Turner Salter), and "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Thurlow Lieurance). They also responded graciously to an encore. Both girls possess straightforward voices of power and refined quality. Like sisters in appearance and with voices so admirably suited one to the other, they should have a brilliant future ahead of them in following their sister purpose, and by continuing to sing together they ought to achieve great success in this new and entirely unexhausted field of vocal art.

Philip Warner, the talented 16-year old pupil of Kurt Wanieck, played the Tschaikowsky B Minor Concerto, with Mr. Wanieck at the second piano. It was in this composition that the young pianist displayed such remarkable ability at the Commencement Exercises of the American Conservatory a few weeks ago. He is undoubtedly brilliantly talented and ought to have an unusual career. He responded to enthusiastic applause with a Chopin Etude (A flat major), which he played with great charm.

Friday Evening

The concert Friday evening was a delight both as to choice and execution, presenting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra with Sophie Braslau as soloist and Richard Hageman as conductor. Mr. Hageman seemed to be in unusually good spirits and conducted the entire program in a most energetic and spirited way. His decisive style and the striking rhythm in all his movements are a joy to watch and the results are certainly worth hearing. The Berlioz Overture, "Le Carneval Romaine," was followed by "Norwegian Melodies," "Heart Wounds" and "In Spring Time" (Grieg), which were given a most appealing interpretation. Miss Braslau sang "O Mio Fernando," from "La Favorita," and was very warmly received. The voice of this favorite Metropolitan singer has truthfully been called a Schumann-Heink voice, for it displays much of the power and quality of that of the great prima donna. Miss Braslau encored with "The Habanera," from "Carmen."

Obligatos for violin and cello in the "Suite Ruse d'Amour, Op. 61" (Glazounow) were played by Messrs. Weisbach and Steindel. The grace and brilliancy of this suite are very characteristic of the charm and melodiousness of the works of this popular Russian composer. The Swedish Rhapsody, "Midsummer Wake" (Alfven), with its beautiful interlude, was strongly optimistic in atmosphere and played with convincing vigor. This was followed by the Tschaikowsky Ballet Suite, "The Thorn Rose," containing the well-known waltz and the curious "Puss in Boots" movement, which made a great appeal to the audience. The program was most enjoyably completed with the Elgar "Pomp and Circumstance."

The public cannot afford to miss these splendid concerts for they are inspiring in every sense of the word and deserve to be warmly supported. Come!

Sunday Night

Few performances of "Tosca" in Chicago have boasted so good a triumvirate of artists for the leading roles as Claudia Muzio, Morgan Kingston and Leon Rothier proved themselves to be at Ravinia on Sunday evening.

Next to Mary Garden (who is the best of all Toscas) ranks, in my opinion, Claudia Muzio, who sings "Vissi d'Arte" better than does Mary, but who has not the same skill in climax building in a purely histrionic sense.

She was, however, on Sunday evening very fine and made a tremendous impression.

She is one of the very few singing actors who absolutely refuses to break the dramatic pose in acknowledgment of applause and therein proves her supreme artistry.

Not since the halcyon days of Bassi has there been so good a Cavaradossi as is Morgan Kingston, vocally, and even Bassi, with his brilliant dramatic art, did not look the part as does Kingston. He was in superb form on Sunday night and scored heavily.

Rothier is a sturdy Scarpia, but not too heavy to suit the Sunday night audience. His voice is very broad and his action directly to the point. Altogether a much better Scarpia than many we have had at the Auditorium.

Daddi, Dorman, Toft and Latham did the smaller parts in a rather small way, although in general the opera was well dressed, well staged and well managed.

Gennaro Papi, at the conductor's desk, proved himself very much en rapport with the Puccini music and requirements and conducted excellently; especially lucid and brilliantly colored was his reading of Luigini's "Suite Egyptian," with which the evening opened.

Other Operas and Concerts

On Monday evening there was the usual concert, and on Tuesday "Faust" was given. On Wednesday the bill was "Lucia," and on Thursday "Cavalleria Rusticana."

This (Friday) afternoon the Second Artists-Students program will introduce Mildred L. Smith, contralto, and Marion Bergman, pianist, and this evening Sophie Braslau, who made so signal a success last week, will again be soloist in the symphony concert.

On Saturday and Sunday afternoons there will be excellent orchestral programs, and on Saturday night "Il Trovatore" will be given, with Muzio, Braslau and Kingston in the principal parts.

Owens—Lillian Landwer, soprano, artist pupil of H. W. Owens, is special soloist for the summer at the Warren Avenue Congregational Church. On last Sunday morning she gave a very artistic and effective rendition of Buck's "O Divine Redeemer."

ORCHESTRA HALL

"The darling of the screen," Mary Pickford, holds the feature position at Orchestra Hall this week, and it is a cue for her admirers to flock there in hordes to see their favorite visualize the rustically quaint cinema version of "How Could You, Jean?"

This photoplay is different in many ways from the usual run of Pickford films. The director seems to have caught the famous personality in still another phase. The filming is clear-cut, the scenario well worked out, and the sub-titles are a scream; in fact, they would do credit to Anita Loos, the "master sub-title concocter of the screen."

In this we have Mary as a petted child of fortune whose source of income suddenly ceases to "come in," which necessitates her earning her own living. And when she comes to sum up her capabilities she finds her one asset is cooking. So she hies herself to an employment agency, looking like a million dollars, or, to quote a lady in search of a cook as she looks at the bewitching figure Mary makes, "Hire a cook with a face like that, and me with growing sons in the house? Not on your life!"

This gives Mary her cue, and she visits a second-rate Salvation Army shop and recruits some old clothes. Next we have her rigged up as a frump, sans beauty and curls, but still alluringly sweet. Promptly she is engaged. The Swedish helper who drives her to her new home takes her for a country woman and "some Yane." And when he welcomes her in the mother tongue she, in a fit of adventure, does not right the error, but promptly replies, "Never talk to me in Swedish again; it makes me so homesick." The hero enters on the scene about this time. He is a son of the idle rich and is spending his time walking where caprice wills, and it, of course, leads his steps past the little cottage where Mary is cook. Instead of going his way he tarries and engages himself as hired man, whose capability runs to "milking a Ford and cranking a cow." After his day's work is done he satisfies himself with sitting opposite the cook, listening to her chatter in broken English and watching her eat her peas with a knife, while he, to keep her company, drinks his coffee from the saucer because, as he explains to her, "The spoon does get into me eyes."

Each day that passes brings them that much nearer the goal of love, and when Ted scrapes up the courage to kiss her, the reserve is broken and a very lovesick Mary creeps out into the pasture to confide to the cow, "just as one woman to another. Henrietta, I'm in love with the hired man."

The romance culminates as it should, and the boy's father, who has come in search of his son to see "just what mischief the young rascal has gotten into now," extends his blessing.

The usual travelogues, animated cartoons and excellent orchestral selections go to make up a pleasant afternoon or evening's entertainment.

Miss Charlotte Roth

In the Time of Roses ..... Reichart
Wake Up ..... Phillips
Miss Mulvihill

Allah ..... Chadwick
Dawn in the Desert ..... Ross
Adieu Forets ..... Tschaikowsky
Matinatta ..... Leoncavallo
Miss Rhoda Arnold

Mrs. Butler believes firmly in musicianship and insists upon it that each pupil must attain this quality in full degree. Therefore, her pupils sing correctly and with splendid intelligence.

She believes, further, in careful and artistic interpretation, with every detail which colors it carefully conserved, including enunciation. Therefore, the singing of her pupils is an intellectual, as well as a musical delight.

This writer did not hear the first few pupils, but doubts not that they were at the same stage of careful musicianship and artistic interpretation as the others.

Ruth Thompson was very intense in her Bizet number and gave the Cadman song with simple eloquence.

Mrs. Weitzel was positive and definite in the "Louise" aria, as was also Miss Clapp in the "Tosca" excerpt.

Miss Bliss showed remarkable skill and very beautiful tones in the "Lakme" aria, and Mrs. Nyquist was distinctly virtuosic in the Proch Variations.

Mr. La Zoris, the possessor of a very good voice, has studied only three weeks, but gave an excellent account of himself in his songs, showing, however, that he has not as yet had much time to think of enunciation of text.

Miss Torgler in the popular "Dear Lad" and Miss Roth in the equally apropos, "God Be With Our Boys," were abundantly effective and successful, and Miss Robertson did her aria beautifully.

Miss Mulvihill has sincere manner and style, as well as big voice, and was much liked in her group.

Miss Arnold is already in the artist class and sang her group with poise, authority and style, showing particularly fine voice in the aria.

Mrs. Florence Chaiser, another artist pupil, was unable to appear, much to the disappointment of many, inasmuch as she was scheduled to sing a group of the effective works of Lily Wadhams Moline.

Accompaniments of the most refined, as well as alertly musical and interpretative character, were played by Fred Schauwacker, which was all the more an achievement, inasmuch as he had no opportunity for rehearsal and played mostly at first sight.

JENNETTE LOUDON STUDIOS

It was a gala event, this children's program that Jennette Loudon gave on Saturday afternoon, containing three distinct features: the unbounded talent of the youngsters, the tiny take-off on the Symphony Orchestra, which was cunningly named "Kindersinfonie," and the playing of the original piano compositions from the MS. of the junior students, some of whom could not have been over twelve years of age.

Those who entertained prior to the time we put in our appearance were as follows:

Duet—Spring's First Message ..... Meyer
Elizabeth Hoffmann, Jane Daemicke
Dance of the Marionettes ..... Adams
Alice Krumm
Elfin Dance ..... Goodrich
Frieda Bartholf
The Answer ..... Newcomb
Song of the Armorer ..... Gaynor
Richard Jenks
Musette ..... Bach
Eleanor Krumm
Tarantelle ..... Goodrich
Bernard Schrader
Evening Bells ..... Martin
Margaret Bryant
The Gypsies Are Coming ..... Rogers
Maurice Jenks
Song—Who Is Sylvia? ..... Schubert
Elizabeth Pigall
Gavotte ..... Bach
Melodie ..... Massenet
Mary Louise Bartholf
The Brownies ..... Reinhold
Carl Schrader
Robin Goodfellow ..... Goodrich
Helen Fleischer
The Jumping Jack ..... Mokrejs
Rondo ..... Mokrejs
March of the Boy Scouts ..... Frothingham
Edwin Novatny
Last Night ..... Bartholomew
A Baby Sermon ..... Barbour
Mammy's Lullaby ..... Elizabeth Hoffmann
The Home Road ..... Carpenter
Children's Class

The composers of the original compositions deserve special mention, not only for their originality but for their absolute knowledge of musical status. One little lady named her work "A Polka Dance," while another modestly labeled hers "A Song." These illustrations give the reader an idea of the trend of the works given.

Those represented were Frieda Bartholf, Mary Louise Bartholf, Alice Krumm, Eleanor Krumm, Jean Daemicke, Elizabeth Hoffmann, Margaret Schalm, Ruth Menish.

Evelyn Friedman, violin pupil of Ralph Michaelis, substituted for Helen Koeler and gave a temperamental interpretation of the Adagio and Allegretto from the Concerto by Seitz.

Margaret Schalm gave a technically perfect reading of Grieg's "Death of Ase" and the Spinning Song of Bohm.

Intelligent and effective playing marked Jean Daemicke's rendition of Rubinstein's Romance in E flat, while Ruth Menish was properly delicate in Minuet from the Third French Suite (Bach).

Elizabeth Pigall played with authority a Beethoven Sonata.

Elizabeth Hoffmann, a beguiling youngster, essayed the brilliant Mozart Sonata in G. Her tiny fingers mastered the Mozart work with true regard for the possibilities of the composition.

The afternoon closed with a fanciful version of orchestra playing by the "Kindersinfonie," with Miss Loudon at the baton; Evelyn Friedman, first violin; Wilbur Piske (pupil of Hans Hess), violoncello, and Elizabeth and Josephine Pigall, piano, assisted by various other members, making a very lifelike orchestral ensemble.

STAGE OF THE EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD CLASSROOMS IN THE McCLURG BUILDING

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD SUMMER SCHOOL IN CHICAGO

Effa Ellis Perfield opened her annual three weeks' Summer session Monday morning in the McClurg Building.

One Summer school is usually enough for the average musician and pedagogue to conduct, especially after a busy teaching season such as Mrs. Perfield has had in New York. But instead of a vacation she will personally conduct three Summer sessions.

Mrs. Perfield is a born teacher and a thoroughly equipped pedagogue. She understands the psychology and science of presentation, and her large clientele of teachers all over the United States, who in turn represent a student class of about 75,000, prove that her influence is felt throughout the country. She believes in individual development not only in music, but along all lines, and she says the music teacher who only teaches music is not worth while. She teaches entirely from principle, thus making it possible for the individual to compile his own rules. The three "educational senses," as she calls ear, eye and touch, are one of her strongest points of attack. She proves that feeling through these senses supplies a stimulus for musical thinking and musical drill that makes for musicianship; and, what is more, the "music tests" given by pupils who were originally monotones compel belief that the Effa Ellis Perfield Pedagogy contains a valuable "kernel" that teachers cannot afford to miss.

Tuesday, July 16, at 10 a. m., and also Saturday, July 20, at 10 a. m., Effa Ellis Perfield will give a talk on the three educational senses and show the results of her pedagogy by using pupils of teachers from Aurora, Joliet, Kankakee and Quincy, Ill. Teachers and mothers and students are invited.

A STIRRING CELEBRATION OF THE FOURTH OF JULY IN NEW YORK

By JOSEPH DE VALDOR

Old Glory waved brilliantly not only "over here," but "over there," too. Every corner of the world displayed the glorious Stars and Stripes. I mean the world which knows the significance of freedom and democracy. Never in the history of the world has America been feted as on Independence Day of the eventful year of 1918, and the day is not far when we will glorify another unique event—"Peace, obtained by resplendent victory over the foes of mankind." From the Atlantic to the Pacific in our continent, from the British Isles to our sister republic France, from brave Italy to Salonica, Old Glory waved in the midst of cannonading coupled with the singing of millions. For the Fourth of July was not only America's day, but that of the entire universe, bleeding from the hands of a criminal, ruthless enemy, who shall receive his punishment from the nations holding the balance of Justice.

We will not dwell upon the celebration of New Yorkers from a national point of view—the dailies have given full accounts—but will content ourselves by making a record of what the great artists of the present day have done through their wonderful meeting at the stadium of the City College of New York.

Schumann-Heink, Anna Fitziu, Tamaki Miura and Lucien Muratore Cheered

When the speech of Secretary of the Navy Daniels was concluded, that democratic, unaffected, simple woman, Schumann-Heink, gave forth her voice to 15,000 listeners, and afterward an uproar of enthusiasm greeted her. The field sent echoes of notes which in power and volume must have reached Potsdam. That glorious organ of hers, in spite of years of singing, has never lost its brilliance, polish and ringing quality. The immense size of the stadium never disturbed her; every sound was a singing and musical note. I have heard many artists render the Southern melodies, but never did they touch the heart—never have the feelings of the North combined so splendidly with the voice of the South—as on this occasion.

Schumann-Heink gave us many a thrill when she sang "When Our Boys Come Home," and her own eyes showed tears, for the great singer has her own three boys fighting "over there" against the Maniac of Wilhelmshaven. The orchestra couldn't begin the overture to "William Tell" in due time, as the ovation lasted for several minutes.

Then came the dainty little songstress from the land of the chrysanthemum, Mme. Tamaki Miura, and after the rendition of the Mikado's anthem she sang "Un bel di," from "Mme. Butterfly," in which role she excels.

The charming and beautiful songstress Anna Fitziu gave us a few minutes of pleasure when she sang "The Star Spangled Banner."

Last but not least, the superb Lucien Muratore sent out a message which moved the listeners to the point of enthusiasm. He stood on the platform like the man who is ready to fling his defiance at the enemy. His fiery, vibrating "Marseillaise" brought the huge crowd to its feet. His "Sombre et Meuse" was the climax of an ovation which echoed through the vast stadium.

FLORENCE MACBETH

Reprint from the English Speaking World, June, 1918:

"Miss Florence Macbeth, a Chicago opera star, has done more to aid recruiting in New York and New Jersey than any other one woman. When she sings 'Your King and County Need You,' only the very craven can resist the call."

MASON SLADE

On last Monday, Mason Slade, organist and director of music at Christ Church, Woodlawn, left Chicago to fulfill an all-Summer tour of the cantonments, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

He took with him Benjamin Bridge, the excellent boy soprano, and two other boy soloists.

The trip will extend as far west as Denver and as far south as Louisville.

AGNES PETERSON AND PUPILS

A very choice evening was that furnished by Agnes Peterson at the Adam Schaaf Recital Hall on Monday. The circumstances were unusually fortuitous as to weather and leisure, and the audience was so cordial and responsive that the ensuing pleasures were intensified.

It is not often that a successful teacher includes in her capacities so well balanced a trio of accomplishments as Miss Peterson evidenced, for she presented two admirably schooled piano pupils, she played the orchestral part of a Weber Concerto on a second piano, and she sang the elaborate Delilah aria from Saint-Saens' "Samson" and a group of simpler ballads, and did them all with studied authority, finesse and the ease and poise to make them effective.

There is more than a hint in her making use of more than one side of her musical equipment. It goes without saying that her intelligent use of her singing voice is an advantageous aid in making her fingers sing as well. And she has an eye to the values of humor as a lubricant in musical development. She phrased with such distinctive neatness and archness the "Philosophy" of Emmell that not a word of its message was overlooked by her or lost on her audience. The voice is not large, but it is sweet and pure, and musicianship is evinced throughout. She had the advantage of capital accompaniments from Harmon H. Watt, and he figured twice (also as composer) in the program's detail.

"Perdita" is a bit of a coquette as presented by Priscilla Carver. In passing, the original Priscilla Alden was one also, for she was the one who asked poor John why he didn't speak for himself instead of the doughty Miles Standish.

Raymond Dvorak brought out the effervescent charm of Mr. Watt's "Springtide," and both numbers have vivid atmosphere and true musical worth.

Miss Peterson had every reason to feel gratified at the showing made by the two pupils who gave most of the program. Miss Alden, on first hearing, seems gifted in unusual measure along the lines of sentiment and a feeling for colors of soft and delicate texture and a facility in blending them for graceful pictures. She sensed the poignancy of that melody in the Chopin Funeral March without in the least submitting to any impulse to make it sentimental. In the rather obvious embroidery of the Weber Concerto she had speed, facility and clarity at command.

It is gratifying to observe the careful and rounded expansion of young Dvorak, who had been in these careful hands a goodly while. His progress in technical prowess is notable and he has speed and neatness at his side for contrast. The emotional and interpretative portions are not passed by. He was very effective in the Scriabine Nocturne for left hand; did the Rubinstein Staccato Etude brilliantly, and coped successfully with the exactness of the No. 2 Rhapsodie of Liszt. He has the qualifications which entitle him to hope for a place of moment in his full maturity.

KURT DONATH AT THE LITTLE THEATER

The annual spring opera evening by the pupils of Kurt Donath was given on Sunday evening at the Little Theater, the scene of former triumphs. Much speculation was heard on all sides as to how and what was to be given. The operas proper were preceded by two vocalists and a violin solo.

Myrtle Stuart was girlishly sweet in her idea of Alicia Scott's "Within the Garden of My Heart." Not only has she a good tonal quality, but she has brains to carry the number she uses to success.

James Malecki, perhaps the best boy soprano in this town, sang in clear, steady tone the sacred "Ave Maria" (Mascagni), disclosing accurate enunciation and musicianly temperament.

The assisting soloist was Christine Nisted, violinist, who played with beauty of tone, certainty of feeling and musical spirit. The first opera was Puccini's "The Bohemians," or, as it is most commonly known, "La Boheme." The excerpt was from the first act, where Mimi comes to Rodolpho's rooms to borrow a light for her candle and the gay author engages her in conversation, telling her of himself and his ambition. When he asks her her name, she answers naively, "They call me Mimi." More talk follows and in its course Mimi discovers she has lost her key. Rodolpho joins in the search and, when Mimi is busily engaged searching the other side of the room, he mischievously blows out the candle after having found the key. In the moonlight they spoon; finally, urged by the artist model, they go to join his friends in their rounds of merriment that Christmas eve, he first extracting her promise to return—perhaps. This delightful scene afforded Mildred Nisted the opportunity of some splendid dramatic action and Mr. Donath to appear as the gay Lothario of charming demeanor and golden voice. His solo work and duo with Miss Nisted were constantly a delight.

Verdi's popular version of "Camille"—"La Traviata"—depicting the meeting of Violetta and Alfredo, came next. The scene deals with the budding love of the Parisian demimonde for the young son of a marquis, the passionate love scene and the final sending him away, when she realizes her weakened physical condition warrants rest rather than gaiety.

Harriet Beckert, as Violette, was a good choice and the aria, "Ah fors e lui," enabled her to indulge in some coloratura work. Mr. Donath was altogether accurate as Alfredo.

The mythical legend, "Lohengrin" (Wagner), was given in English. It is to be regretted that this splendid work is now and must justly so be taboo on our list of operatic entertainments, but when it is done in English it loses some of its mystification, but none of its beauty.

The Knight of the Holy Grail, who comes to the ancient court under the name of Lohengrin, is a sort of a superhuman person, whose existence among the mortals depends wholly upon his keeping unknown his true identity. He falls in love with the charming Elsa, who, in turn, loves him for himself, until spurred on by the scheming Ortrud, who tries unsuccessfully to fathom his mysterious lineage.

In the bridal chamber, after the bridesmaids have sung the immortal "Wedding Song," she replies to his passionate "Alone at last," "Who are you?" Again and again she presses the question, till at last sorrowfully he tells her he is the Knight of the Grail, knowing that the words seal his fate and that he must depart at once, leaving the lovely Elsa in a swoon as he disappears.

All the features of the Wagner score were rejuvenated in the singing of Hertha Berg and Mr. Donath. Miss Berg was dainty and compelling in turn, sweet girlishness she skilfully blended with awakened womanhood, and the dramatic power of her voice proved a gorgeous asset in her quest of knowledge.

Mr. Donath was by far the best as Lohengrin. He lent his statuesque physique, sonorous voice and dramatic ability to make the knight a dominating figure.

The national anthem closed the evening's entertainment, sung by a picked chorus of students, the audience joining in on the tail end.

Grace Grove, though unseen, was very much heard in her excellent accompaniments. A sterling assistant is Miss Grove and a good musician. Mr. Donath officiated for the first three numbers.

THE CHICAGO LADIES QUARTET

Alice Bell Watts, first soprano; Nina Maud Rea, second soprano; Frances Carey-Libbe, first alto, and Byrde Kitson-Schwarz, second alto, sang at the South Congregational Church, Drexel boulevard and Fortieth street, June 23 and June 30, and gave a fine account of themselves.

This is a comparatively new quartet, having been organized only last year, but it has already fulfilled a number of engagements and has several booked to fill in the near future. There should be a large field here for such a combination, as there are not many lady quartets doing city work, and the above have been well received. They are working under the direction of a fine coach, Albert Cotsworth.

CHARLES E. LUTTON REPEATS THE BURLEIGH SPIRITUALS

So great was the impression made when Charles E. Lutton sang the Negro Spirituals at the Northwestern University School of Music last Fall that he was requested to repeat the program as the First Alumni Recital before the Summer School, the event taking place last Wednesday evening in the presence of a fine audience.

Mr. Lutton is almost sui generis in his skill in the treatment of these songs, for, maintaining all the drollery and the occasional flashes of humor they contain, he yet senses properly the deep religious feeling in the songs and never for one moment descends to burlesque or buffoonery.

His voice was in excellent condition last Wednesday evening, and not only did he sing the Burleigh songs with all the ardor and fervor of last Fall, but he actually improved them, which is indeed saying much; for readers of Music News at the time of the first recital will recall the fact that he was worthy at that time of unstinted praise.

The accompaniments were skillfully played by Russell Van Dyke Morgan.

Preluding the Spirituals, Mr. Lutton sang "Confutatis Maledictus" from Verdi's Requiem, and afterward gave so exhilarating a rendition to "The Floral Dance" that two encores were imperative, the first being "Zummersetshire," in the inimitable Lutton style, and the second, "Don't Caere" (Carpenter), also done with striking effect.

Just after the Spirituals an encore was also necessary, and Mr. Lutton chose, wisely and well, to sing "Ma Black Rose," which he did delightfully.

THE HERMAN DEVRIES STUDIOS

The summer season of 1918 in the Devries Studios establishes a record for this astonishing pair of singing teachers, for whom the calendar seems to mark no ebb of disciples. Since Mr. and Mrs. Herman Devries opened their studios in 1911 in the Fine Arts building, has there been no such constant attendance as during the present summer course. Pupils have come for summer tuition all the way from Los Angeles and Texas, Kansas, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Nebraska, et al. are represented by diligent natives busily "cramming" during their vacations. The studios must, therefore, remain open all summer.

ATTRACTIVE NEW HOME FOR THE BUSH CONSERVATORY

The opening of the new building of the Bush Conservatory was the outstanding feature of the commencement week this year. President Kenneth M. Bradley has long been ambitious to have a building occupied exclusively by the Bush Conservatory because of the marked individuality of such an institution and the greater service such equipment could render both faculty and pupils.

The splendid structure on Dearborn avenue and Chestnut street, made possible by the remarkable growth of the Bush Conservatory in recent years, is the first building in Chicago to bring all the activities of this large music school under one roof.

The building is located in the new educational district of the north side, near the big Catholic College for Priests, a million dollar edifice nearing completion, a short distance from the University School for Girls, on the Lake Shore Drive, and the Moody Institute, near several of the most beautiful churches in Chicago and the Newberry Library, an environment inviting to study and proper recreation by the pupils of the school. The street is quiet and removed from the noise of cars and traffic, and yet convenient to transportation.

The building itself is a large five-story structure which houses every activity of the conservatory—studios, recital hall, offices and student dormitories. On the first floor are the offices of the president and secretary, reception and cloak rooms, and stenographic room. The walls, finished in a cheerful yellow, combined with mission oak furniture and woodwork, make a most attractive impression on entrance to the building. In the reception room is the beautiful Westminster chimes clock, the gift of the faculty at the opening of the building.

The elevator and stairway lead to the second floor, where are the parlors, dining-room and two of the artist studios. Here one notices with pleasure the spacious halls, tasteful furnishing and decoration of the rooms, and the beautiful pictures. One especially attractive room is the parlor of the dormitory students, where they may receive their guests. The beautiful decorations, the white woodwork, the dainty lace curtains and luxurious furniture give a most pleasant, homelike feeling to the room.

The next floor above is the studio floor, where the artist faculty of the school have large, light studios for their teaching. Not all the teaching is done here, however, as some additional studios and recital halls have been retained in the Bush Temple of Music, where the conservatory was so long located.

The three upper floors of the building are devoted to the dormitories for the young lady students, for which Bush Conservatory has long been famous. Here the rooms are delightful, airy, spacious and attractive, with dainty wallpapers and excellent furniture. Telephones are in every room, and each room has outside exposure with plenty of air and sunlight. There are two baths on every floor, and running water in many of the rooms. The electric elevator gives immediate access to the upper floors.

Every convenience is afforded the resident students, and the home atmosphere pervading the institution is delightful. The dean is a woman of culture and refinement, widely traveled, and keenly interested in the welfare of the young women under her charge.

Such an equipment for a school of music would be purposeless without a faculty of notable artists and a real school atmosphere, and in these respects Bush Conservatory has long been pre-eminent. Such names are on the faculty as Edgar Nelson, one of America's foremost musicians, who through his achievements has risen to be associate director of this great institution, where he was at one time a student; Charles W. Clark, the famous American baritone; Mme. Julie Rive-King, of international reputation as one of America's notable pianists; Richard Czerwonky, former concert master of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, and favorite pupil of that maestro, Joachim Moses Boguslawski, the pianist, and Hardy Williamson, tenor, who are recent additions to the faculty. The group of artist teachers of the school also includes Herbert Miller, the distinguished baritone; Edgar Brazelton, foremost among normal teachers; Mme. Justine Wegener, Bertha Beeman, and many others.

But again the test of a school lies not in equipment nor in artist faculty, but in the excellence of the training and the performance of its pupils and the kind of school atmosphere and environment that are maintained; in other words, the conditions that surround and help to develop the pupil's talent and individuality. The six commencement programs just completed give ample evidence of the thorough, conscientious teaching done at the institution, and the careful development of the talent and individuality of the pupils. "To equip the pupil for a life-work" is the motto of both artist-teacher and assistant, and the results of this thorough and earnest training in the beginners and advanced students alike are clearly demonstrated in the successes made by the Bush Conservatory pupils when they take up professional work.

With its excellent equipment in the new building and the unsurpassed faculty of notable artists, the reservations already received for the fall indicate that Bush Conservatory will have next season the largest classes in the history of this progressive institution.

GEORGE R. GARNER

This young American tenor delights to advertise himself as "the American colored tenor," and is making a gallant effort to prove in his own person that his race is one that can excel signally in the music field.

He believes in the finest and most thorough of preparation and, therefore, his good natural voice and fine musical perceptions have received training at the distinguished hands of Kurt Donath, Herman Devries, Adolph Muhlmann and Hans Schroeder.

He graduated at the Chicago Musical College this Spring and has appeared at that institution in concert repeatedly throughout the year.

On July 1, he represented the colored people of Chicago (in music) at the great Republican convention held at the Coliseum, when his success was so great that he was compelled to give the only encore allowed during the evening.

Previous to this (in June) he was a great success as soloist at the National Security League meeting at the Auditorium, and last November he scored a triumph in a recital in which he was presented by the Indianapolis Choral Society at Indianapolis for the benefit of local institutions.

In 1915 he gave a recital at Trinity Auditorium in Los Angeles, under the auspices of Messrs. Selectman, Behymer and Graham, when the immense seating capacity of this place was entirely filled and 700 extra chairs had to be placed on the stage.

Mr. Garner is director of the Polyphonic Choral Union of Chicago, a chorus of 125 voices, and has appeared with them as soloist fourteen times, among the number being programs at Abraham Lincoln Center and before the Chicago Woman's Club.

On July 15 he goes on tour as special soloist with the Chautauqua Jubilee Singers, under the auspices of the Midland Concert Company.

EMMA ROBERTS

When one enumerates the times Emma Roberts has sung with big orchestras and at festivals, and places that number in comparison with the one and one-half years since she made her debut, it is evident she is a singer of marked ability. During the period referred to Miss Roberts has sung with the New York Symphony, the Russian Symphony, the Cincinnati Symphony, the Detroit Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, the Chicago Symphony, the Philadelphia Symphony, the St. Louis Symphony, the New Haven Symphony Orchestra of New Haven, Conn., the Apollo Club in Chicago, and the following great festivals: Litchfield County, at Norfolk, Conn.; Ann Arbor (Mich.) Spring Festival; at Springfield, Ohio, Ithaca and Lockport, N. Y., and at the great Bethlehem Bach Festival at Bethlehem, Pa. Miss Roberts was especially chosen for the last named on account of her splendid rendition of Bach music. In fact, she is considered one of the best interpreters of Bach, and especially delights in studying this composer, always finding something new in his works. In the Autumn she will sing a special program at the All-American Worcester Festival. Miss Roberts has not yet given out her program for this occasion, but those who know her intimately have a look of holding an interesting secret; for Miss Roberts is gifted with knowing how to arrange interesting programs entirely new and of great value to the musical world.

Miss Roberts is an American from the Bluegrass region of Kentucky and impresses one immediately as being above the average in intellect, having finished a college education before taking up her professional musical career.

Miss Roberts' voice is a clear contralto, having an unusually brilliant quality, which enables her to produce a tone color not often found with the contralto, and the richness of her tone coloring is generally commented upon by all who hear her.

Since the close of her very busy season she has been giving much of her time to singing in the camps and at other patriotic places where the soldiers and sailors are gathered together. Later she will take a short vacation before beginning the next season's engagements.

Being a student of several languages, Miss Roberts has acquired a wonderful diction, and her songs in Russian were very highly praised by the Russian Musical Association of Detroit when she sang before it. In arranging the program of the Folk Songs of the Allies she used manuscript copies from the New York Library, which had to be photographed in order to give a copy from which to study.

There are many native American singers of American parentage, but none of whom the nation should be prouder than of Emma Roberts.

REPORT OF THE MINNESOTA MUSIC TEACHERS' CONVENTION HELD IN ST. PAUL, MINN.

By MYRTLE WEED

The seventeenth annual convention of the association opened Tuesday, June 25, with headquarters at the Saint Paul Hotel. The opening session held on the roof garden of the hotel opened at 2 p. m. with the singing of "America." Mr. Hamlin Hunt, president, in dealing with his subject, "The Musician in the Community," which he referred to as a problem for a statesman, emphasized the need of co-operation and service in view of the tragedy of recent events. Recognition was given the work being done by the American Friends of Musicians in France, headed by Walter Damrosch. Surely we should answer the call to give to so worthy a fund, for this is one of the many ways we can assist in keeping our nation steady.

Mayor L. C. Hodgson, better known perhaps as "Larry Ho," the writer, gave the address of welcome for St. Paul. He sounded the note of co-operation, as did the president, Mr. Hunt. By way of example, he referred to the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra; how, in that organization, success depends upon the team work, the harmony of the individuals. As to the important function of music in the national purpose, he said, in part, "If there ever was a time that we need the spirit of music, it is now, when there is so much discordance, strife and confusion. In building a finer spirit of human life, music gives something far higher than pleasure—a higher order of harmonious living from day to day, which makes up the beauty of living."

Mrs. Malcolm McMillan, contralto of St. Paul, and Mr. McMillan at the piano were next heard in a short recital. The following group was given: "Voce di Donna" from "La Gioconda" (Ponchielli), "In a Garden" (R. H. Woodman), "Expectancy" (La Forge), "In Flanders Fields" (Bergen) and "Spring Song" (Malcolm McMillan). "Sea Ghosts" (Malcolm McMillan) was also given as an encore.

Though of wide range, Mrs. McMillan's voice is of true contralto quality and her enunciation is a delight, perfect at all times.

The "Spring Song," written by Mr. McMillan, is convincing proof of this composer's unusual ability. It was sung with joyous exultation—a song of triumph and a most fitting climax to the group.

Miss Grace Boutelle of Minneapolis had as her subject, "Musical Battalions." She spoke of community music as a direct reinforcement to our men at the front. Three or four years before the war the movement of preparing to do a part in the mobilizing, putting forth the best equipment, came. The musician was given the credit of having the faculty of analyzing more clearly than any other profession and of being the quickest person to discern the signs of the times. The thing to do is to continually find new things; composers and authors, it was suggested, should get together on the matter of camp music, produce something in the way of a melodrama, introduce music as the Greeks did folk music. Then there are part songs. Dancing plays an important part and there is some very admirable ragtime. Why can't we write good dance music? was a point in question. It is said music adds five miles to the marching power of any battalion.

"Our marching orders have come—let us all go forward!"

Mrs. Harry Palmer's most interesting talk on "Music and the Soldier" has been much in demand at this time. In her general comments on the part music has played with the soldier, she referred to the Spanish-American war, when "There's a Hot Time in the Old Town" was sung so much in Cuba that it was thought to be our national anthem.

The systematic training in singing that is now a definite part of the curriculum of the soldier and sailor was originated by Mr. B. Hammond. The immediate response that this met shows the great achievement that is going forward in the thirty-eight different cantonments, where the song leaders in the mass singing are training others to be song leaders in turn. Someone has said, "They are getting ready for that saengerfest in Berlin if all the singers in America break their golden throats." Major-General Wood believes our boys should be trained to sing, as well as to use rifles. Everything is sung, from the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" to "Tipperary." It helps to unify the different sections of the country, and then at times to keep up the spirit of the wounded. As a most inspiring moment, Mrs. Palmer spoke of the singing as the Tuscania went down, "Where Do We Go from Here, Boys, Where Do We Go from Here?"

Extracts from letters and various stories, showing that the soldier really is singing and what music means to him, were given. All of which goes to show that music is no longer a luxury, but a necessity. "It is no longer art for art's sake, but art for life's sake," she said.

It was said our bands are much fewer in instruments and players than continental bands. General Pershing is eager to have instruments sent. Players are classed under three heads—good, indifferent and poor—but none are turned away.

Words of some trench and marching songs were given and the infinite possibilities spoken of as a result of this music of the soldier on American music.

Mr. Frederick W. Mueller, secretary of the association in charge of music at Fort Snelling, the Willys-Overland building and the University Farm, spoke on what soldiers like to sing, and how sometimes you couldn't get them to stop, they sing with such will, vim and vengeance. They like good music, as well as ragtime, according to Mr. Mueller.

For the evening program the Brahms "Requiem" was given at the House of Hope, Presbyterian Church, by the chorus choir of Westminster Church, Minneapolis, augmented to forty voices, with Harry Phillips, director and baritone; Clara Williams, soprano; Alma Johnston Porteous, contralto; Walter Mallory, tenor, and Hamlin Hunt, organist. The work opens with the chorus, "Blessed Are They That Mourn." The second number was particularly impressive, "Behold, All Flesh Is as Grass." The fugal close was finely done, as well as the fugues in the next number, "Lord, Make Me to Know," with baritone solo. "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place" and the fifth number, "Ye Now Are Sorrowful," with soprano solo, are beautifully melodious by way of contrast. The chorus, "Here on Earth We Have No Continuing Place," is a powerful climax to the work, and after the tremendous double fugue, "Thou Art Worthy" subsides, the number, "Blessed Are the Dead Which Die in the Lord," is a quiet and impressive close. The fugues and mighty choruses contained in this work make exacting demands on a chorus, and the most satisfactory performance that was given attests to the fine training of this choir and the highly artistic work of which they are capable. It would be interesting, indeed, to hear the work again with orchestral, as well as organ accompaniment.

Following the "Requiem," a reception in charge of Jessica DeWolf was held in the church parlors, with the Schubert Club and local committee as hostesses.

At the Wednesday morning session, Mr. G. A. Thornton of St. Paul, dean of the Minnesota Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, read a paper on "The Organ Accompaniment of the Church Service." Music News has secured this paper and will print it later in entirety.

Mr. G. Schoettle of Minneapolis, in his paper on "The Importance of Harmony," said in part: "Not until the discovery of harmony did we have music as we understand it today. A teacher should understand the construction of his art. Its construction and message should hold no secrets from him, otherwise his teaching is camouflage. Musical construction, as the basis of musical interpretation, sets the matter of theory before us on the basis of its most logical and necessary claims to music teachers of whatever instrument. No music teacher should fail to point out the underlying structural scheme and contents of a composition. This demands thorough training in musical theory and counterpoint.

"Some few fundamentals are of basic necessity: First, to think in tone; that is, to think melody and harmony constructively, as he thinks out a composition in English. Second, to recognize by ear any series of tones in melodic succession or in harmonic combination. Third, to obtain when hearing a composition fairly definite conception of its formal structure. And fourth, to write music—to be sure only of simple character—correctly.

"There is no end to the variety of application to which the principles of these subjects may be put. They become the means, once we have grasped them, of looking at the composer's work from his standpoint and of understanding and thoroughly appreciating the many beauties and the message contained in every creation of real musical art."

Miss Margarethe Petterson, pianist of St. Paul, was heard in the following group: Rhapsody, F Sharp Minor (Von Dohnanyi), Intermezzo, Opus 118, No. 6 (Brahms), Aeolus (Gernsheim), Prelude, F Sharp Minor (Chopin) and Scherzo, B Minor (Chopin). Miss Petterson is an artist of distinction. She plays with a facility at all times and a variety of tone color. Her playing of the Scherzo in B Minor was most satisfactory and convincing. The singing parts were exquisite in tonal loveliness.

Miss Emily Minnet of Minneapolis, in the Upton demonstration she gave, was exceedingly interesting. Miss Minnet ably demonstrated Mr. Upton's system of revising music so as to come within the scope of the child's mind; the principle of fundamentally hearing, by reading chords from the top note down, and the process of visualizing the notes—from eye to ear, from ear to hand. Hymns were played in various keys, stated by persons in the audience, and to show the consecutive fashion in which they think, one pupil was asked to play the same, crossing hands. A very good example in absolute pitch was given by one girl of the class—a series of chords was played by her teacher and she repeated each chord at a second piano some distance from her. Not only are the results gained in this system remarkable, but the short time in which they are attained is quite astounding.

A paper, entitled "Some Things," by Mr. Carl Jensen was read by Mr. James Lang.

This was followed by a demonstration of keyboard harmony by Miss Margaret Dougherty of Minneapolis.

The afternoon recital was given by Jessie Weiskopf, pianist of Minneapolis; Aurelia Wharry, St. Paul, and Katherine Hoffman, accompanist, St. Paul.

Miss Weiskopf opened the program with the Ballade in F Minor and the two Etudes, Opus 10, Nos. 9 and 12, by Chopin. Miss Weiskopf has technic in abundance and is possessed of unusual gifts. The Chopin Revolutionary Etude was played with astonishing facility, though with undue accents, the last passage being taken in octaves and played in true bravura style. Later on the program Miss Weiskopf played Giga e Variazone, Opus 91, No. 2, by Raff. The ten variations of this number showed the pianist's musicianship, and she held the interest of her audience throughout. To the insistent applause, she responded with a short encore.

Miss Wharry sang in place of Miss Mildred Langtry, the Minneapolis contralto. "Amarilli" (Cassini), "Ogni Sarato" (Gordigiani) and "Canzone Venetiana" (Brogi) made up her first group. These were sung with clarity of tone, excellent diction and fine artistry. Harriet Ware's "Mammy's Song," as an encore, was delightfully sung. A second group by Miss Wharry brought out some favorites as sung by her, "Sleep Then, Ah, Sleep" (Branscombe), "Il Neige" (Bemberg) and "Heigho, the Sunshine" (Phillips); Cadman's "Land of the Sky-Blue Water" was used as an encore.

The convention dinner was held in the Casino at the St. Paul at 6:30, followed by a program in the Palm Room. An operetta, "Cupid's Night Out," by Stanley Avery and company of Minneapolis, was clever in the extreme. Solo dances by Lorna Dunn of St. Paul and a one-act play, "A Husband in Clover," by the John Seaman-Garns players, were both enjoyable. The day was ended with "The Star Spangled Banner."

At the Thursday morning session J. McClintock of St. Paul gave a very interesting talk on "Tone Production." R. Buchanan Morton of St. Paul read a paper on "The Law of Key Release." The speaker's enunciation made it difficult to follow. A few excerpts are here given:

"Regarding dogma as the curse of art, the statements made, however dogmatic they may sound, are not said in any dogmatic spirit. Referring to the seeming disagreement that exists among artists, that very able writer on the esthetic, Willard Huntington von Wright, says: 'Though two great artists differ radically concerning art, the fundamental basis of art form is recognized and understood. They can and must be judged by the same basic standard. They differ only as to method.' What is true of art in the broad sense is true also of all the lesser arts. Thus piano playing and teaching is merely a 'lesser art.' The art of making a tone on the piano begins when the finger is brought into contact with the key to move that key, and is absolutely determined slightly before the hammer reaches the string; or, to be exact, when the hammer flies off the hopper. The act of touch or tone-making does not begin when the fingers or arms are raised above the keyboard and not in connection with the key. In other words, the keys are, or should never be, struck.

"According to this axiom, it would appear that any pre-movement could have no bearing on the tone quality or general technic. Piano playing is not what our German teachers had us believe: merely a question of knocking down keys. The rising key has a greater influence on technic than the descending key. It is not like a game of ninepins: the more ninepins knocked down and the quicker and harder they can be knocked down, the greater glory to the one who knocks them down.

"The fundamental fault of all technical faults is stiffness—muscular conflict. The relaxed, controlled muscles make the action, either in playing or singing, a physical joy. A relaxed, responsive muscular system enables one to go to any length in our technic within the limits of our talent."

A recital was given at 10:30 by Miss Beatrice Troendle, soprano; Miss Helen Sklenar, pianist, and Miss Justine Herder, pianist, all of the College of St. Teresa, Winona. "O List, the Trill in Golden Throat," from Victor Herbert's "Natoma"; Nightingale Song (Korsakoff) and Bell Song from "Lakme" (Delibes) were Miss Troendle's first group. Liszt's Hungarian Fantasy was played by Miss Sklenar with dazzling brilliancy and vigorous style. The convincing mastery of her own powers which she possesses added immeasurably to the success of her performance.

Miss Justine Herder supplied the orchestral parts on the second piano. She pos-

Twenty-third Annual Convention of the Missouri Music Teachers' Association, Assisted by Illinois Musicians

By MAY BIRDIE DITZLER

The twenty-third annual convention of the Missouri Music Teachers' Association was held in St. Louis, June 25, 26 and 27, with the weather very hot and sultry.

All sessions of the convention, except the Wednesday concerts, were held in the auditorium of the Sheldon Memorial; the other recitals were held on the St. Paul steamer.

The convention opened on Tuesday morning with Herbert Krumme of St. Joseph presiding.

In place of Mayor Kiel, Harland Bartholomew made the welcoming address. The response was by the president of the M. M. T. A., Herbert Krumme.

Mrs. A. F. Duysing, president of the Kansas City club, read a paper written by J. Lawrence Erb of Urbana, Illinois, on "The Relation of the State to the National Association." This paper offered many fine suggestions, which enthused the Missouri association to try to carry them out in the national association, which will be held here December 30 and 31 and January 1. This was followed by a reception in the auditorium of Sheldon Memorial.

The afternoon session opened at 2 o'clock with a business session, Mr. Krumme presiding, followed by a musical program by Stanley Skinner, organist of Springfield, Mo.; Mrs. E. H. Bosse, soprano; Ellis Levy, violinist; Vera Schlueter, pianist; Max Gottschalk, violinist, and Mrs. C. Luyties and Gertrude Maul, accompanists of St. Louis. Mr. Skinner rendered in a most musicianly manner "Melodia" (Reger), "Elves" (Bonnet), "Symphonic Etude" (Bossi). Miss Schlueter pleased the audience with "Novelette" (Schumann), "Nocturne" (Chopin), "Mountain Gnomes" and "Isle of Dreams" (Torjussen), "Polonaise" (MacDowell). Ellis Levy, who has been called to the colors, played charmingly three of his compositions, "Nocturne," "Serenade Espagnole" and "The Ghost Dance," and proved himself a most interesting composer. Mr. Gottschalk gave an excellent rendition of Cecil Burleigh's Concerto. Mrs. Bosse sang with ease and expression "Tes Yeux" (Rabey), "Flanders Field" (Bergen), "What's in the Air Today" (Eden).

Thursday evening at 8:15 the program opened with "Star Spangled Banner," sung by the audience, led by Ethel Hudson, with Teresa Finn at the piano, two St. Louis teachers of public school music. The program was given by the following St. Louis musicians: The Olk-Gray String Quartet; Max Steindel, cellist of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra; Alice Pettingill, Tyrie Lyon, Mrs. C. J. Luyties and Rudolf Gruen, pianists, and Olga Hambuechen, contralto. Mrs. Luyties and Mr. Lyon, who have been playing piano duos at the Missouri Music Teachers' conventions for the last fifteen years, gave a splendid joint interpretation of Arensky's "Third Suite." The Olk-Gray String Quartet, the only ladies' quartet here, consisting of Marie Olk, first violin, Christine McCann, second violin, Ellen Johnson, viola, Agnes Gray, cellist, and Alice Pettingill, pianist, played with artistic insight Longa's Quintet, Opus 3, for piano and strings. Much applause was showered on the ladies and they had to come forward several times and bow their acknowledgments. Max Steindel, who is always a favorite here, as usual won much applause for his rendition of Saint-Saens' A Minor Concerto. Miss Hambuechen sang in excellent style "Nina" (Pergolesi), "A Toi" (Bemberg), "Farewell, Ye Mountains" (Tschaikowsky). She responded with an encore.

Wednesday morning, afternoon and night were gala affairs on board the steamer St. Paul.

Thursday morning at Sheldon Auditorium was devoted to two addresses. "Ought Young People in Missouri Study Music? or, a Plea for High School Credits," by W. L. Calhoun of Joplin. Mr. Calhoun brought out the fact, "If music study in Missouri is to be successful it must be vigorous and sustained during the high school years. What we ask for Missouri is this: Let the local high school, either with or without the sanction of the University, provide a course of study, which shall include music, i. e., theory of music and a major instrument, such as piano or violin. Let this study, pursued under school supervision, have the credit allowed for a major credit, i. e., one-quarter the total number of credits required for graduation. This will release the time and energy required for successful music study during the critical years, from the fourteenth to the eighteenth. It may be objected that so large a credit for music study would crowd out other subjects that are necessary. Necessary for what? For entrance at the university or for useful living. New York City and Greater Pittsburgh do not find it too large—both give a major credit." Then Mary Chase of Chicago gave an illustrated lecture on "Science and Art of Interpretation." It is to be regretted that only twenty-six people heard this talented pianist.

At 2 p. m. we had a most animated business meeting, discussing the examinations for voice, led by William John Hall and violin by Victor Lichtenstein. A livelier time was had when the report of the nominating committee was read that the officers were all men, one of the ladies taking issue that she thought one office should be held by a woman. They patched up the matter by consenting to put some women on committees.

The big things on the Thursday afternoon program were by two St. Louis composers, Max Gottschalk and Rosalie Cale. Quintet for piano and strings by Max Gottschalk, one of the first violins of the Symphony Orchestra, was given its first hearing before a large audience. This difficult and melodious composition consists of four movements—allegro risoluto; romanza, which describes a Sunday morning religious contemplative mood, the minister speaks, etc.; scherzo; finale, allegro marziale. The pianist had much to perform; in fact, it was a piano concerto, and Mr. Gauntlett beautifully performed his part, as he is a most excellent pianist. The performers were Max Gottschalk and C. A. Cale, violins; William Brown, viola; Max Steindel, cellist, and Basil Gauntlett, piano. Mr. Gottschalk was recalled to the stage many times. Following this were two numbers by Mrs. Rosalie Cale, the wife of C. A. Cale, compiler of the Symphony Orchestra program—"Cantibile Affetuso," from violin and piano Sonata, Opus 36, which is a dreamy, affectionate composition suited to Mrs. Cale's warm-hearted temperament, and the "Polonaise in B Flat," Op. 15, which is very difficult technically and was well rendered by her husband on the violin and Mrs. Cale at the piano. Mrs. Cale, too, was recalled to the stage many times. Rufina Bloss of Joplin brought the afternoon program to a close by the rendition of seven Chopin etudes with a finished execution.

Thursday evening's program was given by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, pianist, and Amy Neill, violinist of Chicago. Burton Thatcher, baritone, and Elsie Harthan Arendt, soprano, were to appear on the program, but at the last moment were unable to do so. Mrs. Ryder is very popular with St. Louis audiences and had to respond with many encores. Many in the audience, after the concert, went back to congratulate her for her wonderful renditions. Following is the program:

Prelude and Fugue, D minor.....Arthur Foote
Gigue.....Scarlatti
Five Tribal Songs from the Chippewa Indians
.....Arr. by Th. Otterstrom
Mme. Sturkow-Ryder
Rondo Capriccioso.....Saint-Saens
Miss Amy Emerson Neill
Berceuse.....Balakirew
Three Dreams.....Rebikoff
Polichinelle.....Rachmaninoff
Imps.....Ryder
Mrs. Ryder
La Capriccieuse.....Elgar
Summer Idyl.....Cecil Burleigh
Scherzo Tarantelle.....Wieniawski
Melody.....Chas. Dawes
Miss Neill
The Deserted Sands.....Rhene-Baton
The Spinning Girls of Carantec.....Rhene-Baton
Etude en Forme de Valse.....Saint-Saens
Mrs. Ryder
Star Spangled Banner played by Neill and Ryder.

Many expressed a regret that papers were not read on public school music.

It was voted to hold the next convention at Columbia.

The following officers were elected: President, Herbert Krumme of St. Joseph; vice president, William John Hall of St. Louis; secretary-treasurer, Tyrie Lyon of St. Louis.

FULLER'S SEVENTEENTH CONCERT

BY BLANCHE HARRIMAN

Arthur F. Fuller gave his seventeenth concert in the Gamut Club auditorium, Los Angeles, Cal., Thursday, June 13, 1918. Mr. Fuller has striven to give the public variety, as well as worth in these concerts, and this most recent one was distinctive in that Mr. Fuller gave the entire musical program himself having as his only assistants Alberta Curry Zens, in sympathetic violin obbligatos, and Pauline Allyn Long as piano accompanist.

Several Danishawn dancers completed the program in delightfully graceful dances.

The large and appreciative audience was given a chance in this concert to hear Mr. Fuller to much better advantage; the larger number of vocal and piano selections showing a versatility and comprehensiveness that was a real surprise to even those who attend these concerts regularly.

Fuller's baritone voice is one of rare sweetness, yet possesses a depth and richness, with power to handle even the most difficult phases of vocal work. He is evidently a painstaking and conscientious artist, as his work shows a careful appreciation and calculation of the effects he desires to produce. This is especially noticeable in his phrasing, which he gets over in a really unusual manner.

In his vocal numbers on Thursday's program, he gave the "Prologue" from "I Pagliacci" (Leoncavallo). Though not an opera singer, Fuller brought an operatic atmosphere into this number that removed it far from a tame concert rendtion. His recitative is good and even, his enunciation distinct, and his breath control showed to better advantage in this number, as it requires greater capacity than many other good compositions. Followed an Amy Woodforde-Finden song, "Less Than the Dust." Afterwards, "By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance), with violin obbligato. Also Stickles' beautiful "The Mither Heart," to which Fuller had arranged an obbligato. It is in songs like this and "Your Eyes" (Anderson), that Fuller gets a chance to show the liquid sweetness of his voice. And, personally, I feel that it is a mistake that artists do not more frequently use compositions of this type — restful, soothing songs and sentiments. That audiences appreciate such was shown by their enthusiastic reception of these, their applause bringing Fuller back again and again.

Rubinstein's "The Azra" was probably the best vocal number on the program, in that it is not one which is done to death, and yet gave opportunity for fine display of vocal and dramatic art. Mr. Fuller gave this selection a coloring purely oriental, combined with a pathos that was most enjoyable.

The long-sustained passages of Handel's "Where'er You Walk" from "Semele" were given with an evenness of tone and richness of quality, in direct contrast to a number of other songs following in a lighter vein—humorous numbers—showing us that here is an artist who has not allowed himself to become one-sided in his work, but has ability to swing from depth to lightness, from pathos to gladness, seemingly without effort.

The rest of Thursday's program was given over to piano numbers which showed the same versatility apparent in the vocal program. These included "The Witch," Opus 38, No. 4, by MacDowell; "The Butterfly," by W. C. E. Seeboeck; "Polonaise, in C Sharp Minor," Opus 26, No. 4, Chopin; and "Mazurka de Concert," Opus 50, by Pessard, and a new "Polonaise America," by Carl Moter.

Fuller's technique is good, his tone quality at times rich, full and even; at others as light and dainty as that of a girl. His interpretations are evidently carefully thought out and his effects deliberately planned and attained. There is nothing slipshod about his work—a characteristic too frequently seen these days. Taken altogether, the evening was not only an enjoyable one, but a profitable and educational one, thoroughly appreciated by the enthusiastic audience, and proved that Arthur F. Fuller, is entitled to the place he has won in the hearts of his many admirers.

Holiday Opera at Ravinia

Offenbach and Leoncavallo supplied Independence Day musical fare for the patrons of Ravinia Park. Several scenes from "The Tales of Hoffman," Offenbach's most ambitious musical dramatic work, were presented Wednesday evening, and last night "I Pagliacci," Leoncavallo's lyric tragedy, was sung.

Orville Harrold as Hoffman made light of the trying music of his role, doing some of the best singing that I have ever heard from him. He has the right conception of the wandering poet, his portrayal is romantic and his rendition of the music fervent and temperamental. Mabel Garrison is a charming personality, especially as the mechanical doll Olympia. While formerly she sang this role with possibly greater lyricism, she added a shade more realism to the interpretation Wednesday evening. Some may disagree with her version, but she made a delightful picture and later as Antonia surpassed many of her predecessors by her admirable presentation of the tubercular daughter of Crespel.

In his debut in "Aida" the opening night of the season, Leon Rothier had little opportunity to disclose either his vocal or histrionic powers. He made a decidedly favorable impression, however, in his double roles of Coppelius and Dr. Miracle, Wednesday evening. The music of the doctor, especially, was artistically presented.

Ruth Kuerth, a young Chicago soprano, sang Giulietta, but her apparent nervousness hampered her considerably. She made a pretty appearance, however, and deserves credit for having essayed the role on very short notice. Graham Marr, in his debut this season as Dappertutto, gave a musical recital of the Mirror aria; Daddi was funny in two short roles, and D'Angelo, though somewhat stiff in action, managed a couple of parts commendably. Richard Hageman conducted the opera and dominated the performance. The Fourth of July was celebrated with a concert in the afternoon conducted by Mr. Hageman, and the evening was given over to the entire production of "I Pagliacci." This opera attracted a crowd of some 5,000 and there was much enthusiasm when Sophia Braslau, draped in the United States flag and flanked by soldiers and sailors, began the proceedings by singing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Since opera was made the principal feature of Ravinia almost a decade ago no other season has to its credit such excellent productions as those given so far this year. Every performance has had grand opera quality. As to Claudia Muzio, leading dramatic soprano, opera connoisseurs are satisfied that here indeed is a star. She made the role of Nedda an enthralling one, singing the bird song with wonderful intensity and sweep of tone and acting convincingly. Morgan Kingston's delineation of Canio was a fine success, making the "Lament" vocally and dramatically impressive. Picco scored with his prologue, though later he did not do so creditably. The chorus deserves a word for its good ensemble in the "bell" song. Graham Marr as Silvio sang well.

Grennaro Papi knows his opera scores and puts much life into the performances through his magnetic personality.—Maurice Rosenfeld in Chicago Daily News.

Kimbell—Grant Kimbell was the soloist in Maywood, Ill., the evening of the Fourth of July, in an open air patriotic celebration in the park. Among other things, Mr. Kimbell sang "Freedom for All, Forever," by Hilliam, and "God Be with Our Boys Tonight," by Sanderson. Miss Erma Eggleson supplied very satisfactory accompaniments. The audience was very enthusiastic about Mr. Kimbell's singing, and he was recalled many times, finally responding with encores.

ELIZABETH LEE KELLY

Elizabeth Lee Kelly, a teacher of piano, who has made her home in Chicago only a short time, presented her ten-year-old pupil, Alice Marie Remmey, in a remarkable recital at the Edgewater Beach Hotel on last Sunday afternoon.

In spite of her youth Miss Remmey has excellent technical development and fine musical feeling, and her interpretation of her taxing program proved her own intelligence as well as the careful coaching of her teacher, Miss Kelly.

It is difficult to detail a program when each number is done so well as at this time, but the technical display in the Chopin Etude, Op. 10, No. 5, was certainly remarkable and showed strength and power in abundance, as well as much finish.

The audience was delighted with the work of the young player, and it is the consensus of opinion that one who has accomplished so much by the time she is ten may confidently hope, with a continuation of such good teaching as she has had at the hands of Miss Kelly, to attain to the highest rank of pianism.

The program in full was as follows:

Fugue in D minor ..... Bach
Sonata, Op. 53 ..... Beethoven
Adagio molto
Louree (third cello suite) ..... Bach
Farewell to the Pianoforte ..... Beethoven
Scarf Dance ..... Chaminade
Traumerei ..... Schumann
Music Box ..... Poldini
Menuet in G ..... Paderewski
To a Wild Rose
In Autumn
To a Water Lily
Hexentanz ..... MacDowell
Valse, G flat major
Prelude, A major
Etude, Op. 10, No. 5 ..... Chopin

METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU ANNOUNCEMENT, SEASON 1918-19

The Metropolitan Musical Bureau, Aeolian Hall, New York, which successfully managed the concert tour of Enrico Caruso last year in the middle west, announces that the tenor has again decided to appear in concert under their management.

Based on present bookings, the artists of the Metropolitan Musical Bureau may look forward to an unusually active season. The Grand Opera Quartet, composed of Frances Alda, Carolina Lazzari, Giovanni Martinelli and Giuseppe de Luca, which is being jointly presented by Mr. Charles L. Wagner and the Metropolitan Musical Bureau, has been booked for a tour of twenty concerts opening in Canada on Sept. 25, and continuing until Nov. 2, 1918.

Miss Thelma Given, an American-born pupil of Prof. Auer, will have her American debut at Carnegie Hall on Nov. 3, under the bureau's direction.

Anna Case, the lovely soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, after spending the summer before the motion picture camera, will resume her concert activities in the fall with a transcontinental tour.

Giulio Crimi, the leading Italian tenor of the Chicago Opera Company, is an important addition to the bureau's roster of tenors.

New York recitals, under the management of the bureau, will be given by the following artists: Anna Case, Toscha Seidel, Thelma Given, Nina Morgana, Marvin Maazel, Rafaelo Diaz, and L. T. Grunberg.

In addition to his tour with the quartet, Mr. Giovanni Martinelli will give recitals during a period of four weeks between the middle of February and the middle of March, for which time his managers have been fortunate enough to secure his release from the Metropolitan Opera Company.

The Welsh tenor, Morgan Kingston, will have an intensive concert tour of the northwest by arrangement with the new Ellison-White Bureau of Portland, Oregon.

The Metropolitan Musical Bureau is also planning the annual Spring Festival tour of the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra, under the direction of Richard Hageman.

During the present summer the Metropolitan Musical Bureau is engaged in an important civic and patriotic enterprise under prominent patronage, consisting of a series of open air concerts at the Stadium of the College of the City of New York. A symphony orchestra of ninety musicians with Arnold Volpe, conductor, the Metropolitan Opera House Chorus, under the direction of Giulio Setti, and prominent soloists, are giving concerts nightly to large audiences at a nominal admission fee—soldiers and sailors admitted free.

HUGH PORTER

Hugh Porter, who appeared as a post-graduate at the American Conservatory commencement concert and played with such astonishing success the Guilmant organ Concerto, D Minor, is a pupil of Wilhelm Middelschulte.

Mr. Porter is now fulfilling, very successfully, the position as organist and director of music at the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church, and is actively in the field as a church and concert organist, as well as teacher.

AN INTERVIEW WITH CLEOFONTE CAMPANINI

At least four novelties, among them an opera reflecting the world's present day war spirit and numerous interesting revivals, are included in the plans of Maestro Campanini for the coming season.

"Not until Mme. Raisa has ripened into the singer she is today have I been able to find a worthy interpreter of Bellini's 'Norma,' and not till I have persuaded M. Muratore to sing the Moor in Verdi's 'Otello' could I decide to give the latter work," said Mr. Campanini yesterday. "Among the other revivals will be Halevy's 'La Juive,' with Mme. Raisa in the role of Rachel, an opera that can be looked upon as practically a novelty for the present generation, while it possesses music of the most interesting character; Rossini's 'William Tell,' Meyerbeer's 'L'Africaine,' Ricci's 'Crispino e la Comare,' Donizetti's 'Linda di Chamounix,' and possibly other works.

"As one can readily see, this is quite a formidable list, and every revived opera has a reason for its being brought forward, as it will serve to introduce both new and old artists in roles that appear to have been written in anticipation of their coming into the world. 'William Tell' will be the vehicle for the debut of the new French tenor, of whom I expect a great deal. 'L'Africaine will be the means of presenting to the Chicago public our new Italian tenor, whose voice, I am certain, will create a veritable sensation. 'Linda di Chamounix' and 'Crispino e la Comare' will become part and parcel of Mme. Galli-Curci's repertoire, the former having been the battle horse of Adelina Patti, and the latter one of the favorites of Luisa Tetrazzini.

"Mary Garden will be heard in a revival of Massenet's 'Cleopatre' and in Puccini's 'Tosca.' Carolina Lazzari will essay the role of Delilah in Saint-Saens' 'Samson et Dalilah.' But the list is already quite formidable, and I flatter myself that it contains sufficient interest to whet the operagoers' appetite for the announcements of other new features, an announcement that I shall be able to make within a few weeks.

"As to the names of new artists, I must maintain silence for some time longer, since, although all the arrangements have been completed, the contracts have not as yet arrived, and I am loath to make any announcement of this character unless very positive that no hitch could come anywhere in the negotiations.

"Among the conductors there will be a new figure in the person of Louis Hasselmans, formerly of the Paris Opera Comique. Both Mr. Charlier and Mr. Sturani will continue on their posts, and will share in the work with Mr. Hasselmans.

"This is all that I can say at present in regard to plans for the coming season. We are going ahead with all sails flying, and I expect that the opera-lovers will have little to complain of as to their music diet. Will the public respond as well as in former years, despite the war and the consequent new duties? This is a question that must be decided in the affirmative unless young, tireless, wealthy America should be willing to be put to shame by tired, weary impoverished France, Italy and England. The latter have not permitted the stern necessity of fighting the Huns to sound the death-knell of grand opera, and I see no reason why America should not do likewise, if not much better, having become the haven and refuge of many of the best artists known to the world of today.

"Art is the only true diversion during a world crisis, and I can but repeat the words of some of the wise men in saying that with art neglected our burdens will be the harder to bear. That is why I am optimistic over the outlook, both artistically and financially. That is why I proceed to carry out my ambitious plans for next year, and I know that neither I nor the public will be disappointed."

PERSONAL NOTES ABOUT HALLETT GILBERTE

Hallett Gilberté, distinctively identified with the foremost singers and composers of this country, has done much to raise the standards and merits of American musical art. His own reputation as a composer is well established, and his songs, in particular, are to be found in the repertoires and on the concert programs of the very foremost professional singers.

The songs mentioned on another page of this circular are the latest by Mr. Gilberté, and their charm, distinctive vein and original melodious invention are remarkable in many ways.

Each one is an example of graceful, fluent song writing by a composer who understands to perfection the needs of a singer and the qualifications necessary for an effective concert song. Technically, the songs present no difficulties to either the singer or the pianist. They possess the double advantage, however, of being equally suitable for medium advanced vocalists and advanced concert singers and, in addition, are of genuine value for the studio.

Among the prominent artists who have added these new songs to their repertoire may be mentioned:

Mme. Jeanne Jomelli, Mme. Marie Rappold, Mme. de Vere-Sapio, Mme. Charlotte Lund, Mr. Paul Althouse, Mme. Frederick Gunther, Mme. Benjamin Lathrop, Mme. Minna Kaufman, Mr. Claude Warford, Mme. Laura de Vilmar, Miss Vivian Holt, Mr. W. Dalton-Baker, Mme. Soder-Hueck, Mr. Dudley Buck, Mr. Paul Dufault, Mr. Gardner Lamson, Mr. Edward Brigham, Mme. Sibyl Sammis-MacDermid, Mme. Osborn-Hannah, Mme. Charlotte Guyer-George, Mr. David Bispham, Mr. Allen Hinckley, Mr. Cecil Fanning, Mr. Alexander Heinemann, Mr. Frederick Gunther, Miss Marguerite Dunlap, Mme. Wilhelmina Wright-Calvert, Boston's leading soprano; Mme. Frances Alda, of the Metropolitan Company; Mme. Caroline White, Miss Margaret Keys, Miss Mabel Riegelman, Miss Myrna Sharlow, Miss Christine Miller, Miss Isabel Thorpe, Miss Anna Stephenson, Mr. John Finnegan, Miss Elizabeth Starr, Miss Louise Crowell, Miss Florence Jepperson, Madame Emma Howe Fabri, Mlle. Vera Courtenay, Mable Corlew Smidt, Robert Loren Quait, Orville Harold and others.

MANDY SCHOOL OF MUSIC

On Friday evening, June 28, the Lyon & Healy Recital Hall was filled with an appreciative audience for the recital given by pupils of the Mandy School of Music. It is impossible to give in detail the work of each one appearing on the program, but they all did exceedingly well.

It was a beautifully built and well-chosen program, the piano numbers alternating with the violin. The concertos were played with a great deal of dash and assurance, having the artistic and wonderful support of Mrs. Mandy at the second piano. She also played accompaniments for the violin numbers.

To take the program as a whole, I should say that the work on the piano was rather superior to that of the vast majority. Oliver Burnett, La Vera Nelson and Blenda Sterner deserve special mention, with Virginia Shawhan and Olga Mattas closely following. The violin work was also above the average of students' recitals, and particularly so was that of Anna Takach in the Spanish Dance and Maurice Hibler, who played some Variations, each displaying an unusual amount of technical skill as well as dash and brilliance.

The ensemble class, under the direction of Mr. Mandy, did some very good work.

Louise O. Ford and Bertha W. Hall, pupils of John Loring Cook, each sang a group of songs and were thoroughly enjoyed.

The program follows:

Morning Mood (Peer Gynt Suite) ..... Grieg
Dorothy Sorensen
Cantabile et Bolero ..... Danbe
Charles Hoffman
Spring ..... Carreno
Ethel Gahlbeck
Souvenir de Lubeck ..... Riecken
Chester Sobierajski

BALATKA ACADEMY OF MUSICAL ART

On Saturday evening, June 29, the Balatka Academy of Musical Art gave its commencement exercises in the Auditorium Recital Hall.

This is principally a school for piano, and the work at this time gave proof of the excellent work which is being done in this department. The work of Laurel Malmquist, Erhardt Bergstrasser and Winnie Mae Hornbeck deserves special mention. Miss Anna Schneider, in her own composition, Sonata, displayed considerable talent in writing as well as in her brilliant rendition of the same. She also played excellent accompaniments.

Helen Murray sang the aria "O Mio Fernando" with beautiful tone quality, but somewhat lacking in rhythmic sense.

Other singers on the program were Edith Broman, Nenette Marchand and Charlotte Krause. Miss Marchand has a lovely voice and personality, and she sang the aria from "Herodiade" with good style.

After the program medals and diplomas were awarded by Rev. Carl Nybladk.

The program follows:

Star Spangled Banner ..... Key
The audience is kindly requested to join

ELEANORE CAPPS-HOSTLER

On Tuesday evening, July 2, Eleanore Capps-Hostler furnished the program for the installation of officers of Electric Lodge No. 54, Daughters of Rebekah. Mrs. Hostler's voice is better than ever this year, and her reception upon this occasion amounted to almost an ovation, with flowers in abundance.

Miss Dora M. Owen, dramatic reader, was the assisting artist. Miss Owen is a charming young reader. She is unusually talented, is very versatile, and gives promise of big work in the future. She was also very warmly received.

###

Craven—Carl E. Craven, tenor, will be special soloist at St. James' M. E. Church in a music service under direction of Miss Tina Mac Haines.

###

Stumpf—Mrs. L. C. Stumpf and Miss Aimee Stumpf are spending a part of July at Pelican Lake, Wis.

GERTRUDE CLEOPHAS

Gertrude Cleophas, who made so signal a success in piano recital before the Minnesota State Music Teachers' Association in its recent meeting at Minneapolis, is an artist of remarkable gifts, which have been trained in a thoroughly exceptional way.

For many years a pupil of Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, she had attained definite artistry while still a very young woman, and this remarkable early development was supplemented by years of study abroad, where she was a special favorite of the late Theodor Leschetizky.

GERTRUDE CLEOPHAS

Miss Cleophas, in her various appearances since her return, has delighted her every audience, and her playing at the M. S. T. A. proved to be one of the most distinctive features of the week.

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD

There will be a public demonstration of the Effa Ellis Perfield Method conducted by Mrs. Perfield at the McClurg Building, 218 South Wabash avenue, on Saturday morning, July 13, at 10 o'clock.

VIERLYN CLOUGH

Miss Vierlyn Clough, one of Chicago's younger pianist-teachers, is a remarkably fine technician and virtuoso, and she not only plays well herself, but is able to impart that knowledge to her pupils, as was shown recently at a recital given at Butler House, Belmont and Broadway.

There was in evidence considerable talent and evidence of close application on the part of many who played. There was an occasional slip of memory, but that is pardonable in very young students and can be cured only by thoroughly mastering the composition and with frequent appearances before audiences of greater or less proportions. It is also a good thing to have a knowledge of theory and composition, as that helps one to memorize.

All played well, but perhaps those deserving special mention were Dorothy Powers, a little tot, but who did exceedingly well; Laurence Gegner, Carmen Del Fosse, Elizabeth Bright and Helen Davidson.

The program follows:

March in D flat.....Hollaender
Beth Vollertson and Miss Clough

LOS ANGELES

Since the musical season has closed, the Star talent have been in demand for all kinds of benefits. The Constantino group of opera artists, with the 27th Coast Artillery Band of San Pedro, gave a fine program at the Trinity Auditorium for the Soldiers' Benefit, having a fine audience.

The B'nai B'rith organization gave a performance at the Shrine Auditorium for the Red Cross benefit, there being the Zoellner String Quartette, Leopold Godowsky, virtuoso pianist; Esther Bailey, soprano; Gregor Cherniavsky, Russian violinist; Mme. Anna Sprotte, contralto; also some dancing artists with Ruth St. Denis, making the attractions most interesting and drawing a great audience.

Mr. Jaroslaw de Zelinski and his finished artists were well received and patronized for a Polish endeavor.

Mrs. Thilo Becker, violinist and teacher, presented some exceedingly talented pupils. The Mendelssohn "Trio in D Minor," for piano, violin and cello, the piano being played by Chibley Boyes, Mr. Becker's pupil; Lisbeth and Carolyn le Fevre, the first a cello pupil of Axel Simonsen, and the second a pupil of Mrs. Becker, gave an artistic rendition, as well as the rest of the work done by these teachers.

The MacDowell Circle has been doing splendid promotional work in American Music. Chas. Wakefield Cadman, Carrie Jacobs Bond and Mrs. Graham Putnam are among the leading promoters. Mrs. Emma Porter Mackinson, soprano; Mrs. Lillian Clark, pianist; Mrs. Ethel Lynde, verbal delineator; Miss Grace Freeby, pianist, and Mrs. Bessie Fuhrer-Erb are among the demonstrators of the music compositions. Mr. Arthur Farwell has added much by his great interest in the forward movement of American music.

The Ellis Club gave a special program for the Red Cross and a big sum was raised. Mme. Jornelli was the soloist. The gift of the club's benefits will reach nearly $15,000. Boxes were bought at greatly advanced rates for the Red Cross cause.

The Woman's Symphony gave the closing concert of the season, which was one of much interest. The membership was enlarged for the effective presentation of "Phedre," by Massenet, and Hadyn's "Symphony in D." The Grieg "Spring" and De bussy's "Arabesque' 'were also charmingly interpreted, under the telling baton of Conductor Schoenefeld. Miss Mary Gowans, contralto, was the soloist and gave in a charming voice Handel's "Ombra mai fu," with an effective obbligato violin solo by Lalla Fagge. Mrs. Gertrude Ross was at the piano and gave effectively a group of three songs by Burleigh. Gertrude Ross and Sidney Homer encored with Mrs. Ross' Red Cross Song.

The local Music Teachers' Association are all alive to the entertaining of the State Assembly from July 9 to 12. At their last meeting they gave a program much enjoyed. Miss Grace James, soprano, sang "Chariot of the Lord," by Elgar, and "The Trumpet Call," by Sanderson. Mme. Sprotte sang "Marseillaise" and "Song of the Flag," by Mrs. Ross, who was at the piano. Mr. Hugo Kirchoffer, who is director of music in Hollywood and has been at the camps, gave an account of the work and led some community songs. The convention will open with a great program by the great artists we have with us, and others who are doing special summer school work—the Zoellners, Cherniavski, Gowdowski and Mr. Cadman. The Pageant at the Exposition grounds will close the convention on July 12.

Los Angeles is especially favored by great teachers, artists and lecturers this summer, who are doing courses in "summer sessions" from six or more weeks' session. Dr. Calvin B. Cady is holding his annual course and has a good following of advanced students. The lectures, lessons and recitals are very interesting. Leopold Godowski has his following in higher grades in technique and the special interpretation, suggestion as well as illustrative playing by this, the greatest of technicians of the times.

The California University has a six weeks' summer school with about fifty professors, lecturers and artists, with a fine musical department. The membership already numbers 600 enrollments. The Southern California University summer sessions has Miss Julia E. Crane of Potsdam, N. Y., at the head of the music work, Miss Carolyn Alchin, teacher of harmony; Miss C. Adelaide Trowbridge for piano, and Mr. Vincent Jones, general assistant. They have over 100 in the musical department alone, and a total of about 500. In the state school Mr. Arthur Farwell is lecturer and "community song" director; Mrs. Sweesy on methods of public school music; Mr. Towner, choral and orchestral work; Miss Bumbaugh, harmony; Miss Kummer, grammar grade work.

The Southern California Public School Teachers' Association of Los Angeles and Pasadena met for a social feast. Mrs. E. M. Bartlette, president of the first, and Miss Junia Wolff, president of the latter, gave a luncheon to their respective visiting guests, Miss Julia Crane, Mr. Arthur Farwell and Mr. Calvin B. Cady, all of New York, and Miss Alchin, Mrs. L. V. Sweesy and Miss Trowbridge of California, who all made responses to excellent toasts in the line of their activity in music. The social features were finely cemented for the great work that is being done toward musical education and progress.

PEORIA MUSICAL COLLEGE

While in Peoria recently, I just happened to drop into the Peoria Musical College and found a recital of the intermediate grade in progress.

"Polacca Brilliant" (Weber), played by Lydell Warmbir, "Minuet" (Paderewski), by Margaret Ireland, "Berceuse" (Grieg), by Mary Wynne Stowe, and "Song of the Brook" (Lack), "Waltz in E Minor" (Chopin), by Esther Mateer, all were good examples of the excellent foundation work conducted at this school.

"For All Eternity" (Mascheroni), was sung by Fayre Nichols, and evinced a good soprano voice, and shows that she is working along in the right direction.

"On the Shore" (Neidlinger), and "At Nightfall" (Metcalf) were sung by Dorothy Meyers, displaying a deep contralto and well poised voice. These young ladies should have a good future, provided they stick to their studies, which means not only voice, but piano, harmony, etc., with the necessary literary education which will make them broader and more interesting.

"Husheen" (Needham), sung by Mrs. H. L. Pintler, and "Slave Song" (Del Riego), by Lillian Stunbach, were also done very well, indeed.

The violin solo, "Serenade" (Drigo), was played by Charles Dedobbeleer, exhibiting a good technic, also very good interpretative ability. Mr. Dedobbeleer is lame, and should be commended upon the excellent work he has accomplished in violin; and we only hope he may continue the work so well begun.

Other programs given at the college recently were the "Two Hundredth Student Recital," given on Monday, June 17, and the "Seventh Annual Commencement Concert and Graduation Exercises," held Thursday evening, June 20.

The programs follow, and are another proof of the supreme merit of the work done at this institution.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Mrs. Elizabeth Thornberry and Mrs. John Black, artist students of Allen Ray Carpenter, were chosen to sing the commencement program for the Springfield College of Music and Allied Arts in Springfield, Ill. The Illinois State Journal said:

"Mrs. Elizabeth Thornberry, soprano, sang with clearness and ease the difficult aria, 'Rejoice Greatly,' from Handel's 'Messiah.' The clear, pure tones from this coloratura voice were indeed beautiful and the clarity with which she executed the purling runs were noted. Her other numbers were suited to her personality, which harmonizes with her charming appearance.

"Mrs. John Black is a dramatic soprano, whose voice has a goodly range, is of magnificent timbre and well placed. Her work displays a keen appreciation of her art and splendid musicianship. In the 'Air de Lia,' by Debussy, sung for the first time in Springfield, she brought out all the richness of the modern French school.

"Two songs on their programs were by the distinguished composer, Clarence Mayer."

Comments on the Pittsburgh-Philadelphia Summer Season of Opera

On short notice, Mr. Davis, the manager of the Fort Pitt and Alvin Theaters, organized an opera company. The whole chain was put in motion and during the month of May the Smoky City heard operas at the Alvin Theater, with prices within everybody's reach and with experienced artists in the casts. Proof that our inhabitants do love operas is the great audiences which responded during May and June. But where New York and Chicago give similar entertainments at very top-notch prices, the Pittsburgh season came to a successful conclusion with moderate prices. That people should be flocking to the opera house during the torrid season, what better proof of the great love for operas? One of the most potent factors in this enterprise was the all-American cast, a thing which proves that our native talent, when gathered together, even on short notice, are able to give vocal exhibitions comparable to the best of foreign artists. Not only did the voices give satisfaction, but "Americans" brought the Italian atmosphere which the repertoire required, while the French repertory was equally satisfactory from the same point of view. The principal parts were not sung this time by European "lights" in disguise of great artists—the capital roles were sung capitally by Americans—and who in the audience ever wished to be in the Metropolitan Opera House, where camouflaged performances at "over the top" prices are in vogue, when the Smoky City enjoyed operas at $2 with forces of the New York and Chicago operas? And in the Quaker City the financial success was even greater, and the audiences were hungry to hear operas, in spite of the frequent visits of the Metropolitan during the past season.

It proves, then, that our inhabitants love music and, if the prices are not exorbitant, will buy it.

The Pittsburgh-Philadelphia season is one more instance in favor of a municipal opera—so much needed in our country. If Mr. Carnegie gives generously to libraries, why not come out with a substantial sum and endow any large city in America with a municipal opera house? Our millionaires have poured thousands of dollars into the German musical propaganda. For the past fifty years they have fed German stomachs with millions, they filled the coffers of the German conductors, and the result is now nil. Why not then take and expend a few dollars and encourage our native talent through the erection of a municipal opera house? If the American artists can be called upon to give aid to war relief and war charities, they are good enough to duplicate their feats in legitimate, artistic fashion on the professional stage. Who will start the campaign for a municipal opera house? Who will give employment to American artists? Give our talent a chance to live through art and for art's sake. Let an American manage an opera house—we have some who are qualified for such a post. American artists, organize yourselves, backed by your talents, and carry your own American names on your helmets. Do not use a nom de plume, whether you sing or play. Make the world stand up before your merits, as your sisters and brothers have stood out in marvelous fashion in mechanical science, inventions, finances, economics and other branches.

The Pittsburgh-Philadelphia season was carried through by such names as Florence Easton, Francis Maclennan, Richard Martin, Henry Weldon, Henri Scott, Frances Ruth Miller, Stappleton Murray, Helen Campbell, Carl Formes and others. Mr. Davis is, perhaps, the only American manager who has given a season of operas with American-made goods, and, with this record to his credit, he will belong with the Savage and Aborn companies, which were first on the board to give operas in our tongue with American artists. We hope that the manager of the Fort Pitt and Alvin will continue to give operas in the same manner and that the public will give its support.

Second Week of the Stadium Concerts—Soloists, Florence Macbeth, Constance Balfour and Others—The Fourth of July One Brilliant Event.

Sunday evening, June 30, was the second week of the popular concerts. The opera night was made conspicuous thru the appearance of Florence Macbeth. A vast throng attended the affair and enjoyed especially the brilliant coloratura. At Ravinia Park some two seasons ago she shone in open air performances, and at the Stadium she overcame every obstacle which the entirely open field might present to a singer. She had no difficulty in sending her voice far into the galleries of stones, occupied by the eager music-lovers. Ambroise Thomas must have dreamed of interpreters and interpretations of Macbeth's style when he wrote the Titania aria in "Mignon." On this occasion the coloratura voice was purity in itself—the technical stunts were handled with unusual skill, while the lyric passages were bell-like. And another brilliant feat of coloratura singing was that in "Lucia's" mad scene. No fatigue was noticeable. No better exposition of vocal results could have been demanded, for Donizetti's aria was given a rendition which will remain memorable to every listener. At the conclusion of the aria there was an outburst of applause, reminding one of Nero's arena of Roman times.

The Metropolitan chorus rendered two numbers from "Cavalleria," "Soldiers' March" from "Faust" and Dance Music from "Prince Igor" (Borodine). The orchestral numbers consisted of compositions by Berlioz, Mascagni, Tschaikowsky and Arnold Volpe's "American Reveille," a patriotic fantasie.

No less a success was the concert of July 1, made conspicuous through the appearance of another American soprano, Constance Balfour. It was the writer's first opportunity to listen to this lyric soprano, whose voice equals the best of the foreign importations. In the open air the lyric voice disclosed itself of a quality of extreme beauty, of a power which penetrated far into the vast field of the city college of New York. The upper timbre, especially, shone through purity, clarity and ringing quality. There is a certain distinctive feature in the upper tons, which clings to your aural memory like the chimes of Normandy. Another factor which contributed to Miss Balfour's success was the style of interpreting the aria, "Peace, My God," from Verdi's "Destiny's Power." Generous and well deserved applause was bestowed on her and we regretted that more was not given.

Besides the national anthems of America and France, Mr. Volpe offered works by Elgar, Gounod, Liszt, Suppe, Delibes, Diaz and Grieg.

Marie Tiffany of the Metropolitan was the soloist on July 2, with aria, "Il est doux," from "Herodiade" (Massenet).

The orchestral numbers were by Tschaikowsky and Chabrier, besides the national anthems.

The soloists for July 3 were: Marion Green, basso, in a rendition of "Oh, Monumento," from "La Gioconda" (Ponchielli); Miss Genia Zielinska, soprano, who sang the "Bell Song" from "Lakme"; Rafael Diaz, tenor of the Metropolitan opera, in a rendition of the "Flower Song" from "Carmen," and Miss Delphine Marsh, contralto, singing "My Love Is a Muleteer" (Di Nogero) and "Our Flag in France" (Emilie Frances Bauer). The quartet from "Rigoletto" enlisted the above soloists. On the orchestra program: Offenbach, Puccini and Massenet.

July 5, Marguerite Namara, soprano, was soloist, with Mimi's aria from "La Boheme" and the "Gavotte" from Massenet's "Manon." Orchestral offerings: Rimsky-Korsakoff, Edoardo Marzo and Glazounow.

On July 6, Lillian Eubank, contralto, and Cantor M. Kanewsky, tenor, were the soloists. The contralto sang "Ah, Mio Fernando," from "La Favorita" (Donizetti), and Cantor Kanewsky rendered Ukrainian Folk Song and the Hebrew song, "Eli, Eli." Orchestral numbers, directed by Arnold Volpe, enlisted compositions by Ambroise Thomas, Mascagni, Tschaikowsky, Suppe, Bizet and Ponchielli.

The Strand

In the last few weeks we noted a rather monotonous and uninteresting musical program, in spite of the audiences being large. A dull musical program was given the week ending July 7. The Strand Soldier Quartet sang a medley of patriotic airs, and Oscar Spirescu directed "Jubel Overture," by Weber.

The Rialto

A more interesting musical program, the week ending July 7. The initial number was conducted by Mr. Riesenfeld and consisted of Tschaikowsky's "Capriccio Italien," played by the Symphony, only the brass instruments left much to desire. Carlos Mejia may be called "the terrified tenor," for again nervousness marred his singing of "La Donna e Mobile," from Verdi's "Rigoletto." Good singing was done by Annie Rosner, soprano, in the aria from "Destiny's Power," by Verdi. "Serenata Neapolitana" was executed on the organ by Arthur Depew. As popular offering, the orchestra played Kalman's "Miss Springtime."

THEATERS

"Oh, Lady! Lady!" at the Casino

After a successful run for several months at the Princess Theater, the twin sister of "Oh, Boy," seems to have taken a hold on the public, which just now runs to see it at the Casino. Mr. Jerome Kern has written the music to this comedy and, at least, we may credit him with just an ounce of inspiration in his "Little Ships Come Sailing Home." The other tunes are agreeable and melodious, but with no chance of retaining the songs for lack of originality. Taken as a whole, it is harmless and an opportunity for an evening's entertainment. The book and lyrics by Guy Bolton and Wodehouse are weak, besides the plot is without any animation. Why it is called, "Oh, Lady! Lady!" just because the authors end it with three marriages—one a consequence of first-sight love, another of romantic love and the third one the marriage of two crooks—is quite puzzling to me. Humorous scenes are absent, as well as wit. Vivienne Segal of "Blue Paradise" fame interpreted the heroine. She is in danger of losing a charming voice and a valuable organ for musical comedy, because of faulty method of singing, still she came out honorably. Carl Randall is a good dancer and acrobat, but a boyish and inexperienced actor with no singing voice. Florence Shirley gave a capable picture of the crook. Margot Kelly was charming, graceful and appropriate as the lady dressmaker from Paris, but what an awful red wig. Harry C. Browne, satisfactory. The show is presented by Comstock, Gest & Elliott.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The Strawbridge & Clothier Chorus gave their annual concert at Willow Grove Park on June 26. This concert was one of the most enjoyable of the many choral offerings heard during the outdoor summer concert season. The organization is made up of employes of the Strawbridge & Clothier department store, and is conducted by Dr. Herbert J. Tily, general manager, a distinguished musician and doctor of music. Some of the best church solo positions are held by members of this chorus, and all concerts given by them are attended by large audiences of Philadelphia music lovers.

The Victor Herbert Orchestra, which is at present filling an engagement at the Grove, combined with the chorus. The program was made up of Herbert numbers exclusively. The number which called for the most interesting attention was the composition written especially by Mr. Herbert for orchestra and chorus, and dedicated to Dr. Tily, "The Call to Freedom." It is indeed a splendid composition, and very appropriate to our present feelings. May Ebrey Hotz sang the ode with the necessary amount of expression to make it all to be desired, and Horace R. Hood was at his best in the baritone solos he sang.

CHARLES W. H. BANCROFT.

RAYMOND WILSON

Raymond Wilson, the pianist, has been doing much for Red Cross and war relief work lately, having appeared in several recitals where the proceeds went entirely to relief organizations.

On June 12, Mr. Wilson played in Skaneateles, N. Y., a noted summer resort near Syracuse. June 21, he was heard in a Red Cross benefit recital in the Alert Clubrooms at Medina, N. Y., where he was greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience. June 28, he played in Walton, N. Y., his renditions being so well liked that he was given some eight or more recitals in the course of the evening.

Mr. Wilson has recently made arrangements to have his recital bookings made under the management of the Syracuse Musical Bureau, which handles the bookings of the famous Belgian organist, Charles M. Courboin, and other artists. His managers report that there is every indication that Mr. Wilson will have one of his busiest seasons next fall, judging by the inquiries which are already coming in from those interested in securing him for their recital courses.

Mr. Wilson's second New York recital will be given in Aeolian Hall on Oct. 31. Judging by the reception given his work last fall by the metropolitan critics, the sincerity, technical brilliance and warmth of Mr. Wilson's playing will again secure most hearty endorsement from musical critics of the metropolis.

GEORGE NELSON HOLT A VERSATILE ARTIST

Besides teaching a large vocal class at the Columbia School of Music throughout the season, George Nelson Holt, Chicago pedagogue and singer, has found time to translate from the French, during the Winter, the remarkable book, "Under the German Shells," by Emanuel Bourcier.

M. Bourcier was, for a while, instructor in liaison at Camp Grant and his book (in the Holt translation) is having a very heavy sale.

Peoria—The Peoria Musical College gave its One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Students' Recital recently, the following appearing: Evalyn Billinger, Rena Tanquary, Madeline Drake, Elsa Kanne, Mrs. Anna Brodman Rouse, Adelaide White, Mrs. Robert Keith, Beula Collinson, Edith Clinebell, Mrs. Helen Parkhurst Cowell, Lee Bright, Helen Hodnett and Mrs. E. M. Bailey.

MINNESOTA MUSIC TEACHERS' CONVENTION

sesses an admirable technic and played with fine taste.

"Depuis le jour," from Charpentier's "Louise," and Gilberte's "Moonlight Starlight" were Miss Troendle's second group. The little singer charmed her audience with the radiance of her personality and then again with the lovely, appealing quality of her voice and her general artistic style. Her voice is remarkably flexible and her enunciation and phrasing faultless. St. Paul was unanimous in her praise.

Wilma Anderson Gilman spoke on "The Teaching of Piano in the Public Schools." Mr. Giddings, the supervisor in the schools (Mrs. Gilman says), does not prove to make opera singers, but none will deny his accomplishments. They estimate there are 2,000 piano pupils taking private lessons, and they have an average of five pianos in the schools. They are teaching pupils to become practical pianists, and the ensemble practice, which is a part of the course, is invaluable to them. From the work that is being accomplished, Mrs. Gilman said, private teachers will need to become broader in their work to keep their pupils, and in turn more work will be given them.

Miss Gertrude Cleophas, the Minneapolis pianist, was heard in recital at 2 o'clock. A Chopin group, Ballade in A flat major, Opus 47; Three Etudes, F minor, F, and G flat; Nocturne in F sharp, and Scherzo in C sharp minor, was followed by the MacDowell Etude de Concert, Papillons (Rosenthal) and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodie No. 6. Miss Cleophas has a marvelous technic at her command, and she plays with great beauty of tone. The Chorale in the C sharp minor Scherzo as played by Miss Cleophas enchants one and takes on new meaning. Tonal coloring and varieties of touch had much to do with the expressive style of her playing. The Liszt Rhapsodie was played with great fire and enthusiasm.

Unfinished business and election of officers occurred at the close of the recital.

Frederick W. Mueller, in his report on examinations, spoke of the very high quality of the examinations and of the high grades that were attained. Of the sixty-seven candidates, seven took the associate. It is interesting to note that the associate examiners were Arthur Foote of Boston, in piano, and Rossetter G. Cole of Chicago, in harmony and theory.

Donald Ferguson of the University of Minnesota spoke of the purpose to standardize teachers in a larger way and the establishment of music in the community as an institution of intellectual attainment. As an academic branch taught in the high schools Mr. Ferguson outlined the plan of a preliminary examination in music for those desiring credit in entering high school, the course to include four examinations and one full credit given for each year. With the University of Minnesota assuming the leadership, examinations would be formulated by a committee from the association, working with the faculty of the university.

Piano, violin and theory as the only subjects now proposed in which examinations should be given provoked considerable discussion. A motion was made that voice, organ and all legitimate instruments of the orchestra be included.

An invitation from the Minnesota Educational Association for the State Music Teachers' Association to join it in convention in November was presented by Miss Elsie M. Shawe, supervisor of music in the schools.

The newly elected officers are: George H. Fairclough of St. Paul, president; James Lang of Minneapolis, first vice president; Miss Ednah Hall of Minneapolis, second vice president; John A. Jaeger of St. Paul, secretary-treasurer; H. E. Meyer of Wilmar, auditor.

H. Chandler Goldthwaite of Minneapolis, organist of Hennepin Avenue Methodist Church, gave an organ recital at the House of Hope Presbyterian Church at 5 o'clock. The program included Toccata (Handel), Rondo (Beethoven), Soeur Monique (Couperin), Toccata and Fugue, D minor (Bach), Berceuse (Louis Vierne), Adagio Symphony No. 2 (Widor) and Prelude, Fugue and Variations on ancient carol (Pachelbel), and closed with "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr. Goldthwaite has recently come here from the East. His great talent is somewhat expressed in the fact that he memorizes his entire programs. The Toccata of the Fugue in D minor, while finely played, lost in effectiveness at the start, when the rests were much too prolonged. His playing as a whole is scholarly and interesting, and we look forward to hearing him again.

Frances Ingram, contralto, of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, gave the closing recital at the Plymouth Congregational Church Thursday evening. With Katherine Hoffman at the piano she gave the following program:

Invocation to Eros.....Kursteiner
Japanese Death Song.....Sharp
Possession.....Sharp
My Lover, He Comes on a Skee.....Clough-Leighter
Lungi dal Caro bene.....Secchi
Il s'est tu.....Gretchaninow
So Soon Forgotten.....Tschaikowsky
In the Moonlight.....Haile
Carnaval.....Fourdrain
Aria—Amour, Viens Aider (Samson and Delila)
.....Saint-Saens

Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes.....
Lady Bug
Baby Is Sleeping
What the Old Cow Said
The Mouse
Of What Use Is a Girl?
Pat a Cake
The Old Women
(Music based upon Chinese themes and translations from the Chinese by Headland Peking University)

The Ships.....Saar
The Sheep and the Lambs.....Homer
The Sailor's Wife.....Burleigh
The Muleteer.....Di Nogero

The "Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes" (Crist) were done by Miss Ingram with charming individuality. The Saint-Saens aria, more than all else, showed the dramatic power of the singer and the wide range of her voice. Two Russian songs, "Il s'est tu" (Gretchaninow) and the Tschaikowsky number, "So Soon Forgotten," were beautiful indeed. Miss Ingram was especially happy in the encores she gave, "Over the Snow" (Weidlinger) and two charming French songs.

MAY PETERSON AN "ANGEL FROM HEAVEN"

Returning from a tour in the south, Miss May Peterson had some amusing experiences to recount, and, incidentally, she told of a new sobriquet given her.

She had been visiting her brother, serving at one of the aviation camps in Texas, and on Sunday morning the friends with whom she was stopping suggested that the party attend the services in a small negro church where Miss Peterson's host often sang. The attendance of white folks was no unusual occurrence, but Miss Peterson's presence and personality seemed to have the most inspiring effect upon the preacher. He had ascertained who she was, and his sermon throughout was punctuated with remarks which referred to the "angel from heaven" and the "angel with the thousand dollar voice." The congregation naturally focused its gaze upon her most of the time, but when at the earnest request of the not-to-be denied brother, Miss Peterson joined in the singing of the hymns, the worshipers were overjoyed. They crowded about her after the service, telling her how delighted they were and asking her to come again. Cordially Miss Peterson shook hands with everyone and told them how gratifying their sincere appreciation was to her.

And so the "golden girl of the Metropolitan" as she is known to many of us, has become "the angel from heaven" for the members of a simple little darkey congregation 'way down south.

PASSING COMMENT

Chicago has long regarded a music school as merely a downtown commercial proposition and not in the least as a home. And, indeed, there are many things to be said in favor of the idea.

There is, however, a very definite and an equally determined number of people who insist that a music school should also be a home school—hence the very great success of the New England Conservatory in Boston and the Cincinnati Conservatory.

It was inevitable, of course, that Chicago should have, some time, a school with a dormitory, and Bush Conservatory is the first to rise to this inevitability.

Music News has already printed a description and a picture of the new property and a recent visit there has shown that, minus the beautiful grounds of the Ohio institution, the new home school is very similar to the Cincinnati Conservatory.

The experiment is being watched with interest and Music News joins the many friends of the Bush Conservatory in wishing it great success in the new location.

At a studio recital at the Western Conservatory last week the President, E. H. Scott, found it necessary to ask the audience present to refrain from whispering during the program, and his statement of the case was so lucid and so convincing that it would be a pleasure to repeat it verbatim.

In effect he said: "Do not, at a young pupils' concert, think it unnecessary to give strict attention or to offer absolute courtesy to the players. Remember that these are frightened children with nerves at the highest tension. They want to do their very best, and they are very desirous of pleasing you; but, being inexperienced, they are apprehensive of results. It is, therefore, the height of unkindness to make their task all the harder by lack of attention or by the annoyance of whispering. If you were to whisper and be inattentive at a big concert at the Auditorium it would be more excusable, inasmuch as the experience and poise of the artists appearing there would enable them to override your annoyances entirely and insure their success in spite of your interference; but when you go to hear young students please be considerate of their inexperience and help them all you can by sympathetic attention."

"Will they reach Paris?"

"No."

"Will the lines hold?"

"Yes."

Thus did Samuel N. Watson, formerly pastor of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church in Paris and known personally to scores of American musicians who have studied and taught in that capital, propound questions to himself and answer them in his address at St. James' Church, Chicago, last Sunday morning.

Dr. Watson has lately returned to America after witnessing at first hand almost four years of war conditions in Paris and in France, and he is in position to give telling and touching details. This he certainly did in the address above referred to, and his influence on the vast congregation assembled at St. James' was electric and must have awakened a great deal of fruitful thought.

The service, detailed elsewhere in Music News, was, on the whole, very remarkable.

To this writer the Litany of the War seems a wonderful thing, and it was particularly impressive as read by the curate of St. James' (Rev. Frederick L. Gratiot) last Sunday.

If you are an attendant at the Episcopal Church you will have heard this, but if not its reproduction here ought to be worth your reading:

Litanies de la Guerre

Sur la sentinelle avancee, qui dans la nuit froide et noire veille sur nos armees:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur l'eclaireur qui s'avance a travers bois et qu'une surprise peut perdre:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur le chasseur, le dragon, le hussard, le cuirassier et tous nos hardis cavaliers volant partout pour surprendre L'Allemand et le tailler en pieces:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur l'artilleur dont le canon gronde sans cesse et que les batteries ennemies voudraient aneantir:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur l'oiseau de France qui survole les positions teutonnes et qu'ils voudraient blesser a mort:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur l'officer sans peur qui commande, tout droit, sous les obus qui pleuvent et les balles qui siffent:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur tous nos soldats terres dans la tranchee, epiant le Prussien, et que la mitraille arrose sans relache:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur nos hardis marins naviguant a la surface des flots ou sous les eaux, exposes a chaque instant a l'invisible et terrible torpille:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur le pauvre blesse qui tombe, souffre et gemit dans la nuit glacee, sur le champ de bataille:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur les malades et les mourants dans un lit d'hopital, attendant la sante ou la mort:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur l'ame de tous nos soldats qui s'envole vers l'autre monde:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur le brancardier qui releve les blesses et les morts; sur l'infirmier, sur le major qui se devouent sans treve:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur le malheureux prisonnier, sans nouvelles et loin des siens et de la France:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur le pauvre envahi que la barbare vole, massacre et brule sans merci:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur le pretre-soldat que la guerre a contraint d'abandonner sa paroisse, sur le cure qui gemit sur son eglise detruite et ses fideles disperses:
O Mere, veillez.

Sur les veuves et les orphelins en larmes la soeur qui pleure son frere, la mere qui a perdu son fils, l'epouse qui ne sait rien de son mari, et le petit enfant qui prie pour son pere:

O Mere, veillez.

Sur la France dont le coeur saigne, qui veut le bonheur de ses enfants, et attend la victoire et la paix:

O Mere, veillez.

Litany of the War

The sentinel at the front who through chill and dark nights guards our armies:

O Lord, watch over him.

The scout who advances through ambush and perishes if discovered:

O Lord, watch over him.

The Chasseur, the dragoon, the hussar, the cuirassier, and all our hardy cavalry striving to surprise and scatter the enemy:

O Lord, watch over them.

The artilleryman, whose guns never cease roaring, and whom the foe's batteries would destroy:

O Lord, watch over him.

Bird of France, flying over hostile armies who would strike him down even to death:

O Lord, watch over him.

The officer who commands without fear, under a downpour of shells and a whistling of bullets:

O Lord, watch over him.

Our soldiers fighting the Prussian down in the trenches, whom the machine gun sprays with bullets:

O Lord, watch over them.

Our stalwart sailors navigating the waters over or under, always in danger of the invisible and dreadful torpedo:

O Lord, watch over them.

The poor wounded man who falls, suffering and moaning, in the icy night on the battle field:

O Lord, watch over him.

The sick and dying in hospital beds, awaiting health or death:

O Lord, watch over them.

Souls of our soldiers, who take their flight out toward that other world:

O Lord, watch over them.

The stretcher bearer, who carries wounded and dead; the nurse, the physician, who serve without resting:

O Lord, watch over them.

The unfortunate prisoner, without news, and far from his dear ones and France:

O Lord, watch over him.

The poor invaded people, whom the barbarians rob, massacre and burn without pity:

O Lord, watch over them.

The soldier-priest whom war has robbed of his parish; the cure lamenting over his ruined church and his scattered flock:

O Lord, watch over them.

Widows and orphans who weep, sister bemoaning her brother, mother bereaved of her son, wife who knows naught of her husband, little one praying for its father:

O Lord, watch over them.

France with a heart that is bleeding, who longs for the joy of her children, awaiting triumph and peace:

O Lord, watch over her.

And once more—as a stimulant to tired hearts—we reproduce that most glorious of war songs, the verse by Mrs. Howe:

Battle Hymn of the Republic

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;
He is tramping out the vintage, where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loos'd the fateful lightning of His terrible swift sword;
His truth is marching on.

I have seen Him in the watch-fires of a hundred circling camps;
They have builded Him an altar in the evening dews and damps;
I can read His righteous sentence by the dim and flaming lamps;
His truth is marching on.

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat;
O be swift my soul to answer Him! be jubilant my feet!
Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies, Christ was born across the sea;
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free;
While God is marching on.

Effa Ellis Perfield

After spending a good part of the winter in New York and establishing her Method of Music Teaching very firmly in that city, as detailed in Music News on various occasions, Effa Ellis Perfield has just completed a Summer term in that city which has broken all records for attendance and enthusiasm.

Following this she has come to Chicago for her annual summer school, which is now in session at the McClurg Building in this city, with a very heavy enrollment of teachers from all parts of the United States.

Immediately following the Chicago dates Mrs. Perfield goes to Asheville, N. C. (August 12 to 31), and after that will hold classes in a number of cities of the West and South before returning to New York.

The attendance at Chicago is remarkable in view of the fact that Eastern teachers have been attending the New York classes and great throngs of Southerners are booked for attendance at Asheville, but the fame of the Perfield Method has grown so amazingly that were only Chicago to be considered there would be a very heavy attendance every time a class is announced here. But, as a matter of fact, in the class of this Summer there are teachers from almost every State of the Union.

Mrs. Perfield is an enthusiast and believes heartily in enthusiasm. "I do not care whether people agree with me or not," she says; "but I do like to have them energetic in defending their own stands, and if, after full argument, I have failed to convince them that my way is better than theirs, I have unbounded respect for them, provided they still enthusiastically believe their own way best."

And so, on last Saturday morning it was a great pleasure to hear Mrs. Perfield, at the McClurg Building, again demonstrate and urge her Method of Music Study; and, be it said in passing, so enthusiastic and so persuasive is she that it is difficult to imagine anyone sitting through one of her talks and coming away from it feeling that anything else is "the best way" rather than that way, which Mrs. Perfield advocates.

It is not necessary—nor would it be advisable—to give a consecutive and detailed account of what this brainy woman said on Saturday, but a few comments jotted down at random while listening to her will, perhaps, indicate the unusualness and the brilliance of what she said.

And, as she "demonstrates" every Saturday morning at 10, besides at various other times, anyone who desires to hear more can easily make the opportunity.

Emphasizing previously reiterated statements, Mrs. Perfield spoke of eye, ear and touch development not alone in music, but also with reference to every kind of education.

She believes that eye and ear must be trained absolutely and that touch finishes the trinity of possibility.

"And," she says, "thorough training means that you must see and feel with the ear, you must hear and feel with the eye, and you must touch with the eye and ear."

"There is one great objection to your method," said a New York educator to Mrs. Perfield; "it cannot be used by the rank and file of teachers in public schools, because it absolutely requires the teacher to be an educated musician."

"Yes," said Mrs. Perfield in telling of this; "I admit that this is true. The Perfield Method does certainly need teachers who have both material and true pedagogy back of them."

"True feeling," further said Mrs. Perfield, "comes through the eye and the ear, but it must be balanced by reason and then enhanced to its fullest possibility by drill.

"Others may teach other ways if they believe in it; but as for me," she said, "I teach eye, ear and touch because I believe implicitly that this is the best method."

In outlining her way of teaching staff, scales, chords, modulations, etc., Mrs. Perfield said: "He only is a true pedagogue who sees the end from the beginning and in the statement of first principles includes always the big and final principle."

In other words, if one would become a musician, the Big Vision is necessary.

"If I could go back to my early student days," said Mrs. Perfield, "I would no longer take anybody's word for anything. I would accept no textbooks. I would demand positive proof as I went along."

And so, in her own teaching she tries to appeal to the reason and the intelligence of the pupils; and thus in their work she instills confidence, for anyone who knows absolutely what his work is has a feeling of absolute security when the time to exercise his gifts arrives.

"Anything is right for you," continued this careful thinker, "so long as you absolutely believe it or until you outgrow it. Give everyone a careful hearing, test every statement made to you, but be yourself first and last, and change your plans and methods only when you are convinced of something better.

"Finally," said she, "teach pupils not to be self-conscious and not to worry over mistakes. On the contrary, just forget them as promptly as possible and put the mind to the task of fresh achievement."

The large class of students (mostly established teachers) present at this time listened to Mrs. Perfield with rapt attention and found her statements to be very convincing even as her method of presenting them was wholly fascinating.

A brilliant woman is Mrs. Perfield—and distinctly worth hearing. C. E. W.

FROM THE HARRIS STUDIO, 929 KIMBALL BLDG.

Miss Ruth Craig, soprano, was the soloist at the Second Presbyterian Church, on Sunday, July 14, and at Calvary Presbyterian Church, July 7.

Miss Kathryn Longwell, soprano, was soloist at Calvary Presbyterian Church on Sunday night, July 14, singing Riley's "The Prayer Perfect" and "God Be Merciful" (Bartlett).

Miss Antoinette Cleveland, contralto, was soloist at the morning service, singing "Out of the Deep" (Rogers) and "What Are These?" (Brown).

Mr. M. M. Hamlin, tenor, will be the soloist at Calvary Church during choir vacation. Mr. Hamlin is the regular soloist for this church.

Miss Laura Houghton, soprano, has sung twice this month at the Great Lakes, giving full programs.

A SPECIAL PATRIOTIC SERVICE AT ST. JAMES

"Vive la France"

On last Sunday morning a remarkably fine program was given at St. James' Episcopal Church in honor of "Quatorze Juillet," which, as everyone knows, is the parallel occasion to our Fourth of July.

The fame of the occasion had been spread abroad so assiduously that the church, big as it is, was much too small to accommodate the throngs and many were turned away, unable to gain admittance.

It is only on very rare occasions that such an elaborate or so indicative a spectacle may be observed as was the processional at this time, for, besides, the choir and the clergy, as usual, there were carried in the procession five flags—those of the United States, France, Italy, Great Britain and Belgium—the color-bearers being officers in high command in the various armies, and the processional being further distinguished by the presence of the consuls of Great Britain, Belgium, France, Italy and Brazil, besides Major J. L. Corbett, adjutant-general, National Army, and Lieutenant-Commander Ogden G. McClurg, chief of staff, Ninth, Tenth and Eleventh Naval Regiments.

There were two splendid talks—one by Rev. Samuel N. Watson, D. D., rector emeritus, Holy Trinity Church, Paris, and the other by Monsieur A. Barthelemy, consul of France.

The music, under the skilful touch of Hugo Goodwin, was an inspiration and a benediction.

The hymns had too much a flavor of newness, but were sung admirably by the big choir present. They were "We March, We March to Victory" (Barnby), "America, the Promised Land" (Murphy, a member of the choir) and "Forward Be Our Watchword" (Smart).

In my opinion, it would have been better, on so popular an occasion, to have used something in which the congregation could have joined—"Onward, Christian Soldiers," for instance.

However, the dullness of the hymn singing (by the congregation) was more than made up in the wonderfully potent renditions of "Star Spangled Banner," "America" and the "Marseillaise," for it is doubted, if ever in any church, have these been better done, while the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" certainly comes in for unusual praise, inasmuch as Mr. Goodwin's conception of it is the best heard from any choral body since the war began.

The choir, in spite of the fact that July is at its apex, was up to St. James' standard and the various service numbers were very well done, especially the "Festival Te Deum" of Dudley Buck, in which, in solo excerpt, the splendid bass voice of William Beard was heard to exceptional advantage, as well as other soloists unnamed on the program.

France was paid another compliment in the use of Cesar Franck's very beautiful "O, Lord, Most Holy," in which the choir did the best work of the morning supplementary to a very fine reading of the solo line by Master William Crockett.

St. James' is abominably arranged in the matter of the placing of the organ and the choir, and one wonders how it is ever possible to get perfect ensemble when such spaces intervene between accompaniment and singer.

Mr. Goodwin is, however, rapidly acquiring the aural technic necessary, and he managed all his forces on Sunday with skill and good effect.

In solo playing he was, of course, exceptional, using as his prelude a Prayer in E by Alkan, entirely novel and equally good, and closing the service with "Piece Heroique" (Franck), a number at once quite apropos and distinctly brilliant under the Goodwin manipulation.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY RECITAL

On Wednesday morning, July 10, at the American Conservatory occurred one of the weekly morning recitals given by members of the faculty. The artists on this occasion were Clarence Loomis, pianist, and Ramon Girvin, violinist. They presented the following interesting program:

Sonata for Violin and Piano, C major.....Mozart
Allegro vivace; andante sostenuto; rondo allegro
Messrs. Girvin and Loomis

Carnaval, Op. 11.....Schumann
Mr. Loomis

Reverie.....Parvis
Romanza Andaluza.....Sarasate
Berceuse.....Spalding
Rondo, G major.....Mozart-Kreisler
Mr. Girvin
Mr. Kottler at the piano

Barcarolle.....Loomis
Mazurka, B minor.....Chopin
Ballade, A flat major.....Chopin
Mr. Loomis

Whether 11 o'clock in the morning is a particularly propitious time to listen to a program of this type, or whether the artists on this occasion happened to be particularly enthusiastic, at any rate there existed a mutually responsive consciousness between the soloists and the audience which one feels but rarely.

The Mozart Sonata was played with most appropriate delicacy and refinement of feeling. Mr. Loomis' rendition of the Carnaval exhibited a wealth of technic and a scholarly grasp of the whole. Mr. Girvin's fund of technical equipment is also ample, and he plays with exceedingly keen perception and artistic taste. His reading of the Spalding Berceuse was charming to a degree. Mr. Loomis in the last group played a Barcarolle of his own composition, which demonstrated clearly the pianist's talent as composer. In its construction, both as to form and atmosphere, it was clearly the work of a skilled artist.

A JOINT RECITAL BY PUPILS OF MRS. ZYGMAN AND MR. HUELSTER

On last Friday evening at the Huelster Studios in Kimball Building there was a joint program by three Huelster pupils and four from the class of Flora G. Zygman, which attracted as many people as the commodious suite would hold and which was greeted with very great enthusiasm.

Mrs. Zygman, herself a finished pianist, showed conclusively in the work of her pupils that she knows how to teach and how to select repertoire for her students.

Elias Moll played a Chopin Polonaise, Sarah Waldman gave a Beethoven Sonata (Pathetique) movement, Gertrude Movitt was heard in a movement of the A flat Sonata (Beethoven) and a Chopin Mazurka, and Evelyn Hattie Fox created a sensation with her brilliant playing of the First Movement of the great A flat major Concerto (Beethoven), in which she had the invaluable assistance of Mrs. Zygman at the second piano.

All these pupils showed clarity of touch, good pedaling, rich tone and careful interpretative thought.

The Beethoven Sonatas and Concerto were played in a way to prove that Mrs. Zygman believes in teaching musicianship as well as piano technic, and the Chopin numbers were also sympathetically as well as authoritatively presented.

All four of the pupils had poise and style and all attained much success with the audience.

Mr. Huelster presented Stella Lipp, lyric soprano; Ada T. Huelster, soprano, and Mr. Poat, bass-baritone.

Mrs. Lipp, whose voice is facile enough to qualify her as coloratura, probably, was very definite and wholly agreeable in "The Provencal Song" (Dell'Aqua) and in a group of well-known numbers by Reichardt, Saar and Rogers.

Miss Huelster, whose voice is full and rich and whose style is sincere and musical (not to mention her fine enunciation), was very attractive in "Thoughts Have Wings" (Lehmann), "Pierrot" (Johnson), "Down in the Forest" (Ronald) and "Wind Song" (Rogers).

Mr. Poat is the possessor of an unusually big voice and a breadth which sometimes leads him to be a little loggy in style. This fault will disappear, however, for his method of tone production is evidently good and his musicianship is growing.

He made a big impression in his songs, all of which were bravura, the list including "The King of the Winds" (David), "My Love, Farewell" (Mossler) and "Invictus" (Huhn).

Accompaniments of unusually fine musicianship and style were played by Mrs. Zygman.

Goodwin—On last Thursday evening an organ recital was given at the First Presbyterian Church in Greenburg, Pa., by Gordon Balch Nevin, at which time the program included his own suite, "Sketches of the City," and Hugo Goodwin's "The Fountain Sparkling in the Sunlight."

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Applications for the free and partial scholarships in the Chicago Musical College are rapidly coming in. No fewer than sixty free and one hundred and fifty partial scholarships are awarded to deserving students, twenty-five of the former being allotted to the piano department, eighteen to the vocal department and six to the department of violin. In addition to the College free scholarships there are special scholarships given respectiveiy by Alfred M. Snydacker and Edward F. Bosley. The former is a piano scholarship of the value of $400, the latter a vocal scholarship, value $100. Adolf Muhlmann and Edoardo Sacerdote each are giving a special opera scholarship, which comprises one free vocal lesson a week and instruction in the opera class. The final competition for these scholarships takes place at the beginning of September.

Alexander Raab has been presented with a gold-mounted memorandum book by the members of his class. The book bears the following inscription: "To Alexander Raab, a great artist and wonderful teacher, with the sincere admiration and appreciation of his class of 1917-1918." Mr. Raab wishes to take this opportunity of thanking his students.

Willard—Carolyn Willard, Chicago pianist and teacher, has gone to Union City, Mich., where, as usual, she will teach throughout the summer, spending much time also in preparation of repertoire for her next concert season, which begins with a recital at Nashville, Tenn., on October 25, to be followed by a Chicago recital on Sunday, November 17. Miss Willard appeared with great success before the Michigan Music Teachers' Association at Lansing, recently.

A COMPLIMENTARY CONCERT

A Complimentary Concert to the Presidents and the Past Presidents of the State Music Teachers' Associations was given at the small hall on the fifth floor of Kimball Building on last Wednesday evening to a goodly audience and much enthusiasm, although the wisdom of using this hall is an open question.

The ceiling is very low, the ventilation is bad, the lighting is glaring and, to cap the climax, the piano provided on Wednesday was an over brilliant one, almost blatant in tone and wholly unsuited to the room or the artists who used it.

The New Kimball Hall on the second floor of the Kimball Building is a gem, but the one on the fiifth floor is not, in the opinion of this writer, desirable for artist use.

The chief artist of last Wednesday evening was Heniot Levy, than whom it would be difficult to name a more conscientious or finished pianist.

His reading of the Chopin Sonata, Opus 58, was at a point of authority and beauty which could scarcely be overstated, in spite of the handicaps above enumerated, and his playing of the Barcarolle and Scherzo (B minor), by the same composer, was also splendidly effective.

In the middle of the program he repeated a group of his own compositions which have been heard before and which comprises three pieces of much worth; i. e., "Poem de Mai," "Mazurka" and "Valse Petite."

The "Poem" is the most artistic of these, the Mazurka the quickest in rhythmic appeal and the Valse is most full of dainty charm. All three, however, glow with musical beauty and all are of such pianistic build as to make them extremely interesting material for all teachers and artists to deal with.

There were two singers on the program also, both having the advantage of the superior accompaniments of Mrs. Charles Orchard and both being artist pupils of D. A. Clippinger, who, in fact, was host of the evening.

May Wall appeared first and sang "Canzonetta" (Rosa) with clear and facile classic style, the "Divinities du Styx" (Gluck) with such power and passion as to invest it anew with interest, "The Nightingale" (Grant-Schaefer) with an appealing lilt, and "The Sweet of the Year" (Salter) with that same insistent musical beauty which made it one of the features of a recent very successful recital given by Miss Wall.

The second singer was Corporal Finlay Campbell, who appeared in uniform, the knowledge of whose fifteen months in the French trenches (where he was severely wounded) brought him an ovation when he came to the stage.

But it was his excellent singing which ensured a continuance of this enthusiasm throughout his group.

His voice is rich, full and musical and his style is clear cut and intelligent.

One of his very greatest assets is his clear enunciation, for in spite of the low ceiling and the abominable acoustics of the hall, he was able to present each sentence so that it was distinctly heard. C. E. W.

MRS. BOWMAN AND MR. PEASE SING AT NORTHWESTERN

The outstanding feature of the song program given by Mrs. Hatswell Bowman, soprano, and Rollin M. Pease, baritone, at Music Hall of the Northwestern University School of Music, Evanston, last Tuesday evening was two groups of duets wonderfully well chosen and equally well presented.

The first of these groups comprised "The Nightingale," "Heart, Repent Thee Not" and "Gondoliera," by Georg Henschel, and all of them formerly sung in the duet programs by Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, and the last named having been sung by every high and low voice that ever essayed ensemble.

It is, nevertheless, a most beautiful song and the whole group was charming.

In the second group the best number, as it was likewise the gem of the whole program, was the splendid song from the oasis scene of "Thais," which has been heard so often with delight at the hands of Mary Garden and Hector Dufranne at the Auditorium, but which was also potently beautiful at Music Hall in Evanston, as treated by Mrs. Bowman and Mr. Pease.

The Ambroise Thomas "Legeres Hirondelles" and the A. Goring Thomas "Contentment" completed the distinguished list, both very effective, but the last rising to a perhaps greater climax of beauty.

The two voices blended excellently and the musicianship and art of the two singers furnished a constant delight to the big and very much interested audience. Each singer gave also a solo group and each scored a success.

Mr. Pease, whose voice is rich, full and warm, and is, likewise, amenable to minute graduations of mood and color, was very much liked in "The Eagle," in a stirring setting by Grant-Schaefer, the much used "Uncle Rome" (Homer), the very unusual "Knotting Song" (Early English) and the Prologue to "I Pagliacci," in which last named he created a sensation.

Mrs. Bowman is a lyric soprano of beautiful quality and very definite facility. Her "Love Hath Wings" (Rogers) was daintiness personified. "Songs My Mother Taught Me" (Dvorak) was very musically treated, and Kursteiner's "Invocation to Eros" was done with a power and passion which proved Mrs. Bowman to be very versatile. C. E. W.

Miss Dorothy Gnaedinger, prima ballerina and member of Mme. Yung's ballet, has just returned to this city after completing a most successful engagement at the Circle Theater in Indianapolis. ## EDITH PRUYN HALL AND CHICAGO LADIES' QUARTET

Trinity M. E. Church, after the many ups and downs following the burning of its handsome building many years ago, is now at home in the abandoned St. Paul's Universalist Church at Thirtieth and Prairie. Probably St. Paul's wealthy parishioners have in ideal a stately and esthetic edifice on the Midway, where they are now encamped, but they have a good job ahead of them to beat the stately pile they left behind. It is an imposing mass from the outside, the lantern dome easily coming inside the term "superb," and the interior finish is of woods that simply cannot be found nowadays. I felt myself wishing Trinity a thumping prosperity just so they might keep the fine old building as a monument to former days of grandeur.

The "elderly person" in me is hard to restrain when I see these truly noble and lovely emblems of a rich past endangered by an exaggerated fear of the invading "black belt."

The Trinitarians have a new pastor, an engaging, likable young hustler, who will surely not leave any task undone to make good on a hard job. And he has the best sort of a helper in his organist, Edith Pruyn Hall, who seems to have time and energy always at call and is untiring in evolving musical schemes that will bring results. There is a good organ, and she knows how to play it with a direct straightforwardness and bigness of spirit that does not cover up at all the presence of felicity of touch, grace of phrasing and the deftness of color sense which is the organist's second sight. And with all her duties she finds time to respond to that creative impulse which refuses to be stilled. She has a number of nice things to her credit, and one of the best is her Festival Prelude, built around the strophes of Sullivan's "Onward, Christian Soldiers." There is good basic fabric, and her harmonic devices are legitimate and effective; the varied treatment throughout has proportion, and the summing up carries definite and admirable style.

She has a capable ally in Mrs. Francis Carey Libbe, endowed with a rich voice of such wide range that the opulent notes of a contralto compete with some ringing ones in the upper scale. She sang two songs with the best sort of feeling and taste, making their test so lucid that they were doubled in value. Of course there was an encore for them, and everything else, for the Trinitarians were enthusiastic at their concert last Tuesday evening, when these notes were taken.

Assisting these "home folks" was Mrs. Alice Bell Watts, a soprano, whose voice is of unusual brilliancy and of a poise that poosens the text with pleasurable surety; and she has warmth and tenderness at command and the finesse to make them tell.

Mrs. Watts is the first soprano of the Chicago Ladies' Quartet, and Mrs. Libbe the first alto. Their associates are Mrs. Byrde-Kitson Schwarz and Mrs. Gwennie M. Evans, second alto and soprano, respectively. They sang four numbers and the encores, and although these were not of sufficient variety or order to measure the body fully, still they served to give a taste of the quality of the organization. It is decidedly satisfactory to record that it is worthy of the most serious and grateful consideration. It is the first endeavor in many years to revive and enlarge this agreeable form of musical diversion, and it should be safe to predict for the quartet speedy recognition in the very best fields. There is nothing of a venturous nature in its present manifestation. The voices are all good and they blend with a fine tingle of spirit in their quality—a composite tone which does not swallow up personality but assimilates it. They phrase so unusually, they enunciate so purely, they color the text so neatly, have such a sense of infused taste in the use of that dangerous weapon, the rubato, that it is apparent there has already been determined and unsparing work done, with full faith in whoever did the coaching. Their singing comes quite close to the abused word "refined." In the last analysis all concerted music should carry this surrender to the music itself rather than to any noticeable individual effort employed. It is this quality in this new endeavor which indicates that the quartet has a certain standard in mind and which, if maintained, cannot fail to carry it far, as well as to give unstinted pleasure in all quarters.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

MUSIC TEACHERS' NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

The first sectional meeting of the Music Teachers' National Association was held at the Seventh Avenue Hotel, Pittsburgh, on Friday evening, June 28. Some twenty-five members and friends gathered for an informal dinner and reunion. Addresses were made by Mrs. Ida F. Norton, a life member of the Music Teachers' National Association, and Lynn B. Dana of Warren, Ohio. It was unanimously decided to hold another such meeting about the middle of October, when a much larger attendance is expected.

For the conference of the Committee of History of Music and Libraries, at the convention of the Music Teachers' National Association, the program will include a report on the status of the music libraries in the country. Last year a questionnaire, prepared by this committee, was sent out by Dr. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, covering the music sections of our public libraries, their collections and facilities, and their popular use. The complete report to be presented at this meeting will review the music collections in nearly 1,500 libraries. It will be not merely a statistical summary, but it will go into details concerning lists, plans and suggestions based upon the library reports.

This committee announces also the following papers: "A Review of Materials and Methods in Teaching Music Appreciation," by Prof. George Dickinson of Vassar College; "Spanish Mission Music," by Mrs. Lillie Terrell Shaver of the Southwest Texas State School, San Marcos; and a paper by Mrs. Arthur E. Bostwick, librarian of the St. Louis Public Library, who has one of the best music sections in any public library in the country.

Music at RAVINIA PARK

Wednesday Evening

The opera for Wednesday evening was Donizetti's tragic "Lucia," with practically the same singers that appeared last week, save in the case of Sir Edgar, who was impersonated by the new tenor, Salvatore Sciaretti, in debut performance.

He disclosed a lyric voice of pronounced coloring and histrionic technic of large dimensions. In all probability he will be a worthy copartner to the two other tenor favorites when he has accustomed his organ to open-air singing.

Mabel Garrison gave a worthy account of Lucy's hallucinations, singing the well known and ofttimes "horribly mutilated" aria in splendid style and wellnigh perfect voice.

Millo Picco was thoroughly at home as the scheming brother, and Leon Rothier made the small part of the family servant loom into prominence by his painstaking efforts.

Louis Derman and Cordelia Latham rounded out the sextet, which was given in suavity of tone and excellent ensemble interpretation.

ALLEN YORK.

Thursday

On Thursday evening it was very refreshing to see a fair audience in attendance at the opera. This, too, was in spite of the weather, which was uncomfortably cold. It is to be hoped that warmer weather during the remainder of July and August will inspire people to turn out to the performances.

On this occasion "Faust" was given, with the following cast:

|---|---|
| Marguerite | Claudia Muzio |
| Siebel | Sophie Braslau |
| Faust | Orville Harrold |
| Mephisto | Leon Rothier |
| Valentine | Graham Marr |
| Martha | Cordelia Latham |

The cast was not only well selected, but the whole performance was agreeably staged and presented with great ease and finesse.

In the Garden Scene, which was given first, Sophie Braslau as Siebel gave an excellent interpretation of the Flower Song, while Harrold did his best work in the Cavatina. Muzio, who did not use her voice to distinct advantage in the Jewel Song, reached a higher pitch in the closing duet, to be followed by even more attractive work later on. Rothier sang Mephisto with his usual smoothness of tone, but with unusually obscure enunciation. Aside from this his interpretation of the part was good. His costume was "devilishly" attractive. In the Death Scene Graham Marr as Valentine did some markedly good work. His voice exhibited an unspoiled richness of tone and character. It was in the final trio in the Prison Scene that Muzio outdid herself and reached a remarkably dramatic climax without the slightest show of vocal strain. Her French pronunciation was beautiful throughout. Cordelia Latham proved an acceptable Martha.

Friday Afternoon

Friday afternoon ushered in the second student-artist day on the Ravinia program. This feature, so newly introduced, is a very fortunate one for the young artists concerned, as well as for those who come to hear them. It gives the soloists an excellent opportunity for performance in a large auditorium under widely diversified conditions. They must not fail to realize the prestige given them in these appearances. The soloists of Friday were Miss Mildred L. Smith, contralto, and Miss Marion Bergman, pianist. Miss Smith, who has had her entire vocal training with Miss Mary Peck Thomson, is a native of Mount Pleasant, Mich., though now permanently resident in Chicago. She sang:

|---|---|
| Yesterday | Phyllis Fergus |
| Lullaby | Lieurance |
| The Nightingale Has a Lyre of Gold | Whelpley |
| O Love, Lend Thine Aid | Saint-Saens |

The last song received the best interpretation and seemed the best suited to her voice, which is quite rich in tone, though not heavy, exhibiting more mezzo than alto quality.

Miss Bergman, artist pupil of Alexander Raab of the Chicago Musical College, played the following group:

|---|---|
| Rhapsody, F sharp minor | Dohnanyi |
| Etude, C major | Rubinstein |

Her pieces were admirably chosen and well rendered. They were of a sufficiently brilliant character to display to perfection in the outdoor theater Miss Bergman's finished technic and yet not too brilliant to show off her tone work to good advantage. The young artist is to be congratulated upon a most creditable performance.

The orchestra, conducted by Gennaro Papi, presented a program of more body and variation than last week, including two numbers delightfully Scandinavian in character, Soedermann's "Swedish Wedding March" and "Coronation March" (Svendsen), concluding with the sparkling "Maluguena" from the "Boabdil" of Moszkowski.

Friday Evening

On Friday evening the celebrated Metropolitan contralto, Sophie Braslau (who, by the way, is no less charming a friend than a singer), again entertained a small but most appreciative audience. This week she sang a group of songs instead of an aria, and proved herself an incontestably great artist in this direction. She sang the Rachmaninoff "O Thou Billowy Harvest Field" in the original Russian, followed by two English songs, "Mavourneen" (Lang) and "Consecration" (Manney). Her accompaniments were played by Mr. Hageman with superb artistry.

As conductor of the orchestra Mr. Hageman gave a broad and appealing reading of the Prelude to "The Deluge" (Saint-Saens), with Mr. Weisbach's splendid obligato. The Glazounow Ballet Suite was especially appreciated and graciously encored with the Dvorak Humoresque.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Saturday

Saturday afternoon the following program was given by the Symphony Orchestra, under Richard Hageman's guiding hand:

|---|---|
| Star Spangled Banner | Key |
| Overture from Samiramis | Rossini |
| Reverie | Vieuxtemps |
| Romarinskaja | Glinka |
| Irish Rhapsody | Herbert |
| Lyric Suite, Op. 54 | Grieg |
| Shepherd's Boy | |
| Norwegian Rustic March | |
| Notturno | |
| March of the Dwarfs | |
| Two Spanish Dances | Moszkowski |
| Polonaise from Eugen Onegen | Tschaikswoky |

Saturday evening marked the first performance this season of Verdi's "Il Trovatore," with Claudia Muzio again impersonating a Verdi heroine, Morgan Kingston repeating his well known idea of the Troubador, Millo Picco as the Count, and Sophie Braslau in a splendid version of the gypsy, Azucena. Altogether, a splendid cast that assured a good singing performance under the magic baton of Gennaro Papi.

Sunday Afternoon

On Sunday afternoon the resort was turned into a veritable playground, when, on the ball diamond, various army and navy units participated in the indoor as well as the outdoor sports, to the delight of a huge, admiring crowd that was swayed by the games, races, drills, etc. There was no concert, as is the custom, and to fill the gap the Great Lakes Naval Band (350 strong) played popular and patriotic airs between the athletic stunts.

From the grand stand, where, on either side of the jackie band, admiring humanity was seated, as well as from the spectators that made a crowded circle around the entire field, came eager cries of "Go to it, navy," "Show 'em up, army," as the sports progressed.

The most enthusiasm was aroused when a Jack and a Sam engaged in an old-fashioned pillow fight brought up to date. Across two horses is stretched a pole and astride this the two opponents pummel each other until one makes his "fall from grace," which sometimes does not occur any too gracefully, while the crowd howls with delight.

Sack races, three-legged races, relay races and a tug of war came in rapid succession to test the prowess of "our fighting men."

All seemed to enjoy themselves, but particularly the men in uniform, for whom the Ravinia Club is striving so hard to provide entertainment. The men have clubrooms for their exclusive use, where a lunch is served to 200 with 200 fair misses to peep over the teacups at the tanned, eager faces of the men who are doing their bit.

As one husky tar said to another in the recess where mere men congregate to smoke the weed between times, "Some of them guys don't seem to have the nerve to make up with a Jane. Why, all you have to do is to ask your partner if she has a date and if she has, well, there are 199 more to choose from." Which goes to show the optimism of the men in service.

Sunday Evening

The laughing opera by Rossini, "The Barber of Seville" (first time), was the bill of the evening, and a large crowd remained to hear the singing of Garrison, Harrold, Daddi, Picco, Rothier, Latham and Derman.

This opera is one of the most entertaining of the "cut" versions offered by Mr. Eckstein. It loses none of its comedy, and the recitatives and arias were given in practically their original writing.

Daddi made an excruciatingly funny Dr. Bartholo, indulging in plenty of low comedy and pantomimic expression.

Rothier made the music teacher a constant delight. His sonorous voice was in splendid keeping with the role, and he spared us the usual "clowning through the part" that most bassos think essential. He played it straight and without a suggestion of burlesque. He sang the "Calumny" aria splendidly.

Picco came up to the expected as Figaro. His Latin humor was at all times sparkling and the technical facilities of the role were handled exceedingly well. Here is an example of a baritone minus a cosmopolitan reputation who can easily take his place among the Metropolitan stars that twinkle at Ravinia. "Awful" Harrold appeared as the suitor for Rosina's hand. This singer no longer deserves the prefix "Awful," for this season he has come back to us rejuvenated as to voice and minus the former "bleat."

Miss Garrison made a dainty Rosina, acting in a plausible and sane manner; and keeping up her share of the comedy admirably. Brilliant she was in "Voce di primavera" (Arditi) that was interpolated in the lesson scene. She could have easily taken an encore, and why she declined is a mystery, for her organ did not sound the least bit worn.

Altogether, as we said before, "The Barber" is by far the most entertaining of the musical operatic moments so far this season.

ALLEN YORK.

Other Operas

Tuesday evening Muzio reappeared in Tosca, with Kingston, Marr and Rothier in other leading roles.

On Wednesday a repeat of "The Tales of Hoffman" was given, with Garrison, Braslau, Harrold, Rothier and D'Angelo.

On Thursday Muzio repeated her fine performance of "Aida" with Kingston as Radames.

This afternoon (Friday) the weekly student-artist program includes as soloists with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Gennaro Papi, conductor, Janet Linn Cobb, violinist, and Mabel Lyons, pupil of Howard Wells, pianist.

Tomorrow evening the first hearing of "Lakme" will occur, with Garrison as the "bell singing maid."

It looks as though the third week is keeping well to the standard that Ravinia set at the beginning.

GAVIN WILLIAMSON

Gavin Williamson, pianist, has recently returned from Pittsburgh, Pa., where he has completed a most successful year as supervisor of music in one of the largest high schools, and as organist at the Trinity Episcopal Church. During August he will substitute for Mr. Palmer Christian at the Kenwood Evangelical Church in the latter's absence.

Mr. Williamson will remain in Chicago during the coming year and will be open for engagements as accompanist, many of which he has already booked.

NOTES FROM THE STUDIO OF ESTELLE L. RUSSELL

Miss Mayme Baumgarten sang at Fort Sheridan for the soldiers on Sunday evening, June 23, and at Oak Park on Tuesday, June 25.

Mrs. Lucille Hayley is soloist for the Howard Theater the week of the 16th, and Miss Louise Treitz the week of the 23rd.

Miss Emma Kemp sang the offertory solo at Erie Chapel on Sunday, June 30. Miss Kemp is one of the girls who successfully passed the civil service examination for yeowomen and left for Washington Monday, July 8. This makes the tenth pupil from the studio to enter service. Miss Dorothy Sutton, coloratura soprano, is driving for the Red Cross. It will soon seem more like a recruiting camp than a studio. There are now representatives in France, on the seas, in Georgia, in Texas, at Great Lakes and in Illinois.

The choir of the Garfield Park Baptist Church gave their closing song service of the season Sunday evening. The work of the choir was most gratifying. Two numbers especially well rendered were "The Lord Is My Strength" (Wooler) and "By Babylon's Wave" (Gounod). Soloists for the evening were Misses Clara Link, Pauline Solomon, Bernice Austin and Mr. William Mills.

THE WESTERN CONSERVATORY

On last Wednesday evening the Western Conservatory presented pupils of Grace Knowlton Scott in the following program:

Little Friends Polka ..... Streabbog
John Willard
The Prince's Wedding ..... Hartman
Delphine Metz
Dance of the Dewdrops ..... Rouka
Rose Bobinsky
Voices of Spring ..... Keats
Mildred Gentner
Song of May ..... Williams
Ruth Bobinsky
Shepherd's Evening Song ..... Blake
E'Lancee (Mazurka) ..... Wach
Lucille Epstein
Piano duo—Scherzo Polka ..... Behr
Alexander Donald and Eugene Felz
Grandmother's Menuet ..... Grieg
Flower Song ..... Fieldhouse
Luella Metz
Two Flowers ..... Koelling
Frances Haley
Crystal Chimes ..... Wilson
Alexander Donald
Il Trovatore ..... Dorn
Ethel Bobinsky
Piano duo—Serenade Badine ..... Gabriel
Alice Freeberg and Ethel Bobinsky
Sextette from Lucia ..... Dorn
Beulah Zimmerle
La Regata ..... Liszt
Tarantelle ..... Mills
Alice Freeberg

Mrs. Scott may certainly felicitate herself on the fact that her pupils proved her, without equivocation, to be one of the most careful and definite of teachers for children, and the Conservatory may well congratulate itself that such a fine showing was possible by one of its teachers.

Every pupil, whether very small or ranging well up in the teens, and regardless of length of study, played whatever was assigned to be played with perfect accuracy in reading, good, reliable memory and with such carefulness and taste as to prove conclusively that there is no slipshod work in Mrs. Scott's studio.

There was present a decided feeling of good fellowship and that sort of camaraderie which makes each one rejoice in the success of the other and, in fact, promotes that success very surely through an established atmosphere of friendliness and consequent confidence.

Some of the older pupils, toward the end of the program, were very far advanced in technic and in the interpretation of good repertoire, such as Miss Freeberg, Miss Zimmerle, Alexander Donald and Ethel Bobinsky—in fact, all the Bobinskys (of whom there were three on the program) showed talent and application.

A little girl of exceptionally good taste and perfect accuracy is Lucille Epstein, but, as said above, every pupil on the list displayed these qualities in agreeable proportions, and it would be possible to commend each one separately did space permit.

The one violin pupil appearing is in the class of C. B. Durkee and in her clear, definite work proved him a thoroughly conscientious teacher also.

Miss Catherine Owens, who sang "The Children's Home" (Cowen), in a very nice voice and charming style, is a pupil of H. W. Owens, director of the voice department of the Conservatory, and she did him much credit.

Balfour — Constance Balfour, practically an unknown artist in the east before her Newark Festival appearance on May 4, stepped into favor quickly and will be heard many times on the concert platform and has been engaged for three appearances with the Russian Symphony Orchestra the coming season.

PUBLIC SCHOOL MUSIC

The International Kindergarten Union held its twenty-fifth annual meeting in Chicago June 24-29, and offered many delightful musical treats upon its program.

Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Helen Buckley Lee sang two groups of songs, one of which was four Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes, the music of which was based upon Chinese themes. Mr. Le Roy Shields, who is becoming a great favorite in the city, played magnificently Prelude in G Minor (Rachmaninoff) and Valce (Wieniawski).

At the Municipal pier on Wednesday afternoon, Prof. Peter W. Dykema, from the University of Wisconsin, Madison, gave an address upon "Community Singing" and led the audience in a most inspiring manner in singing familiar songs.

Herbert E. Hyde was the moving spirit musically in the Thursday afternoon session at Mandel Hall, University of Chicago, when he played the following organ numbers: "Choral Song and Fugue" (Wesley), "Minuet a l'Antico" (Seeboeck), "Caprice Heroique" (Bonnet).

A collection of "Rhythms for the Kindergarten," written by Mr. Hyde, was illustrated charmingly by children under the direction of Miss Grace Heywood. The different motions included: Procession, See-Saw; Indians; Bells; The Big Clock; The Little Clock; High-stepping Horses; Running Horses; Galloping Horses; Lullaby; Church; Skip.

The Civic Music Association offered a children's chorus of about seventy-five voices, under the direction of Grace Norbeck, in two groups of folk-songs of different nations. These were well sung, both as to simplicity and clarity, and furnished delight to the Friday afternoon audience.

The convention was anticipating with great pleasure a cantata, "The Fable of Flowers," by Eleanor Smith, which was to be presented at Hull House, Saturday morning. Late Friday evening announcement was made that the performance could not be given. It was said that Miss Smith was called out of town by the death of a relative.

The convention also went in large numbers to the initial opera performance at Ravinia Park. We are glad to have outsiders see our summer musical spot, of which we are so proud.

PRISCILLA ALDEN

In Music News last week the charming picture which accompanies this article was used in connection with a review of the work of two pupils of Miss Agnes Peterson, but unfortunately the name of the young lady was given incorrectly.

Her name is Priscilla Alden, and although she is not the immediate descendant, perhaps, of the original Priscilla Alden, she is certainly just as attractive as that New England damsel ever dared to be.

The part of the article in Music News (written by Albert Cotsworth) which refers to Miss Alden specifically reads as follows:

"'Perdita' (a piano piece written by Harmon H. Watt) is a bit of a coquette as presented by Priscilla Alden, as well as a composition of vivid atmosphere and true musical worth. In passing, the original Priscilla Alden was one also, for she was the one who asked poor John why he didn't speak for himself instead of the doughty Miles Standish."

Miss Peterson had every reason to feel gratified at the showing made by her pupil. Miss Alden, on first hearing, seems gifted in unusual measure along the lines of sentiment and a feeling for colors of soft and delicate texture and a facility in blending them for graceful pictures. She sensed the poignancy of that melody in the Chopin Funeral March without in the least submitting to any impulse to make it sentimental. In the rather obvious embroidery of the Weber Concerto she had speed, facility and clarity at command."

———###———

Coryell—At the State Teachers' Association meeting at Lansing, Mich, recently, Margaret Spaulding sang with much success three songs by Marian Coryell, these being, "O Tender Night" (Louasa Gibson), "Contentment" (Sara Teasdale) and "Springtime" (Marian Coryell). Roger Bromley was also on the same program, singing "Entreaty" and "Nocturne," by Mrs. Coryell, who acted also as the accompanist for both singers.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The second alumni recital of the Northwestern University School of Music was given at Music Hall in Evanston on last Friday evening. Ruth Bowen Goodsmith, pianist (class '14), Frances Arnold, soprano (class '15), and Doris Trafford, accompanist (class '16), were the soloists of the evening.

Before a well proportioned audience, Miss Arnold opened the program with "As on the Swelling Water" (Caldara) and "Pastoral" (Veracini). Miss Arnold acquitted herself with great honor.

She gave the music a careful interpretation and sang with genuine feeling, especially in the Veracini work.

Miss Goodsmith imparted to her readings of "Pastoral" and "Capriccio" (Scarlatti) poetic warmth, displaying unfailing technic, delicate touch and singing tone. The young lady possesses, in short, all the elements necessary to the making of a pianist of the first rank. "The Lass With the Delicate Air" (Arne) was properly pictured tonally and delivered in good style, denoting the careful preparation of Miss Arnold. "The Seraglio's Garden" (Sjogren) and "Where My Caravan Has Rested" (Loehr) were brilliant examples of Miss Arnold's perceptive interpretative values. In MacDowell's "Sonata" (the last two movements) Miss Goodsmith revealed herself to be a resourceful musician, gifted with virile conception of power and discreet emotion of tone. Burleigh's "Negro Spirituals" was given an interesting background. In all, the natural beauty of Miss Arnold's voice showed her to be an artist equally at home in every mood and in many styles.

We were unable to hear the last group.

Doris Trafford provided neat and artistic accompaniments for Miss Arnold.

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD MUSIC SCHOOL

The Effa Ellis Perfield Music School opened its Summer Session last Monday with an address by Mrs. Perfield on the equipment of the teacher in which she emphasized the need of musical memory, dictation exercises, fore feeling and the memorizing of music, these being special courses to be taken in connection with her regular pedagogical course.

Following this talk, Mrs. M. Barbereux-Parry gave a lucid explanation of her unified diction and voice building for the use of the piano and voice teacher.

Lena Wheeler Chambers, head of the piano department, was next to interest the audience with a brief outline of her understanding of the expression and interpretation of music by means of the piano, prefacing her remarks with the following quotation and comments: "'Nothing stops with itself, everything touches, effects, and modifies everything else,'; which truth analyzes clearly why there is nothing absolutely original, and at the same time it explains why each individual is unique and responsible to all mankind for his particular message, thus making us all teachers of whomsoever we come in contact with whether we will or no."

Mrs. Chambers has worked out a system whereby such perfect control of the entire body and the piano is obtained that seemingly there is but one instrument. This control is established through an understanding of the properly adjusted frame of the body, and the resilient condition of muscles which must be able to respond to the finest thought conveyed to the listener through consciously controlled musical vibration.

To her, expressing the emotional, poetic and dramatic qualities of music parallels the use of language correctly spoken by thinking the fingers and their tips tongues which literally enunciate and pronounce; as a word may be spoken in numerous and varied ways, so too may one produce a given tone upon the piano as his thought demands. Other interesting truths with appropriate illustrations were given before Mrs. Chambers brought to a close not only her own comments but also the morning's program.

On Saturday morning Effa Ellis Perfield gave a "Music Test," which was greatly appreciated by those in attendance. Mrs. Perfield has established these "tests" as a means of showing results with students developed by her teachers who use her pedagogy of inner-feeling, reasoning and drill, and at the same time these "tests" enable Mrs. Perfield to keep in close touch with pupils' work which she realizes is apt to be neglected when so much time is spent teaching teachers.

Mrs. Perfield prefaced the test with a talk on pedagogy and the "Three Educational Senses." She said in part: "Five years ago I prophesied that within ten years the word pedagogy would no longer be despised, the title pedagogue would be highly esteemed and pedagogical courses would take the place, at least in name, of normal training courses and teachers' courses.

"There is a difference between a teacher and a pedagogue. What is a pedagogue? One who understands pedagogy. What is pedagogy? A definite science of presentation. When the principle of pedagogy has been discovered and established there can be no rearranging or reformulating it. Many teachers teach many things pedagogically and psychologically, but because they have not a definite principle upon which all their work is based they fail in the final result. There is no balancing and focusing of vital points.

"The pedagogue must be equipped with three things. Material, order, method. He must know poor as well as good material. He must know how to select material that is suited for the pupil at the time. The best material is that which furnishes a stimulus for the interest and developing of the student. The teacher must have order. Being orderly does not mean classifying subject material so that it never gets out of its "pigeonhole." It means a vision of the whole and the parts and blending, correlating and focusing on the goal. Method is the pedagogy, and this is what teachers at present need most.

"The principle of pedagogy I sum up in a 'trinity' of words — inner-feeling, reasoning and drills.

"Inner-feeling is the something within that prompts expression.

"Reasoning is intelligent analytical observation.

"Drill is the constructive repetition which makes for facility and skill.

"Inner-feeling can only be developed through the training of the three educational senses—ear, eye and touch. There is no need paying any attention to the cultivation of the senses of smell and taste, but the ear, eye and touch must have special care if the present lack in our educational system is to be overcome. It is an evident and lamentable fact that pupils are too mental. They have no feeling, hence no appreciation. Pupils of even 12 and 13 years of age will reason a rhythm upon a first presentation but cannot feel it, neither can they create a melody to a rhythm.

The Three Musical Senses

"There are three senses that are appealed to in music. The pupil wholly developed uses all three. It is a mistake to think of music as appealing to the ear direct. The first appeal must be to the ear. Then the senses of eye and touch are developed associatively.

"The ear is reached through exercises that the pupil hears, imitates or memorizes.

"The eye is trained by associating the symbol or 'eye picture' with what is heard.

"The touch in the purely musical sense can only be rhythm physically expressed.

"But for the sake of drill and facility we use touch in the more general and enlarged sense, including any action of the body or part of the body, such as—

"Clapping for rhythms.
"Making circles or wheels.
"Writing rhythms.
"Reading rhythms.
"Singing rhythms.
"Playing rhythms.
"Dancing rhythms.

"Moving hands up and down or to right and left.

"Finally the result is that even mere physical actions become a part of musical feeling. Consequently musical training based on ear, eye and touch vitalizes the hearing, seeing and touching.

"Ear training in the limited sense is merely the exercise of the ear drum of the physical ear.

"The comprehensive sense means the effect of musical ideas upon the mind. The mind becomes sensitized to impressions in such a way that the three senses of ear, eye and touch co-operate in contributing to musical development, instead of being limited to the separate processes of mere sense of hearing, seeing and touching.

"Ear training must not begin and end with the hearing and naming of notes as a reproduction of something heard before, but it must train the mind to respond to sense impressions made by any one of the three senses, ear, eye and touch.

"These ideas may come to the mind through tones actually heard through the seeing of groups of notes, groups of phrases and the like, or ideas may come through the repetition of physical movements which have been associated with music.

"For instance: The music of a polka or folk dance is heard and if the pupil has previously danced a polka or has seen the polka danced, at once the ear brings the eye and touch or physical action into play.

"Again the pupil forms his fingers into a position for the playing of a chord on the piano and immediately the eye and ear are working. The pupil sees the notes of a chord and at once the ear and touch are co-operating. In other words pupils learn to hear with their eyes and touch, to see with their ears and touch, and to feel physical contact with their ears and eye. These senses not only admit of training, but any one of the three calls the other into action through association and suggestion.

"The school room fails unless it combines ear, eye and touch in general education.

"The pupil speaks the language, spells it, reads it and writes it. Music study in the school room or private studio should have these three senses working together from the beginning.

"Not singing alone for two or three years without hearing and seeing, but developing ear, eye and touch as a trinity so that the ear works through the eye and touch—the eye works through the ear and touch—the touch works through the ear and eye.

"This combination of ear feeling, eye feeling and touch feeling finally becomes inner-feeling."

The music test was given a class of six pupils ranging in age from 8 to 12 years.

First—Mrs. Perfield gave a sight reading test.

Second—A chord spelling test in which one small boy of 11 years constructed and spelled 84 chords in 1 minute and 50 seconds, breaking the New York record by 10 seconds, for which Mrs. Perfield presented him with a class pin.

Third—These pupils sang, spelled, played and wrote major, minor, diminished, augmented triads, dominant 7ths, diminished 7ths and German 6th chords.

Fourth—They took rhythmic dictation on all kinds of note groups, including dotted notes and other uneven groups.

Fifth—They took harmonic dictation on chord progressions never heard before.

Sixth—They spelled scales and went through a test on signatures including such scales as B sixteen flats, F thirteen sharps, etc. Mrs. Perfield claims that if you do not know more than one block east you do not understand the principle of east, hence if a pupil only knows one sharp or seven sharps he is not working from a principle and has missed the larger vision.

Seventh—These pupils took melodic dictation.

Eighth—They spelled twenty-one kinds of tetrachords from ear dictation.

Ninth—One boy transposed a piece he had never played before.

Tenth—This same boy had his memory work tested. Mrs. Perfield believes in musical memory supported by intellectual memory and eliminates the saying of letters. This boy proved that he had his piece musically memorized. He could play, sing, write, tap any phrase of his piece. Although the test of saying the letters was given, Mrs. Perfield believes it is more of a "show-off stunt" than a test of musical value and if carried to a point of great skill will be destructive instead of constructive.

Next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock Mrs. Perfield will give the first lesson to a class of beginners. Mothers and teachers are invited to come and bring some students.

BUSH CONSERVATORY NOTES

The close of the Summer session at Bush Conservatory next week brings a number of important recitals in the weekly series which has attracted so much favorable comment. These recitals are primarily for the Summer school students, but this year have served also to direct attention to the fine new building which is the future home of the conservatory.

On July 23 at 3 p. m. a joint program will be given in the new recital hall of the building by Mme. Julie Rive-King, pianist; Herbert Miller, baritone, and Rowland Leach, violinist; and on July 25 at the same place a program will be given by Edgar Nelson pianist, and Richard Wagner, cellist.

On July 20 an advanced students' recital is scheduled and also on July 27.

The attendance at the summer school this season has been better than at any previous year and the reservations received already for the Fall term indicate that the enrollment will be the largest in the history of the institution.

WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

On next Sunday afternoon a patriotic "at home" will be given at the Whitney Tew Studios in the Fine Arts Building, at which time Mlle. D'Oex will sing a new composition by Herbert J. Wrightson, which in compass covers three octaves, and was specially arranged for Mr. Tew's work.

John A. Olcott will sing a recitative and aria from "Messiah," and a ladies' chorus will give "The Star Spangled Banner."

CARL E. CRAVEN

Carl E. Craven, who has at the present time an almost capacity class and who has taught heavily throughout the past season, is often asked the secret of his success in this line.

His answer is, briefly: "By being honest with every one that comes to me to discuss voice study."

By this, Mr. Craven means that he will not, under any circumstances, hold out false promises or give untrue advice, nor will he allow any pupil to imagine that anything about his work is satisfactory when the reverse is true, even though all previous teachers may have combined in deceiving the student.

This course, naturally, lost Mr. Craven many prospective pupils at first, but it has long since given him a reputation which has the contrary effect among serious-minded young singers.

In spite of his large amount of teaching, however, Mr. Craven still finds time to put much study on the opera repertoire, and has on his list "Carmen," "Pagliacci," "Cavalleria," "Martha" and "Faust," and is at present studying "Tosca."

Mr. Craven fulfills a great many concert engagements and is still the tenor of the Chicago Musical Arts Quartet, as well as the manager of that ensemble.

Last Sunday these singers gave two concerts for the Gibson City (Ill.) Independent Chautauqua Association and scored a great success.

Mr. Craven, besides his church work and his concert engagements, has been offered many important teaching engagements in institutions, among them being the directorship of the voice department at Lexington (Ky.) College, but he prefers his studio work.

He has been advised by many to enter the field of opera.

ETHEL BRENK

Miss Ethel Brenk of Milwaukee, a charming young soprano, was engaged to give a recital for the opening of the new million-dollar athletic club last week.

Miss Brenk is no stranger to local audiences, or, in fact, to much of the entire state, where she has been heard frequently with orchestra and in oratorio and recitals. Her voice is of very individual quality, sympathetic and at the same time extremely resonant and brilliant, enabling her to please in a varied program.

Having the adjunct known as "presence," together with youth and a voice adapted to singing in large places in its excellent carrying power, the future should hold much for her.

On this occasion special mention should be made of the aria from "La Boheme" and "Arditi Waltz" and two charming songs in a lighter vein by Louise Kummer of Chicago, just from the press.

MARY WILLING MEAGLEY

Mrs. Mary Willing Meagley, organist and director of the chorus choir at the McCabe Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church in Chicago, has been granted a longer vacation than usual by the official board and will spend all of July and August at her home in Toledo, Ohio. During this period Mrs. Margaret Lester, soprano soloist, will be in charge of the choir and Miss Mabel Wagner, assistant organist and a former pupil of Mrs. Meagley, will preside at the organ.

For the past six years Mrs. Meagley has been making weekly trips between Toledo and Chicago, with classes of piano pupils in both towns, besides the church work in Chicago and lectures on "Appreciation of Music" at the Smead School for Girls in Toledo, where she also directs the singing. Mrs. Meagley is president of the Toledo Pianoforte Teachers' Association, which has been instrumental in bringing some of the greatest pianists in recitals.

The last musical service of the season was given on June 30 by the chorus choir of McCabe Memorial Church, the program being arranged from the works of Mendelssohn. The assisting soloists, Mrs. Margaret Lester, soprano, Mrs. James Black, alto, Mr. James Fisher, baritone, and Mr. Blye, tenor, gave excerpts from "Elijah."

The Chicago piano pupils were presented in a closing recital in the Sunday School auditorium and the large class in Toledo gave an interesting program at the Museum of Art.

At the same beautiful hall several pupils were brought to public notice in individual recitals. Miss Elizabeth Anderson appeared on July 1st at 7:45 in a junior program which included a Prelude of her own composition.

The same evening at 8:30, Miss Ruth Siek, one of Mrs. Meagley's advanced pupils, played a group of difficult Chopin Etudes, the Liszt "La Campanella" and the entire Concerto in A minor by Grieg.

On July 5th Miss Esther Geary was presented, assisted by Mrs. Frank D. Stranahan, soprano, who sang charmingly a group of French songs and another by American composers. Miss Geary played the Mendelssohn Concerto in D minor for her closing number.

Mrs. Meagley has enrolled a large class of piano and harmony students for summer work in Toledo, Ohio.

DENVER

By MRS. JAMES M. TRACY

The Musical Society of Denver will give its first reception and program Saturday evening, July 13, on the Roof Garden of the International Rubber Company. Percy Rector Stephens, the New York vocal teacher, and the Saslavsky Trio, composed of Alexander Saslavsky, Frederick Goerner and Alfred de Voto, who are summering in Colorado, will be the guests of honor. Musical people are looking forward with much pleasant anticipation to this event.

Nellie Cockayne presented her pupils in recital, May 17, at the Knight-Campbell Hall, and on the day following A. Hadley, assisted by Anna Ryer Ryan, gave his thirty-eighth piano recital in the same hall.

Mme. Ida Soda, the well-known vocal teacher in Wolfe Hall, left for the East July 3d, after a successful and busy Winter's work. She will do coaching in New York and will reopen her studio September 1st. On May 20th Mme. Soda presented a number of her students in an attractive concert, assisted by Mrs. Harry Leight, pianist, at the Woman's Club Auditorium.

In music circles it is regretted that Mme. Emma Manlove, who had established a reputation as one of the ardent vocal workers, has gone to Minneapolis to reside permanently. Her many friends wish her success.

The last concert of the season of the Treble Clef Club was given at the Central Presbyterian Church and the receipts given to the Recreation Furlough Camp for American Soldiers.

The Tuesday Musical Club gave an elaborate musicale in the ball room of the Brown Palace Hotel, May 28. Mrs. J. H. Smissaert, pianist, and J. Warren Turner, tenor, were the able assistants. Much credit for the year's work is due to the able direction of Bessie Dade Hughes and the club accompanist, Lucy Inskeep Townsend. This closed the twenty-seventh season of the Club.

The piano pupils of Belle d'Autremont gave two programs at her studio, June 12 and July 2. The vocal pupils of Florence Siever Middaugh, assisted by Valucia Roughton at the piano, were heard at the Central Christian Church.

Alexander Saslavsky, the well-known concertmaster of the Damrosch Symphony Orchestra, who for the past few summers has given a series of chamber concerts with his trio party, will open their series, July 5, at the Wolcott School Auditorium. The entire proceeds of these concerts, which will also include a series in Colorado Springs, Pueblo and Estes Park, will be for the American Red Cross. The personnel of the trio is Alexander Saslavsky, violinist; Frederick Goerner, cellist, and Alfred de Voto, pianist.

Our beautiful Estes Park, which is known as the "Switzerland of America," has formed a music and study club, the only music club in that part of the state. Mrs. Clement Yore, a writer of chamber music and wife of the poet of Colorado, best known because of having set to music her husband's poems, is the president of this new society. Other officers are: Mrs. D. C. May, vice president; Mabelle Robertson, secretary; Mrs. F. P. Clatworthy, treasurer, and Mrs. J. P. Thorny, hostess. While it is understood that Estes Park is a noted summer resort, yet a population of some 300 people live there throughout the Winter, so this is to be a permanent, all-the-year-round club. However, throughout the Spring, Summer and Fall months, the most important programs will take place, from the fact that at this time a number of artists and musicians from the East and abroad make their summer home here. Charles Wakefield Cadman, the well-known American composer, is one of the honorary patrons.

The Reo Circle of the Woman's County Council of Defense has been organized, with Mrs. O. C. Barton, the hostess of the Hotel Reo, as president, who is arranging to give a musicale for the benefit of the war work.

At the last meeting of the Liszt Music Study Club Dr. James M. Tracy closed the ninth season with his 180th lecture before this Club, by giving a review of what his talks had embraced throughout that period. Wilma Gerspach gave an entire program of Sidney Smith's transcriptions.

The Liszt School of Music, Dr. and Mrs. James M. Tracy, directors, gave a miscellaneous school concert, June 22, at the Knight-Campbell Recital Hall. The Lampe Male Quartet, who sing splendidly, proved a great attraction at this concert given by Arloa Ozburn, Mary Adele Tracy, Josephine Buff, Frances Mauro, Lucille Hill, Mary Casey, Sarah Judelovitz, Irene Hubbell, Florence Galbraith, Clara Richmond, Justine Sarkisian, Wilma Gerspach, Irene Miller, Alice Casey, Josephine Brown, Margaret Williamson, Mollie Judelovitz, Bernice Isaacson and Grace Marie Ganung.

The citizens and tourists of Denver are well provided with Summer music of a varied nature. Clarence Reynolds, the new municipal organist, plays to interested audiences every day except Sunday, from 12 to 1 o'clock, at the City Auditorium, and Rafaelo Cavallo, with his City band, draws large crowds to City Park every afternoon and evening.

A. M. Oberfelder, manager, under the patronage of the City of Denver, will present the Denver Municipal Artist Series at the Auditorium for the season of 1918-19. The entire series of ten concerts, comprising the best-known artists, are only $2.50 plus war tax of 25 cents. Many patrons of the art are availing themselves of this wonderful opportunity.

ASSOCIATION OF PRESIDENTS AND PAST PRESIDENTS

The annual meeting of the Association of Presidents and Past Presidents of the National and State Music Teachers' Association was held in Chicago July 10 and 11 in rooms furnished by the American Conservatory.

The membership of this society being limited to past presidents, it becomes at once a body peculiarly fitted by experience to consider the musical needs of the country and by working with and through the state associations can be of immense value to the cause of American music.

At present the society is giving particular attention to standardization and on this occasion an important paper on that subject was furnished by Arthur L. Manchester of Georgetown, Texas. The aim of the association is to establish definite standards for music teaching throughout the country and has already arranged examinations in all branches of music study, which will be furnished to state associations when desired, The society, through its examining board, is prepared to examine candidates for the licentiate, associate and fellowship certificates in any branch of music.

The association also acts as advisory board for the state associations, and the volume of correspondence received during the year gives ample proof of its value in that capacity.

Another important matter discussed at the meeting was the issuing of a bulletin to keep the members of state associations in touch with each other and enable them to be mutually helpful.

The association went on record as favoring a national conservatory under government control.

The Arkansas association last year instituted a system of examinations and elected an examining board. In order to gain the confidence of the musicians of the state this examining board at once applied to the Association of Presidents and Past Presidents for examinations, which were given and certificates granted. This year the same board will take the associate examinations.

The meetings of this association, owing to the wide experience of its members, are keenly interesting, and the future is full of promise. The officers elected for the coming year are: President, E. R. Lederman; vice president, D. A. Clippinger; secretary and treasurer, Arthur L. Manchester.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

The fifth and last recital of the summer session will be given by Heniot Levy and Herbert Butler, Wednesday morning, July 24, at Kimball Hall. The program will consist of three sonatas for violin and piano—the Grieg C Minor Sonata, the Kreutzer Sonata (Beethoven) and the Sonata in E Minor by Bossi.

The following have been added to the faculty of the American Conservatory for the coming season:

Piano—Adalbert Huguelet, Hugh Porter, Alice Weber, Grace Welsh.

Voice—Frank Parker, Edna Wilder, Frances Burch.

Violin—George Perlman, Richard Broemel.

Organ—Hugh Porter.

Ragna Linne has departed for California, where she will spend her vacation for rest and recuperation.

The American Conservatory offers, in addition to the usual gold and silver medals, three special prizes for the season of 1918-19, as follows:

1. One yearly free scholarship in the graduating class of the piano department.
2. One yearly free scholarship in the graduating class of the vocal department.
3. One yearly free scholarship in the graduating class of the violin department.

Successful candidates may choose their instructors.

J. B. TROWBRIDGE IN CALIFORNIA

J. B. Trowbridge, a long-time resident of Chicago, but now located in Los Angeles, has sent Music News some programs, from which the following data are culled:

In May a festival concert was given by the Los Angeles County Sunday School Association, under the direction of J. B. Trowbridge, when the soloists were Grace Widney Mabee, soprano; Grace Helen Adams, cornetist; Ezri Alfred Bertrand, tenor, and Gilbert Green, violinist. The Sunday School Festival Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur M. Perry, also assisted; there being, further, three accompanists, Charles Howard Marsh, Florence M. Benedict and Homer Simmons.

In June, on the occasion of a farewell concert tendered to Mr. Dodelan, before his departure for Y. M. C. A. service in France, the Bible Institute Male Quartet appeared with great success, the personnel being E. S. Williamson, J. B. Trowbridge, C. M. Brooks and L. C. Dodelan.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Emmett Sheel, student of Gustaf Holmquist and, in public school music, of Harold B. Maryott, has been engaged as music supervisor in Maywood, Ill.

The closing concert of the Chicago Musical College series of weekly morning entertainments will be given in Ziegfeld Theater, July 27. The program will be provided by students in the piano, violin and vocal departments.

It is an augury of a successful musical season next winter that not only has the Chicago Musical College had by far the largest summer session attendance in its history, but that there is already heavy registration for the Fall term, which will open September 16.

Lucy Jacks, a student of Rudolph Reuter, has accepted a position as teacher at the Methodist College, Gainesville, Ga., and Miss Violet Gross, also a student of Mr. Reuter, will be teaching at the conclusion of the Summer term at Tennessee College, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

The concert that will be given by the Chicago Musical College at 11 o'clock this Saturday morning will be presented by students in the piano, vocal and violin departments. The following will be the program:

Piano—Scherzo, B minor.....Chopin
Alice Leteарte (Chicago)
(Student of Karl Reckzeh)

Vocal—Piff, Paff (Les Huguenots).....Meyerbeer
Dr. E. S. Urbanowicz (Chicago)
(Student of Adolf Muhlmann)

EASTLAKE AND KIERNAN AT GREAT LAKES

Miss Eleanor Eastlake and Miss Kathryn Kiernan of the American Conservatory, who appeared so admirably at Ravinia two weeks ago, repeated their program with additions the following week at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

The two girls were received with a great ovation and are to be accorded warm thanks for their services in this capacity. Miss Eastlake and Miss Kiernan, both of this city, are planning to enter a hitherto little explored field of vocal art, that of singing duets exclusively. Not only are their voices peculiarly adapted to this purpose, but their appearance as well. They are both very dark and make an especial point of having their gowns modeled on the same lines.

We wish them all the success in their new work which they undoubtedly deserve.

AT THE WARRINGTON THEATER

"A many years ago"—in fact, just about the time that famous line was first uttered in America by Little Buttercup of "Pinafore" affiliations—this writer, one winter, spent a month in New York and heard there some things which, to his unsophisticated mind, seemed then very wonderful and which have served, steadily and reliably, ever since as a yard stick by which many other things may be measured.

There was Emma Nevada in a remarkable performance of "Mignon" at the old Academy of Music (it is a wonder that this fine prima donna did not have a more momentous career) and doubtless much other exceptional music, although, strangely enough, it is the theatrical events of that month which stick most tenaciously in memory.

Among these were "Hazel Kirke" and "Adonis" (Henry Dixey), in their initial runs at the Madison Square and the Bijou Theaters, and a never-to-be-forgotten evening at Daly's Theater on Broadway, where, at that time, the original Augustin Daly Company was in full swing.

In the light of later developments it seems almost incredible, but an old scrap book of programs shows that the cast heard at that time included Mrs. Drew, John Drew, Ada Rehan, and May and Flora Irwin.

And the play was "A Night Off." And, as the writer had never seen the play since the memorable evening when May Irwin was the Maid, John Drew the Husband, Mrs. Drew his mother-in-law, and the lovely Rehan the much-abused young wife, he determined that nothing should prevent his seeing it again as given last week at the Warrington Theater in Oak Park, by the stock company now entering into a fine success under the management and direction of Walton Pyre.

The evening chosen was Saturday and thus, after a week of playing the lively comedy, it was witnessed when at its best development and finish—a development and finish which it may truly be said were very good, indeed.

Mr. Pyre believes in "the three P's," evidently, for his company is called, pleasantly and alliteratively, Pyre's Popular Players, and Oak Park has evidently taken Mr. Pyre and the alliteration emphatically to its usually frigid bosom.

"A Night Off" is one of the funniest plays ever written and it is just as clever and effective today as it was a quarter century ago—or longer.

It really contains two stories—two developments and two denouements. One concerns an old university professor who has written a play which is being given, anonymously, by a traveling theatrical company in the town, and who has to exercise his rather lame lying ability overtime in order to find an excuse for taking "a night off" from his more or less delightful home fireside in order that he may witness his own play.

The other plot concerns his son-in-law, whose young wife stumbles upon the statement in Balzac that all men are more or less predatory animals and that it is impossible to believe that any one of them is minus a scarlet "past."

She harps upon this subject so persistently that in self-defense her husband invents a very rosy story of his college days and this leads to complications so numerous and so exceedingly funny that it is impossible either to tell of them briefly or to indicate the joy evidenced by the Oak Park audience last Saturday evening in the presence of their unfolding.

Both stories intermingle and come to swift climax simultaneously and there is provided a lot of the most clever dialogue and a list of the most amazingly funny situations, which, however, all resolve themselves naturally and with great satisfaction to the audience.

Mr. Pyre played the part of the manager of the barnstorming company and did it with unction and style. He has become a great favorite in Oak Park, and the community is watching future announcements in reference to the big parts they may provide him.

Mrs. Pyre played the Rehan role very prettily and very distinctly, and Jack Goodwin, in the part of Dr. Harry Damask, was clever indeed. He was constantly funny without being exaggerated, and he spoke his lines so well that no one doubted for a moment what he had to say.

Warren Wade as Jack Mulberry and F. J. Bridgeman as his father were both indistinct in enunciation of lines, especially the latter, but each had proper conception of his part otherwise.

Avis Wynne as Susan was next best after Mrs. Pyre among the women of the cast, although Angela Baker as Mrs. Babbitt and Jean Cooper as her daughter were agreeable and alert, each lacking, however, something of dramatic power and experience.

Professor Justinian Babbitt is really the best part in the play, and Louis Lytton came very near probing the possibilities of the part accurately. His one mistake was in the exaggerated thinning of voice, which made his speeches, often at critical moments, unintelligible.

Frank Munroe played Prowl and Jean De Perrier the part of James satisfactorily.

The stage was well furnished and well managed and the costumes were generally very good.

The intermissions were too long, or perhaps the delay was in commencing; but, at any rate, the play lasted a full half-hour longer than it should.

A small orchestra did the best it could, considering the fact of its limitations, and was led adroitly by Ramon Girvin. This writer would much rather, however, have heard him in solo and let the playing of popular music between acts be supplanted by silence.

This week "Mam'zelle" is being given, and for next week, by popular vote, "The Thirteenth Chair" is announced. C. E. W.

PUPILS OF H. W. OWENS

The following interesting program, given last Sunday evening at the Park Avenue M. E. Church, is indicative of the splendid work being done by H. W. Owens of the Western Conservatory:

Chorus—The Heavens Are Telling.....Haydn
Vocal—The Children's Home.....Cowen
Catherine Owens
Anthem—Lead, Kindly Light.....Evans
Vocal—Dream of Paradise.....Grey
Mrs. Cora Gale
Chorus—And the Glory.....Handel
Duet—Love Divine.....Stainer
Irene Schroeder and Russell Boe
Chorus—By Babylon's Wave.....Gounod
Vocal—Tarry with Me.....Baldwin
Mildred Wessman
Chorus—Thanks Be to God.....Mendelssohn
Vocal—The Lord Is My Light.....Allitsen
Martha Nelsson
Chorus—Be Not Afraid.....Mendelssohn
Recit., air and duet—Help Me, Man of God.....Mendelssohn
Mary Woods and Russell Evans
Hallelujah Chorus.....Handel

Although the writer missed the first two numbers, it is certain that if Miss Owens sang as well as did the soloists who followed her she must have sung with great sincerity and clearness of tone. Mrs. Gale's rendition of "Dream of Paradise" (Grey) was most acceptable, and the Stainer duet done by Irene Schroeder and Russell Boe was given a very whole-hearted interpretation, of which the careful phrasing was a notable feature.

Mildred Wessman, who sang "Tarry with Me" (Baldwin), possesses a voice with great promise in it. Her enunciation was good and her voice of rich color. Mary Woods also has a voice which should develop beautifully. It is clear and powerful and mellow in quality. She sang very effectively the long solo in the Mendelssohn duet "Help Me, Man of God." Russell Evans, who sang with her, displayed great depth of tone and did his part very well.

The work of the chorus was particularly notable. Under the careful training of Mr. Owens it was enabled to produce effects which might be attributed to a choir of professional singers. An especially good climax was reached in "By Babylon's Wave" (Gounod); the men sang with outstanding vigor in "Thanks Be to God," and "Be Not Afraid" was rendered with great breadth of interpretation.

The Hallelujah Chorus, sung with suitable enthusiasm, brought this excellent program to a close, leaving with the writer the memory of a very enjoyable evening.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

RALPH MICHAELIS AT SOUTH CHURCH

The morning service at South Congregational Church on Sunday was enriched by some choice violin music done by Ralph Michaelis. For the prelude he used a Martini "Andantino" enlarged, but not robbed of its unaffected simplicity by Kreisler. Mr. Michaelis brought to this not only a tone of rounded fullness and pervading sweetness and phrasing of exquisite grace, but a surrender to the quaint delicacy and fragrance of the old Padre's method of expression. It was a mood reverently ideal, music of earnestness, sincerity and purity, and compelling by reason of the abounding beauty so expressed.

Mr. Michaelis added also an obbligato to Gounod's "Adore and Be Still," extremely sympathetic and tasteful and tonally of fine texture.

CHARLES W. CLARK IN SONG RECITAL AT BUSH CONSERVATORY

CHARLES W. CLARK

A markedly popular and successful group of songs was the last one sung by Charles W. Clark in his recital at the New Bush Conservatory on Dearborn street last Tuesday afternoon.

This group opened with the tragically dramatic "Devil's Love Song," by Hallett Gilberte, a really wonderful composition, and closed with the almost equally dramatic and absolutely fine "Gospel of Pan," by Rowland E. Leach, violin teacher at the Bush Conservatory.

Both these were done with such verve and swing as to fairly electrify the audience.

The group included further three small songs by Ernest Leo, who, although unknown to fame, is certainly a clever writer. His first song was in the form of a little sermon, embodying the idea, "If I can sing one song to ease a pain," etc.; the second was an Irish love song, and the third, extremely clever, was set to the cunning text which Music News has appropriated as the motto in the center of its editorial page today.

Further numbers of the group were: "Absent," a beautifully suave and expressive song by Frances Wyman, and "The Messenger," by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder.

This short piece begins with the insouciance of the young telegraph messenger delivering a "life and death" message, which brings agony to a waiting heart, while he unconcernedly saunters away whistling "Old Folks at Home," entirely unconscious of the grief he has unwittingly brought.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder has made a wholly logical and swiftly speaking story of this tiny moment and Mr. Clark has polished it to a point where his presentation of the number is fraught with great impression.

Both Mme. Sturkow-Ryder and Mr. Leach were called to the front by the eager audience, and each was given an ovation.

Next in interest, to this writer at least, was the group of Homer songs, which, in compensation for its inclusion of the hackneyed "Uncle Rome," held also one never before heard, i. e., "Old Watt and the Rabbits," which is certainly a very unique song and just as charming as unique.

Also the much sung "How's My Boy?" was used, and the beautiful piece, "Sheep and Lambs," than which nothing finer has flowed from the Homer pen.

Preceding this, Mr. Clark gave, intelligently and very beautifully, classics by Handel, Haydn and Mendelssohn, and a group of Chansons by Faure, Hillier, Duparc, Cuvillier and Widor—these constituting a twenty-minute period of supreme art and intense delight.

Accompaniments absolutely in touch with the art of the singer and positively uncanny in their quick adaptation to the prescribed moods and colors of the composers were supplied by Edgar Nelson.

Bush Temple in its new quarters is unique, and it is immensely successful, and no one item contributes more to its success than the inclusion in its faculty list of such artists as Mr. Clark and Mr. Nelson.

FLORENCE MACBETH AGAIN TO SING WITH THE CHICAGO GRAND OPERA COMPANY

Florence Macbeth, whose absence from the Chicago Opera last season was keenly felt and who has to her credit successful appearances in all parts of the United States besides the record achieved with the Chicago Grand Opera Company in past seasons, has been engaged by Cleofonte Campanini to rejoin the company and appear at the Auditorium during the next season in a great number of parts, which will be sung by her exclusively.

Her first appearance will be during the opening week of the season, when she will sing in "Martha."

Miss Macbeth has one of the finest voices on the stage today, as well as a personality and intelligence which rank her with the best anywhere.

Chicagoans remember her Lucia, Gilda, Filina, Rosina, Amina, with great delight, to say nothing of the Bird in "Siegfried" and various other roles in which she has sung here, and will welcome her reappearance heartily.

Walker—A program from the Walker Studio of Dancing was presented before the Rebekah Lodge at the installation of officers at Lawndale Hall July 12. Virna Harman Walker and a pupil, Marie Ruff, danced interpretative, Russian and Oriental numbers.

Scholin—Albert Scholin, for several years a student at The American Conservatory, as well as organist in Chicago churches, has opened a studio at Jamestown, N. Y., where he is meeting with much success.

Zygman—Mme. Flora Zygman, concert pianist, has been engaged as soloist to play with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, under Eugen Ysaye, some time in January.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA

In honor of Belgium "The Children's Crusade," by Gabriel Pierne, for the benefit of the fatherless children of France, was given at the People's Church Saturday evening, June 1, under the auspices of the French section of the St. Paul Institute.

The work enlisted the forces—150 strong—of the city's musicians, including a chorus of 100 children from the Visitation Convent and the Summit School. The chorus had the assistance of Miss Maud Borup at the organ and the following soloists: Mrs. William J. Towle, Mrs. Edward Rollin Sanford, Mrs. John L. Whitaker, and Lee Nadon and W. Scott Woodworth.

Mrs. Frank L. Hoffmann, director and at the piano, deserves great credit for a most beautiful performance—a glorious achievement.

For the benefit of the free sock fund of the Women's Navy Service Mr. and Mrs. John F. Finerty opened their home for a large musicale. Mrs. Frank O'Meara, contralto; Mrs. Harry Lee Mundy, violinist, and Scott Woodworth, tenor, gave the following program:

A FINE MUSICALE IN OAK PARK

On last Monday evening Arthur Randolph Fraser, choirmaster of Grace Church in Oak Park, and one of the most successful teachers in that suburb, presented his talented fourteen-year-old pupil, Elizabeth Harris, in a piano recital at his beautiful home studio, where the combination of grand piano, abundance of flowers, fine audience and great cordiality made the event entirely gala. To this end there was also contributed some extremely pleasing singing by Ruth Simmons, contralto, who was fortunately available as assisting artist and who had the advantage of authoritative and beautiful accompaniments at the hands of Mr. Fraser.

Miss Simmons has grown to be one of the most suave as well as artistic of local contraltos, and to a wholesome and friendly personality she adds a musicianship and an interpretative ability which, on Monday evening, made her groups extremely interesting and pleasurable.

A special gift for intimate and homely text has Miss Simmons, and her reading of "Mammy's Song" (Ware), "Ol' March Wind" and "The Blue Bell" (MacDowell) were therefore particularly fine.

Roger's "Wind and Lyre," Scott's "Lullaby" and Rummel's "June" were all charmingly and effectively done, and in "My Boy" (Huhn), one of the best war songs yet heard, she scored a triumph.

Miss Harris is a charming little girl, unaffected and gracious, while at the same time evidently musical to a degree and as temperamental as her years would logically warrant.

Technically she has been splendidly trained and, beyond question, her response to her teacher's suggestions as to study and practice has been whole-souled and conscientious.

Interpretatively she is delightful. Each number was played with a fine rhythmic swing, a careful conservation of tone qualities, good coloring and shading, exact pedaling and a very definite idea of the intentions of the composers.

The Beethoven "Moonlight Sonata" was given a definite and clear reading, the first movement being, however, much better than the last, in which just a little hurrying was observable.

The "Peer Gynt" Suite (Grieg) was done with a fine regard for its intricacies of technic and a definite idea of its content—particularly good was "Ase's Death," and this, taken in conjunction with the slow movement of the Beethoven, seems to prove that Miss Harris has an unusual gift for intensive and sombre cantabile passages.

However, quite as was to be expected, she read the Whitney "Waltz Caprice" so exceedingly well, with such sparkle and verve, as well as accuracy, as to create the greatest enthusiasm of the evening.

The Leschetizky left-hand perversion of the "Lucia Sextet" was also brilliantly done and the "Military Polonaise" (Chopin) was as bright and rhythmic as this writer has ever heard it done, save, perhaps, by De Pachmann or someone else of his ilk.

Girlishly dainty, yet with a splendid feeling for rhythm and a complete control of its rubato, Miss Harris played as encore "Ballet Mignon" (Wachs) in a thoroughly intelligent way.

The program ended with a scintillant reading of "Pomp and Circumstance" by Miss Harris and Mr. Fraser, which made a profound impression on the audience.

This number is in itself sturdy and powerful, but has a particular significance at present inasmuch as the public has grown to associate the text, "Land of Hope and Glory," with the middle part of the number, and therefore it arouses, always (as on Monday), a patriotic thrill and a fresh hope in "The Boys" who are making America the real "Land of Hope and Glory" in the war.

The program in full was as follows:

Sonata Quasi Una Fantasia, Op. 27, No. 2.....Beethoven
Adagio sostenuto; allegretto; presto agitato

THE "SHANEWIS BLOUSE"

We have had Mary Garden perfume and Mary Pickford chocolates and the Red Feather products, and now comes an article known as the "Shanewis Blouse," named after Cadman's successful American opera, "Shanewis," given last year at the Metropolitan.

This sartorial creation made its appearance a few weeks ago in Omaha, Neb., in the smart shops of that city. Says the Omaha Bee:

"The new Indian opera, 'Shanewis,' has been the inspiration for a very stunning blouse of Indian-red Georgette. It is one of the over-the-head affairs of the peplum type, embroidered very effectively in heavy blue and white worsteds. A slip-through sash of blue satin is an important feature. It is from the House of Flanders and is one of the many wonderful new blouses which arrived last week and one of the most striking things I have seen this season."

EDGAR M. COOKE

Edgar M. Cooke, a singer who returned to America at the beginning of the war, after much study abroad, and who is well known to Chicagoans, has been teaching at Oklahoma City, Okla., the past year.

He has been throughout that time director of music in St. Luke's Methodist Episcopal Church, which maintains the largest choir in Oklahoma.

During the season he has trained all the singers and put on (in concert form) the operas of "Carmen" and "Aida" for the Ladies' Musical Club.

EDGAR M. COOKE

He has also been manager of, as well as tenor in, the Metropolitan Operatic Quartet (composed of professional singers), which has had a very busy season.

As soloist Mr. Cooke has appeared three times in "Carmen," and once in "Aida," as well as filling many engagements with the local clubs.

Mrs. G. W. Salter, an artist pupil of Mr. Cooke, gave a recital on June 28 with much success.

The program, which was a very well arranged one, contained the names of Mrs. Frederick R. Owen, as accompanist, and Viola Palmer, as solo pianist, in addition to Mrs. Salter, and, in full, reads as follows:

Books and Music

BY HERBERT J. WRIGHTSON

The Assembly Hymn and Song Collection; compiled and edited by C. Guy Hoover. Price 75 cents. (Chicago: Educational Music Bureau.)

The frequent new editions demanded of this work point to its being satisfactory and well adapted to its purposes. Mechanically—printing, paper, binding, etc.—it is of high grade, and a survey of the general plan shows it to be arranged with both experience and method. There are five parts: "Scripture Readings and Responses," "Standard Hymns and Sacred Songs," "National and Patriotic Songs," "Part-Songs and Choruses" and "School and College Songs." The work may also be had in two separate sections, the first three parts or the last three parts. Parts 4 and 5 contain many standard compositions by the masters, Mendelssohn, Brahms, Pinsuti, Barnby, etc. A classified index is a further guide as to where to find a selection suitable for any particular occasion. "Some Rounds, Toasts and Singing Yells" conclude Part 5.

Bugle, Cornet, Drum; complete instructive manual, by V. F. Safranek. Price 75 cents net. (Carl Fischer.)

All the bugle calls of the U. S. Army and Navy, and complete general instructions as to bugling, with many exercises and quick-steps, form only a part of this small but comprehensive manual. There are thirty "Daily Bugle Calls" and about 100 more "Miscellaneous Calls." The words which are associated with many of these, and which help in the remembering of them, are given in a separate section. Besides all this, there are some drill instructions, flag signals, and even pistol technic, with a description of the regulation weapon. Trumpet cord knots are illustrated as a finale—all in 6x4¼, cloth bound.

Ten Classics for Harp and Organ; arr. by Gertrude Ina Robinson. Price $2.50 net. (Carl Fischer.)

A rather unusual combination is harp and organ, but a very effective one. That there is not much music published for such is, no doubt, owing to the comparative uncommonness of harps—in our present experience. The harp, however, is a graceful, delightful instrument, much more portable than a piano and yet producing similar effects; an organ background is an ideal one for its ethereal soarings. In the present finely printed collection are pieces such as the Adagio from Beethoven's "Pathetique Sonata," Gottschalk's "Last Hope" and Dvorak's Largo from "The New World Symphony."

Patriotic Songs of America; for women's voices. Price 30 cents postpaid. (Oliver Ditson Company.)

All the well-known patriotic songs are here—twenty of them—arranged for three or four part women's chorus, with piano accompaniment. The size is octavo and the cover is visibly patriotic.

ROSA RAISA

Julius Daiber, concert manager of Rosa Raisa, one of the great dramatic sopranos, has just received a cable from Buenos Aires, South America, announcing this artist's great triumph in "Aida," at the Teatro Colon, the role of Amonasro having been sung by Giacomo Rimini, the young Italian baritone of the Chicago Opera Company, who was also most successful on the occasion of his first appearance this season. Miss Raisa's next performance will take place in the great revival of "Norma," which opera has also been selected by Maestro Campanini for production next season in Chicago and New York, owing to this artist's unusual vocal and histrionic ability.

The return of Rosa Raisa to the United States is expected about the end of September.

The joint recital concert tour of these two celebrated artists begins on September 29 at the New York Hippodrome, and the same is completely booked up to November 10, with the exception of two dates, and will include appearances in the cities of New York, Boston, Bangor, Portland, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Newark, Worcester, Springfield, Chicago, Detroit and Dayton.

CONSTANCE BALFOUR

A re-reading of the last few issues of Music News discloses the fact that Constance Balfour, soprano, is rapidly coming to an important position in the music field and indicates that she will certainly be one of the big factors of the coming season.

Her voice is described as distinctly phenomenal and her art as very beautiful.

Deprived of fulfilling very important contracts by the war in Europe, she went to California three years ago, and in the cities of the West Coast she attained unlimited fame and prestige.

A few months ago she went to New York and has scored many successes there already.

She is under the management, for next year, of Daniel Mayer, who has made many important bookings for her.

SALIDA, COLO.

A Masonic picnic of unusual interest was enjoyed here on the Fourth of July by a large number of participants. After the rains of the morning, the cars formed a continual stream out to the beautiful groves near Poncha Springs. Bountiful lunch was spread on glistening white cloths under the trees. The showers were kind and merely sprinkled, did not drench, the happy crowds. An informal program was given, in which Masonic members and worthy matrons made interesting and retrospective speeches. Choruses were sung to the tinkling music from the ukulele, played by Miss Elizabeth Oakley. Mrs. Helena Bingham Burton, without accompaniment and under the spreading folds of Old Glory, sang her inspiriting song of the flag, "Hail, Starry Flag." In response to insistent applause she recited her poem to the soldiers of America, "Soldiers of Freedom," which was printed in these columns shortly after its writing a few months ago. It was a wonderful day and the motion was made and seconded that they would meet again next Fourth of July and as many times in between as possible.

The Minnesota Chapter of the American Guild of Organists held its annual picnic at Northfield, on the beautiful campus of Carleton College, Monday, June 17. Carl Paige Wood, organist of the Skinner Memorial Chapel, was host, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Strong and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence of the college faculty were among the guests. The $18,000 Steere organ was heard to good advantage when G. A. Thornton, dean of the guild, played the effective Fantasie Overture by Fricker. Mr. Wood concluded the delightful occasion with a short group consisting of Sarabande and Gavotte by Corelli (1653-1713), Nocturne by Ferrata, Andante by Stanitz (1746-1801) and the Prelude to "The Blessed Damozel" (Debussy).

Mr. Wood, on returning to the East, will be succeeded by Edmund S. Ender of Minneapolis.

NEW PATRIOTIC SONG BY LILY WADHAMS MOLINE

"The Clarion Call" is a new song just put on the market by the publishers for Lily Wadhams Moline, the popular Chicago organist-composer.

The text, a rousing one, is by Joseph W. Hallem, and the music is spirited, as well as beautiful, excellently carrying out the caption and the vigor of the verses.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Plans for the coming season in Detroit are being completed and are very interesting. The "course" plan is still in vogue here, the Central Concert Company giving one course and the Philharmonic another.

On October 15 the Central Company will open the new Arcadia Concert Hall with Enrico Caruso, Claudia Muzio and Pasquale Amato in joint recital. This is said to be the first time Caruso has left the Metropolitan for a single concert, and it will be the second time he has sung in Detroit, the first time having been nine or ten years ago.

Other artists announced for this course are Matzenauer, Maud Powell, Frank La Forge, Mischa Levitzki, Ethel Leginska, and Mme. Louise Homer.

Among the fine attractions offered by the Philharmonic is Rosa Raisa, the Russian soprano.

The Orchestra Association will present five orchestras, including, first, the Chicago Symphony, the New York Symphony, Cincinnati Symphony, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic. Rudolph Ganz and Enrico Tramonti will be the soloists with the Chicago Orchestra.

Detroit musicians are looking forward to the introduction of Eugen Ysaye as a conductor.

Leopold Auer is to leave his $40 per half-hour teaching in the Chicago Musical College long enough to give at least one recital in Detroit. He comes under the auspices of the Devoe-Detroit management of the Philharmonic course, as do also Galli-Curci, young Seidel (an Auer pupil), Frances Alda, Mabel Garrison, Sophie Braslau, Martinelli, De Luca and others. The course opens Monday evening, September 30, with the Metropolitan Opera Quartet, including Mmes. Alda and Lazzari and Messrs. Martinelli and De Luca.

Two artist pupils of William Howland, the veteran teacher of the Ann Arbor University School of Music and now connected with the Detroit Institute of Music, gave a recital in Temple Beth El on June 27.

The graduating exercises of the Detroit Conservatory of Music were given in the First Congregational Church on June 21.

The Ganapol School gave its closing and commencement concert in its own hall on June 21. Only three pupils participated, but excellent quality of work was revealed.

There are two music bureaus in Detroit. Miss Emory takes care of the theater and moving picture line, and Miss Romaine Wendell the afternoon and concert engagements.

More attention could profitably be given to church choir work and more attention could profitably be given to the religious aspect of church music in Detroit. Several sopranos we have heard recently would be decidedly more in place in light opera. True, music as an element of worship is apt to be lost sight of when there is a strong tendency to make it a large element of entertainment, as is so often done, especially at the evening service; but flippant manners and singers who roll their eyes in melodramatic wonder at some imaginary vision and sing the sublime words of "Come Unto Him" of "The Messiah" as though they were imitating Fritzi Scheff in "Mlle. Modiste" have no place in church, at least.

Also, we would like to inquire of Mr. Goodwin what authority there is for playing "Holy, Holy, Holy," the old hymn, in march time.

One of the interesting visitors to Detroit last winter was Mrs. Heber Knott of Grand Rapids, who with her pianologues and charming manner made a host of friends. Mrs. Knott also gave a number of original patriotic numbers, composed for the entertainment of 800 Grand Rapids men while they were mobilizing. BELLE D. HART.

Butler—Mme. Hanna Butler has gone to Ludington, Mich., where, as usual, she will teach a six weeks' summer term. She will also give a recital in that city. Miss Rhoda Arnold, an artist pupil of Mme. Butler, appeared in recital at the Birchwood Club on last Sunday.

Carlo Liten, the Belgian Actor

Robert Underwood Johnson writes as follows in the New York Times:

It is not often that a European dramatic artist comes to this country unheralded, as did Eleonora Duse; but, perhaps because he is not at present to undertake professional work with a company, Mr. Carlo Liten, the Belgian tragedian, some weeks ago quietly slipped into the harbor of New York with no other credentials than some letters of introduction from such men as Lord Bryce, Dr. Gilbert Murray and Sir Edward Elgar.

But during his short stay in America this modest exile has made a genuine and profound impression, both as man and artist. His mission and purpose is to make better known in America the poetry of his countrymen and of the French poets of distinction, and this he does through recitations of an unusual character, for Mr. Liten has that rarest of equipment, a voice of great natural range and beautiful quality and of the highest training in diction, and his natural sympathy with the poetry which forms his extensive repertoire is of the sort that gives distinction and charm to his work.

Mr. Liten has already been heard at the home of Pierre Mial, the Belgian consul, and in other drawing rooms in New York, at the Cosmopolitan Club, and at the Cercle Rochambeau and elsewhere, and always with unmistakable signs of approval. At the May Festival in Cincinnati, under the conductorship of Ysaye, he gave one of his principal pieces, "The Carillon" of the Belgian poet Cammaerts, to the accompaniment of Elgar's music, and his success was so marked that the audience recalled him several times and rose in his honor, and after his return to New York he was engaged to go again to Cincinnati for two more appearances. He is to take part on Saturday next, June 22, in the garden fete which Mr. and Mrs. George D. Pratt are to give at Glen Cove for the benefit of the Italian War Relief Fund of America, on which occasion he will give "The Carillon" and "Le Drapeau Belge," also by Cammaerts, "Les Moulins de Flandre," and other stirring patriotic poems.

Carlo Liten was born at Antwerp in the shadow of the cathedral and is in his fortieth year. His mother was an Italian and his father a Belgian, who, after the manner of fathers, strongly disapproved of his son's predilection for the stage, saying that he had no dramatic talent whatever, and advising him to stick at his work of manufacturing pianos. He made his debut in 1905 at the age of 26 at the Theatre du Parc at Brussels in the title role of the tragedy, "Polypheme", by Albert Samain, in which even without subordinate training he scored a success, all the more because there were then no tragedians in Belgium. With his company he soon began tours of his own country and of Holland, France, Switzerland, Germany, and England, with a visit to Milan, always playing in French, and adding greatly to his repertoire.

This professional life lasted for nine years, until the outbreak of the war. In England he came in touch with Sir Edward Elgar, who, after hearing his recitations, set to music not only "The Carillon," but the "Drapeau Belge" and "Une Voix dans le Desert." His reputation is Europe-wide, and is referred to in the letters of introduction which he has brought to America and in the English criticisms of his performances.

Mr. Liten, (whose name by the way, is pronounced Lee-ten) was, indeed, so well known in Germany that upon the arrival of the Germans at Antwerp he was recognized and treated with much courtesy by the officers of the great army which had ruthlessly invaded his country. They even paid him the left-handed compliment of asking him to undertake a diplomatic mission for them to other countries—that is to say, to become a spy! This was at the end of a series of official interviews when he was reporting at headquarters. They assured him that he was really one of them, that they remembered his fete in Berlin of the year before, and that they hoped he would undertake the friendly service; but as soon as Mr. Liten perceived the drift of their proposal he disguised himself as a workman and set out on foot at night for the Dutch frontier, leaving his home as it stood, containing, among other treasures, many paintings, which doubtless are now adorning drawing rooms in Germany.

In England Mr. Liten received a welcome commensurate with his European reputation. Miss McCarthy and Granville Barker arranged for him thirty representations at the Kingsway Theater and elsewhere of Verhaeren's tragedy, "Le Cloitre," and in the role of the monk, Balthazar (who confesses that he killed his father), Liten scored an undeniable success, as one may see from the contemporary notices in the Saturday Review, the Globe, and the Mirror, and other papers. John Palmer, writing in the first of these, says: "Carlo Liten is too excellent a tragic actor to be comparable with any one now on the English stage, with the possible exception of Henry Ainley. . . . Only a cataclysm could ever have shaken open to him the closed door of the insular British playhouse."

Mr. Palmer added that "he and every member of his company spoke their tragic French as though French were a noble language of which they were reasonably proud." This brings me again to the most obvious, but at the same time the rarest, endowment of Mr. Liten's art, his voice. Except that of Salvini, which was perhaps the most wonderful voice in the memory of any living person, Mr. Liten's is for resonance, serviceableness and charm the most remarkable I have ever heard from an actor. Add to this a mastery of gesture and expression dictated by a refined intelligence and we get a rare personality.

Mr. Liten has much to say of his own art and its conditions at the present time. In a recent conversation, he said:

"The dramatic art, like all the other arts, should evolve toward great simplicity, disengaging itself from artificiality, that is to say, from everything that is not founded on the basis of real life. Nowadays the 'mise en scene' is much too complicated and is the cause of many bad pieces and of a lack of dramatic artists, since the actors in such case do not give themselves the trouble of thinking. Usually this is all the fault of the directors of the theaters and of the contrivers of the spectacular, actuated by commercial motives. This scenic exaggeration with which a piece is framed serves to hide the want of ideas and flatters the bad taste of the public. Many a play that by grace of a sumptuous setting has reached a certain success would have proved a flat failure if presented with simple, decent scenery. The money spent on the mounting of one piece of this kind that runs a whole season might be better disposed in the presentation of five or six plays, with the result that the actors who in long runs tend to become manikins would be compelled by the variety of their roles to exercise their minds and thus have a better chance of becoming artists. The poets and dramatists would be so much better off, being stimulated to produce ideas rather than excuses for decorative scenes.

"Since the beginning of the war I have consecrated my efforts to the recitation of poetry of a dramatic sort which appeals to the emotions—poetry which brings one face to face with the public without artifice of scenery, makup, or costume, in the endeavor to create a special and adequate atmosphere for each poem, with the purpose of giving a sensation of live art, whether of sorrow or of joy. But my great desire is, when the world shall again have been made safe for art, as well as for democracy, to resume my work upon the stage."

Mr. Liten's extensive repertoire comprises, among the works of his countrymen, "Le Cloitre" of Verhaeren, "La Madonne" of Spaak, "Soeur Beatrice" and "Les Aveugles" of Maeterlinck, and "La Victoire" of Van Offel; among the modern French poets, "Le Polypheme" of Samain, a tragedy in two acts; and of the classics, Racine's "Andromaque," "Phedre" and "Britanicus"; Corneille's "Polyerecte," Moliere's "Tartuffe," Alfred de Vigny's "Chatterton," and de Musset's "Lorrenzazio" and "Les Units." I believe it was Brander Matthews who said that no actor has ever entirely failed in "Hamlet." Mr. Liten, however, confesses to having accomplished this feat, in his early days, but he does not despair of a new attempt at the role when he shall have had at least a year to study it. It would be fortunate for America if a way could be found to afford our public an opportunity of seeing him in some of the masterpieces I have named, to which he is adapted by language, race and temperament.

A Program at Streator

An innovation in musical affairs of this season was the twilight musicale given at the Foster residence on West Stanton Street, last evening, by Septimus E. Barbour, well-known baritone and teacher of voice and piano. Instead of a formal recital in a church, Mr. Barbour decided to entertain the pupils and their friends at an informal musical and social function. Everything he has promoted since coming here last fall has been of unusual interest, so a large number of music lovers accepted the invitation and filled the large living rooms to their utmost capacity. In fact, an overflow meeting was held on the porch, where the program could be enjoyed equally well.

Mr. Barbour presented representatives of his classes in voice and piano in a program that contained many of the best novelties of the year, the work of American composers predominating.

The gala air which pervaded last evening's affair was due to several reasons, one of which was that it was the wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Foster. The home was profusely adorned with baskets and vases of roses and carnations, in honor of the occasion. Another special feature of the affair was the fact that two of the students who reflected greatest credit on their teacher were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Darnell.

Mrs. Darnell has decided to take a position in Washington and Mr. Darnell will go into the aviation department of the service.

Mrs. Darnell has been prominent in musical circles here many years, but none of her nearest friends dreamed of the possibilities of her voice until they heard her last evening for the first time since taking up her work with Mr. Barbour last winter. She is a worthy representative of a family of singers, and aroused the greatest enthusiasm of anyone on the program because of the improvement in her voice.

Mr. Darnell has a baritone voice which is developing into a very promising one, and he also received congratulations for the advance made in his work. Miss Sheehan and Miss Gay were both charming, and were all the more enjoyable because of the fact that their soprano voices are so different in quality.

Mr. Barbour was urged to participate in the program, as this is his last appearance here until fall. He leaves this evening to take up his summer term with Mr. Saenger. Mr. Barbour is equally gifted as a pianist, and demonstrated that fact in his own accompaniments and in the work of his three piano students.—Streator Daily Free Press.

Wooster, Ohio

The commencement concert, "Joan of Arc," by A. R. Gaul, was presented last evening at Memorial Chapel by the Oratorio Society of Wooster College, ably conducted by Professor Neill Odell Rowe, director of the Conservatory.

The selection of this oratorio was particularly apt with its patriotic sentiment and martial as well as tuneful choruses. The latter were excellently sung and the whole performance exceedingly creditable, in spite of the depletion incident to the war.

The assisting soloists were Miss Florence B. Jenney, soprano, of the Conservatory faculty, Walter C. Earnest, tenor, and John R. Roberts, baritone, of Pittsburgh. The latter two have appeared in Wooster before but never more acceptably than last evening. Mr. Roberts uses his big baritone voice with all the ease and abandon of the finished artist. Mr. Earnest was also warmly received and much applauded.

The Conservatory is to be congratulated upon having Miss Jenney on the faculty, possessed as she is of a pure soprano voice, smooth and round, a fresh young voice that foretells of a future and a delightful personality.

Particular mention should be made of the accompaniments played by James H. Hall, pianist, and Miss Florence Van Nest, organist. Mr. Hall, who shortly joins the colors, will be greatly missed in Wooster. His playing is exceedingly pianistic and both solo work and accompaniment added greatly to the charm of the oratorio. A member also of the Conservatory faculty, Mr. Hall is a musician of exceptional promise and Wooster's good wishes go with him.

Oklahoma City

A recital which proved a distinct musical success was that given early in the week in the High School Auditorium, when Mrs. Edla Lund presented three of her pupils, Mrs. Walter Short, Miss Ruth Goodholm and Miss Dorothy Mayhew. Each showed the results of careful training. Mrs. Short has a contralto voice of beautiful quality which was shown to an advantage by the violin obligato played by Mr. Isadore Bransky in "The Salutation of Dawn," by Stevenson. Miss Mayhew in "Air and Variations" (Rode) showed an unusual mastery of technical difficulties. Miss Goodholm's "Caro Nome" (Verdi) was distinguished by her absolute ease in singing her very high soft tones. The singers were assisted by three piano pupils of Miss Viola Palmer, the Misses Dorothy Howland, Rosalie Bash and Elizabeth Stumpff. Mrs. Lund and Miss Palmer appeared as accompanists.—Oklahoma Press.

Poor Destinn!

Poor Emmy Destinn! Dogged by ill luck ever since the unhappy day she went abroad to visit her fiance, Dinh Gilly, interned in Bohemia, she now finds herself barred from the stage for having openly affiliated herself with the Czecho-Slovak movement. Some time ago report had it that she was singing for a pittance in the humblest surroundings besides enduring all sorts of wretchedness. She has not even the comfort of Gilly's presence, for that artist has been released from his bondage and sent to Switzerland. She cannot leave Austria and return to America. She is denied even the poor satisfaction of appearing before the public of her native city, Prague. Yet Americans who admired her will now feel her worthy of greater honor than ever. For she has bidden defiance to autocracy in its own dominions and thus becomes heart and soul one of our allies.

Perhaps in putting it thus we are doing her an injustice. Emmy Destinn always was vehement in her Czechish nationalism—to such an extent, indeed, that more than once before the war she gave the Germans offense. They used to class her as one of the Metropolitan's "German singers." That was when the term was used only as an easy means of classification and meant nothing opprobrious. From the beginning of hostilities she set herself against the kaiser, however, and in the days of our neutrality, when pro-Germanism was fashionable in some musical circles, she never spared the war lord in her conversation.

Would that Emmy Destinn were back with us today! She had signified her intention of becoming an American and had taken out her first papers. How welcome would be her voice at the Metropolitan in a time when good singing was never more badly needed! Her song recital before she left here three years ago was among the most unforgettable experiences of artistic delight we recall in the past decade. One can but pray that the miseries and privations she has been forced to endure may not impair her glorious voice in the slightest.—Musical America.

RUDOLPH GANZ TO STAY IN AMERICA—EUROPEAN TRIP POSTPONED

Rudolph Ganz has just received a letter from his friend, Isadore Philipp, in Paris, which necessarily cancels Mr. Ganz' contemplated trip to France and Switzerland in September.

His view of things pertaining to the daily, and particularly to the musical, life in the French capital can be well understood when one considers the recent changes in the war situation, and especially the recent declaration of the French government that the Department de la Seine, which includes Paris, be added to the war zone.

Following is an extract from the letter referred to:

"I must tell you not to come. The reopening of the concert season is problematic. The anxiety that grips all our hearts is frightful. You might come, but it is doubtful if you could return in time for your American engagements. Stay over there. . . . It took Blanchet (the composer and a mutual friend) three weeks to get back into Switzerland (the trip usually takes about eight hours)."

Mr. Ganz is very much disappointed at the failure of the undertaking into which he had put his heart, as it was to be, as he expressed it, "my modest share in maintaining the moral support of the great cause that is slowly but steadily moving toward victory."

Mr. Ganz' passage on a French steamer was already booked. He had a personal letter of recommendation from the Swiss Minister in Washington. Most of the orchestra engagements in Switzerland were dated and the programs decided upon. He is now canceling all these bookings. The initial ambition was to heed the call from Paris, and the realization of this has now failed, at least for the present, much to his regret.

Mr. Ganz will appear several times in New York during the coming season and will give many concerts for the benefit of needy French colleagues, for whose relief he expected to play over in France.

CHICAGO ARTISTS SING NEW WAR SONG

Another new war song has cropped up to join the flood that has appeared before and since our country joined in the conflict that will eventually mean the downfall of Hun autocracy.

The new composition is named "Hats Off; the Flag is Passing By," set to music by Floyd D. Godfrey from the poem of Henry Holcomb Bennett. The composer dedicates the new work to Grant Kimbell, one of Chicago's best known tenors, who will sing it on each program on which he appears.

Young Mr. Godfrey is very fortunate in having Mabel Corlew Smith, the Chicago-made soprano, to interpret his effort at the coming American Composers' and Artists' Convention, to be held at Lockport, N. Y., the first week in September. Other singers now using the work on their programs are John Rankl, bass-baritone, and Frank Johnson, basso-cantante.

The words are as follows:

Hats off!
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums,
A flash of color beneath the sky;
Hats off!
The flag is passing by!

Blue and crimson and white it shines,
Over the steel tipped, ordered lines.
Hats off!
The colors before us fly;
But more than the flag is passing by.

Sea fights and land fights, grim and great,
Fought to make and to save the state;
Weary marches and sinking ships;
Cheers of victory on dying lips;

Days of plenty and years of peace;
March of a strong land's swift increase;
Equal justice, right and law,
Stately honor and reverend awe;

Hats off!
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums;
And loyal hearts are beating high;
Hats off!
The flag is passing by!

—Henry Holcomb Bennett.

CHARLES M. COURBOIN

Charles M. Courboin, the noted organist of the First Baptist Church of Syracuse, gave a recital on June 26 in St. James' Episcopal Church, New London, Conn., which won him high praise from the critics of that city. The New London Telegraph says that his playing "was in the spirit of dim, vast cathedrals, and it was filled with broad sweeps of phrasing and vivid, telling contrasts, so that the listener was thrilled with glory." The writer also calls him "the greatest organist New London has ever heard."

The Day of New London says: "The audience enjoyed one of the finest organ recitals ever offered to the people of New London. The varied program showed the wonderful facility and technique of the artist, Charles M. Courboin." Particular mention is also made of Mr. Courboin's rendition of the Allegro from the Sixth Symphony of Widor, this symphony being dedicated in the original manuscript to Mr. Courboin, who was a personal friend of M. Widor. While Mr. Courboin was organist in the Cathedral of Antwerp, Belgium, M. Widor heard him play at La Madeleine and the Trocadero in Paris and was so impressed with the magnificent artistry of the young genius, then only 18 years of age, that he honored him by dedicating to him the great Sixth Symphony.

JACQUES GRUNBERG
Conductor of the Miniature Philharmonic Orchestra

MINIATURE PHILHARMONIC—AN ALL AMERICAN ORGANIZATION

(Reprinted from the Musical Courier, Issue of May 30, 1918)

The word miniature usually means something on a small scale, but when the Miniature Philharmonic Orchestra was organized last spring the aims of its conductor were to present compositions which have never been given by any of the older orchestral organizations and to give recognition to the young composers of America.

Jacques Grunberg, the conductor, says: "It is true that we are still young, but we must employ our energies and vitality to be able to make progress for evolution, a slow factor in all walks of life. Of all the musical arts the orchestra has been the first to be appreciated, not only by the discriminative public, but also by the masses. The incorporation of some dozens of musicians has always been a stimulus to the music lover. He has always patronized, first of all, such organizations that were less monotonous than a recital. The prominent orchestral organizations of America have been backed by wealthy men, but not without any difficulties. We have today in the United States five prominent organizations that are supported by such men. Though the concerts are well attended, no organization has yet recorded financial profits, no matter how successful artistically, or how prominent the soloists engaged on various occasions are. These five organizations record a certain deficit at the end of each season. Curiously enough, the same organizations have given concerts in five of the largest cities in this country: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and San Francisco. St. Louis, which has shown that it can be the first city in the country as far as Liberty Bonds are concerned, has had more difficulties with its orchestra and its backers than any other.

"Boston, the city of highest culture, is superficially a musical city, but it has always proved to be apathetic toward the musical arts. New York has always had a certain conceited pride, but it depends upon the foreign element for encouragement in music. It is useless to give a description concerning the progress made by every city in the United States. It is sufficient to say that our people have not awakened yet to the importance and the benefits of music. We must also admit that our political enemy, Germany, is more advanced in orchestral music and the number of orchestral organizations than our country, in spite of our numerous resources. In every German city there is an organization giving regular orchestral entertainments, under the auspices of the respective municipalities. Also for years they have made tremendous efforts to give the works of their composers a hearing in the remotest corners of the universe.

"Germany has not been satisfied to export only her commercial products; she had conductors all over the universe, and many musical clubs and choral societies were being directed by Germans. They have monopolized everything and the cause lies in the apathy of the American musician. It seems curious that the entry of America into the European conflict has awakened our leaders to the fact that America should be first in music before any other nation, including our Allies. The protest of our leaders has brought some results. Kunwald, of Cincinnati, has been interned, but in his place we have appointed not an American, but a Belgian, Eugen Ysaye, the famous violinist, known more in this capacity than that of the conductor. Dr. Muck, of the Boston Symphony, has met with the same fate. No conductor has been announced yet, but among the probabilities not one American name has been mentioned.

"It is unnecessary to dwell on the existing conditions, but a lively and zealous propaganda should be carried on until the American orchestral organizations will banish all Teuton conductors. The American daily press has never endeavored to support our American musicians. On the contrary, it has always devoted unlimited space to foreign artists and conductors, even those of inferior material.

"This world today is dedicated to the younger men. If they are good enough to be used as cannon fodder, why not push them to the front in the great cause of music? Not every foreign artist can be good, and the same may be the case with some of our own; but why encourage the European mediocrity when we might as well give encouragement to our native talent? We must call the accredited critic's attention to the fact that he is not serving his art or his nationality. The orchestral association directors also must not remain ignorant of the existing American talent.

"As there are possibilities among the young Americans, and some of the older ones, they should be given a trial, even with the danger of failures. We must do away with the prejudice and non-support of the public engendered by managers who have worked always to turn the cash box of America over to foreigners.

"Fame is long in coming to every one, and if some of our American conductors are in the darkness it is because no one has attempted to bring them into the light. Give the American conductors a chance, and then we will be in a position to appreciate their value."

When the Miniature Philharmonic made its initial appearance last winter at the Aeolian Hall of New York, the impression created by the organization and its conductor was more than favorable. Not only the layman, but the critics were predisposed to predict a complete success for the new organization. Every member of this organization is an American, or at least a naturalized American; their loyalty to the country has always been unimpeachable. Considering this fact, this new enterprise is strictly and purely American.

"There is plenty of room in this country," says Mr. Grunberg, "not only for one more orchestral society, but for dozens. The small cities and towns in the United States are craving for such entertainments, and the Miniature Philharmonic, in spite of the obstacles incurred by the war, intends to travel next season to the smaller towns, presenting music of the best kind by the foreign and our American composers."

The expenditures, considering the impression which is created by this organization, will not be expensive. The public is the one that needs its taste cultivated. It should be taught that for a small amount of money excellent entertainments can be secured.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was given last Wednesday evening in the First Lutheran Church by the Jamestown Choral Society (Samuel Thorstenberg, director). The performance was attended by only a fair-sized audience. The chorus did its best work in the familiar Bridal Chorus, which was given with commendable vim and good tonal effects. The soloists were Miss Lillian Gustafson, Mrs. O. L. Peterson and Mrs. Leonard Chindgren, sopranos; Mrs. Berger Anderson, contralto; Charles W. Jackson and Gustaf Marker, tenors, and W. E. Tefft and Arthur Lindbloom, baritones.

The burden of this work is carried by the soloists, and the choral passages, while important, occupy a minor position compared with the former. The orchestra gave splendid support, and special mention must be given the accompanists, Miss Gertrude Johnson at the piano and Miss Victoria Swanson at the organ.

The choral society showed the effects of much well-directed hard work, and its director, Mr. Thorstenberg, controlled his forces in giving an adequate interpretation of this charming work.

A splendid concert was given at the Mission Church on the night of June 28 under the direction of Arthur A. Lydell, the organist and director of music for the church. Mr. Lydell, besides planning everything and carrying the whole enterprise to a very successful conclusion, appeared both as choral director and as organ soloist, as well as an expert accompanist. Miss Hazel Gronberg, a talented young pupil of Mr. Lydell, rendered a piano solo, Concert Fantasy (Friml). She has a splendid technic and decidedly interesting musical qualities. Miss Lillian Gustafson, Jamestown's well-known soprano, sang the splendid "Repentance" (Gounod), with violin obligato by Miss Ebba Goranson, who gave good support. After a short address by Professor David Nyvall the choir gave the cantata "The Sermon on the Mount" (Earnest), assisted by Miss Gustafson, soprano, and Earnest Seaburg, baritone.

The Abused Practice of Free Singing Services

Have you ever heard of an artist refusing his free services for a just cause?—Not me. In peaceful days, in war times, everybody is encroaching upon the generous hearts of singers, artists and musicians, and never have they shrunk from giving services in order to fill the cash box for various needy causes. As a rule and following the statistics of the earnings of an artist, he is the last one, among professions, to be rated as a well-to-do person. The career requires extraordinary expenditures and prior to the professional appearances many an artist is pawning the future, either to the teacher or the musical agent, and when he sees the opera lights or the concert stage he still owes much money. You must be "somebody" in order to accumulate fortunes, but how many artists nowadays, especially in war times, are able to earn more than a decent living? The subject I am treating is not a new one, and the reason I am speaking of an old malady is the encroachment of a well-known musical agency upon a colleague to secure an artist, on free basis, for some popular concerts which are being given now in New York. Not being a great admirer of musical agents, for once I am willing to commend the agent who refused to accede to his colleague's wishes. The question is being raised: Where patrons of music are willing to help with a few thousands of dollars, the presentation to the public of concerts at popular prices, why do they not provide and stipulate clearly that a vocal soloist or an instrumental one should receive a fee according to his value? The old antiquated excuse, that the free services of a singer will bring popularity to him or her, is a bad one and a detrimental one, emanating from an unscrupulous musical agent. Is it not sufficient when artists nowadays give all they possess to the cause of war reliefs and charities?

The New York concerts, running now, under a certain committee of wealthy people, should have provided small, medium and large fees for the soloists, who were more or less known. Every one of them was known to the audiences, so that the singing for the sake of popularity was not necessary for them—they have acquired it long before they appeared at these concerts. The practice of encroaching upon the singers is a most disgusting feature in the musical life. The management of the concerts have no expenses to meet. On the contrary the guarantors pay for any trouble they incur in arranging such entertainments; the musical agents fill up their pockets at the expense of good hearted singers; they take all they can and nobody seems to be objecting about "getting rich" at the expense of an artist. The management I am speaking of has met with a refusal from the hands of another. Will the musical agents, who pretend to protect the interest of artists, stop that begging question? Will they see to it that artists must be paid? Or will they indulge in this practice, which is detrimental to the interpreters of music? And if any patron of art will again provide some sum for musical entertainments, let him give the singer or the musician a chance to earn a dollar, after his many years of hard struggles.

The Rialto

Mr. Riesenfeld has a keen artistic sense in selecting his vocal soloists. This attribute places him high in the world of music. His selection of Count Lorrie Grimaldi, basso, as soloist for the week ending July 14th was indeed a happy stroke. Only the basso should change his method of singing, and thus eliminate the pinched and throaty tones. His natural voice is a beautiful one; it is of an unusual quality, sonorous, powerful, and he uses brains in interpreting his arias. If it were not for the above defects, which can be remedied by a reconstruction of style and method, his aria from "Simon Boccanegra" would have been an ideal Verdian rendition. There was excellent conducting by Mr. Riesenfeld of Louis Ferdinand Herold's Overture to "Zampa," and artistic cello playing by Gaston Dubois in Saint-Saens' Romance. Other orchestral selections were given, as well as some organ playing by Arthur Depew.

The Strand

May I urge the management of this movie music house to honor Gounod, whose centennial fell during the month of June? It is not too late. Mr. Oscar Spirescu, well versed in French repertory, is the appropriate conductor for the arranging of a special Gounod week, with soloists. Besides paying a tribute to France's great son, they will show appreciation for our ally.

The week ending July 14th the Symphony Orchestra played selections from "La Boheme," by Puccini. Mr. Antonio Briglio, concert master of the orchestra, played the "Meditation" from "Thais," by Massenet. The Strand Male Quartet rendered Sanderson's "God Be With Our Boys Tonight" and Newton Tate's "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling." Introduction to third act from "Lohengrin," by Wagner, was played on the organ.

To the Rialto and Rivoli

The excellent musical director of these two popular houses ought to arrange a special week of music by Charles Gounod, whose centennial occurred in June. His knowledge of the French repertory and his excellent selections of soloists would add a note of popularity to both houses. Charles Gounod, the genius, deserves this attention.

The Symphony Theater

This movie house rivals central Broadway in the presentation of excellent musical bills which attract throngs. The week ending July 14th Alfredo Cibelli, tenor, sang "One Thousand Cattle Straying," by Owen Wister. Signor Ronchi, who will no longer lead the orchestra, conducted the Overture "Phedre," by Massenet. Nicholas Garagusi scored a deserved success with the playing of Rondo Capriccioso, by Saint-Saens, compelling an encore, the Drdla Serenade. The balance of the bill was pleasurable.

Third Week of the Stadium Concerts

On Sunday, July 7th, Ruth Miller, formerly soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was the soloist and was applauded warmly. On July 8th, Miss Alma Beck, contralto, and Auguste Bouilliez, baritone, were the soloists. The contralto sang "Ah, mon fils," from "The Prophet," by Meyerbeer, and in a duo with Mr. Bouilliez. A fragment from "Samson et Dalila," by Saint-Saens, was rendered. The baritone sang the monologue from "Boris Godunoff," by Moussorgsky, and "La Marseillaise." The orchestral numbers enlisted the following composers: Suppe, Saint-Saens, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Liszt and Mascagni. On July 9th, Margaret Romaine of the Chicago Opera Company was soloist, singing "Vissi d'Arte," from "La Tosca," by Puccini. The orchestra played compositions by Rimsky-Korsakoff, Tschaikovsky and Borodine. July 10 the soloists were: Vera Nette, coloratura soprano, and Charles Galagher, basso. The soprano sang "Una voce poco fa," from the "Barber of Seville," by Rossini, and the basso aria, "Invocation," from "Robert the Devil," by Meyerbeer. Mr. Volpe conducted works by Massenet, Grieg, American Reveille by himself, Offenbach and Ponchielli.

The largest list of soloists since the opening of the season was presented on July 11, when the following participated: Betsy Lane Shepard, soprano; Rosalie Wirthlin, contralto; Ernest Davis, tenor; Raymond Vir Dew, tenor; Fred Jones, baritone; Charles Carver, basso, and Ernesto Berumen, pianist, with Frank La Forge as accompanist.

Rosalie Wirthlin sang the aria "Jean d'Arc" (Bemberg); Ernest Davis, aria from "La Boheme" (Puccini); Mmes. Shepard and Wirthlin and Messrs. Davis and Carver sang the quartet from "Rigoletto" (Verdi); Mr. Berumen played Hungarian Rhapsody (Liszt); Betsy Lane Shepard sang "Depuis le jour," from "Louise" (Charpentier); Charles Carver sang several songs, accompanied by Frank La Forge, and all the soloists—Mmes. Shepard and Wirthlin and Messrs. Davis, Vir Dew, Jones and Carver—sang the sextet from "Lucia."

The orchestral numbers enlisted Ambroise Thomas, Verdi and Wolf-Ferrari.

On July 12 the orchestra played compositions by Tschaikowsky, Smetana and Glazounoff. On July 13 Serge Zanco, tenor, was soloist with the aria "Ne pourant reprimer," from "Herodiade" (Massenet), and "Cielo e mar," from "La Gioconda" (Ponchielli). Orchestral numbers included compositions by Dvorak, Bizet, Tschaikowsky, Delibes, Chabrier and Arnold Volpe.

ILLNESS OF FANNIE BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER

The entire musical profession is grieved at the news of the critical illness of Mrs. Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler and is unanimous in sympathy and in wishing for her recovery.

Holdovers—In spite of the fact that it is now midsummer and supposedly the dullest time of the year, Music News has a great quantity of "holdover" matter this week, much of it very important. We hope to "catch up" next week.

ROY DAVID BROWN PRESENTS PUPIL

Miss Lillian Norman, a talented pupil of Roy David Brown, appeared on Monday evening, July 15, in a piano recital at Lyon & Healy Recital Hall. In spite of the inclement weather there was a good audience of friendly and sympathetic listeners. Miss Norman proved herself a young musician well worthy of commendation and encouragement. In her opening number, "Sonata Pathetique (Beethoven), she had ample opportunity to demonstrate the various sides of her technical equipment. The Allegro was broadly interpreted and the Adagio, though not sufficiently sustained, revealed very good tone. The rondo gave the best results.

In the second group Miss Norman was enabled to show her facility in passage work, which was very light and delicate in the following numbers:

Rondo Capriccioso ..... Mendelssohn
Shadow Dance ..... MacDowell
Capriccio, Op. 76, No. 2 ..... Brahms
March of the Dwarfs ..... Grieg

Keener interpretative insight was required in the following group, composed of "Hark, Hark, the Lark" (Schubert-Liszt), which the young artist worked up to an excellent climax, and two other Liszt numbers, "Love Dream, No. 3" and "Rhapsody, No. 11." It was particularly noticeable that "Liebestraum" was printed in translation. Miss Norman's rendition of the Liszt "Concerto" (E flat major) in conclusion, was indicative of sincere and thorough study on the part of the young musician, as well as ample technical foundation. She plays with the poise and keen musical feeling which should inspire her to look forward to a brilliant future, and her teacher has good reason to be proud of her.

Assisting Miss Norman was Miss Edna Dolmage, soprano, pupil of Theodore S. Bergey. Miss Dolmage possesses a voice of considerable power and range, golden in quality. Her enunciation of the Italian songs, "Baciami" (Buzzi-Peccia) and "Star of Love" (Robaudi), surpassed that of the English group, though she was encored both times, and her interpretation of the "O Thou Billowy Harvest Field" (Rachmaninoff) was very dramatic. Mrs. Bergey accompanied with rare understanding of her art.

CHAMBER MUSIC RECITAL

A recital of chamber music was given at Fiske Hall, Northwestern University School of Music, Monday evening, July 15, by members of the Fifteenth Detachment Band, Great Lakes Naval Training Station, that thrilled the immense audience present.

Herman Fellier, Jr., of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Quartet, played first violin; Carl Fasshauer of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, second violin; Robert Dolejsi, who has concertized with members of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, viola; Walter Brauer, lyceum concert artist, violoncello, and John Doane, director of the organ department at the School of Music, Northwestern University.

All five are well-known professionals, at the height of their careers and giving all for their country. It is no wonder that they received quite an ovation, first for their patriotism and sacrifice and second for their ability as artists.

The opening number on the program was the String Quartette, Op. 18, No. 1, by Beethoven, that showed exquisite ensemble playing, well balanced and beautiful shading, especially in the Allegro and Adagio.

Second was the delightful Minuet of Boccherini, given with such grace and charm as to recall the Flonzaley rendition of it.

The third number was the brilliant Allegro of Rimsky-Korsakoff, so impressively and convincingly played that the audience insisted upon an encore.

The closing number was a Quintette for Strings and Piano by Wolf-Ferrari, with John Doane at the piano, that was a powerful climax to a most beautiful program.

John Doane, whose work is so well known to Chicago musicians, was given a rousing welcome as a Jackie and a musician. He played the piano part with great charm and brilliance and added much to the atmosphere of the whole composition.

MISS KINSOLVING'S MORNING MUSICALES

The following schedule is copied verbatim from the Chicago Tribune:

Miss Kinsolving is to give another morning series, Tuesdays, in the Blackstone Hotel. This is her schedule:

November 19—Guiomar Novaes, the pianist from Brazil, and Helen Stanley.

December 3—Heifetz.

December 17—Reinald Werrenrath, assisted by Toscha Seidel. (Yes, this is the Seidel who is said to be quite as gifted as Heifetz; and the "assisted by" is Miss Kinsolving's own text.)

January 7, 1919—Zimbalist and Gabrielle Gills. She is a soprano from France who has been heard and praised a lot in New York City.

January 14, 1919—Pablo Casals, greatest of the cellists, and Hulda Lashanska, another soprano as yet unheard in Chicago.

The Flonzaley Quartet will come back under Miss Kinsolving's management; she has undergone a change of mind since she said that she would not be concerned in any Chicago engagement the quartet might play. The dates are December 1, January 12, 1919 and February 9, 1919—Sundays all; the place is the Playhouse.

F. D.

Stevenson—Lucia Smith and Elizabeth Gilbert, pupils of Lucille Stevenson, will give a song recital at the Cosmopolitan School of Music and Dramatic Art, Friday evening, July 19, at 8:15 o'clock.

ORCHESTRA HALL.

Jeanne d'Arc led France, sword in hand, and Harriet Beecher Stowe led the world, pen in hand, when she wrote the ever-living story of the South, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the story that will live down through the ages fragrant as the magnolia and as sad.

The familiar points of this master work again paraded before our optical vision and we wept again over the brutality of Legree and the death of Little Eva, while in turn we were mirth-stricken over the antics of "the imp of Satan," Topsy, "who nebber had no mother, no nothin', 'spects den ah jus' growed."

The very breath of the old South seemed to penetrate the silver sheet and while we viewed the photographic efforts, we were taken again down the Mississippi to the Louisiana of the days before the war.

It was here that "Uncle Tom" was sent from Kentucky as a slave and whose respite came only after he had saved Little Eva from a watery grave. His furlough was short-lived, for after the death of this earthly angel he was sold to the unscrupulous Legree, who eventually flogs the aged negro to death "for gospel praying and prayer book reading."

It has been done in pictures times without number more fully as to detail to be sure, but never more effectively. This version is to feature the dainty Marguerite Clark in the dual roles of Little Eva and the demon Topsy. And it may be recorded that the little actress at last has accomplished something more than just an ordinary "saccharine maid of the movies." As Eva she is the most charming thing imaginable, and her death scene is heart-rending, while as the impish, mischievous Topsy she reaches the highest plane of genuine comedy. Her antics are cues for hearty and spontaneous laughter, and she enters into the fray with a might and a will.

Uncle Tom was in the hands of that sterling character actor, Frank Losee. Others that were recognizable were Jack Austin as George Harris and La Mar Johnston as Haley. The entire cast, negroes and whites, was chosen with uncanny regard for the author's idea of the story book marionettes.

War scenes on the battle fronts of Italy and France with our combined allies furnish an added thrill, and some beautiful scenes of New Zealand completed the pre-dinner entertainment. The gentleman who furnished organ accompaniments for the celluloid entertainment did so with artistic success.

CIVIC MUSIC ASSOCIATION

The work that is being done by the Civic Music Association of Chicago cannot be overrated. Its objects are set forth in the following excerpt from the charter:

"To promote and encourage the understanding, appreciation and study of the art of music and the development of musical talent throughout the community, principally by providing musical entertainment and instruction gratuitously or at little expense in the small parks and playgrounds and other civic centers."

How well these objects have been carried out may be indicated by the fact that the demands upon the Civic Music Association have been constantly increasing, demands for more choruses, more leaders and new and better music, than which there is no better proof that this splendid organization is awakening and encouraging by its efforts one of the most democratic phases of community life and spirit.

The Civic Music Association is supported by public subscription ranging from 50 cents up. Among its officers and board of directors are numbered prominent local philanthropists and musicians, while Mr. Herbert E. Hyde occupies the position of superintendent. The association furnishes music and leaders for patriotic meetings at clubs, schools and settlements throughout the city, and at military camps nearby, in co-operation with the Y. M. C. A. Important in this connection is the chorus conducted by Herbert Gould at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, originally under the auspices of the Civic Music Association, since taken over by the government. Co-operative branches of the association have been established both in Milwaukee and San Antonio, Texas. In the city there are six adult choral clubs and eleven childrens' choruses, meeting twice a week. These are conducted in the parks and playgrounds, the choruses giving local concerts and holding public sings in the parks with orchestral accompaniment. An artist series of concerts is also given in this connection. A patriotic chorus composed of the school children of the city has been conducted at the Art Institute by Mr. Tomlins, and the children frequently aid in the Sunday evening sings held at the Municipal Pier. There are also three public sings a week in co-operation with the Drama League.

All these, and more especially the community sings held every night at the Settlement houses and the choruses established in manufacturing plants, have contributed immeasurably toward the movement of Americanization which the last few years have made such an important problem in this country. For patriotism and true Americanism are so infused in the enthusiasm of these sings that whether people understand English or not they catch the spirit of the songs and join in heart and soul, so that what the Civic Music Association is accomplishing is even bigger and broader than the statement of its objects would imply. It is doing more than encouraging an appreciation of music and developing musical talent, though this is its primal aim. It is promoting all round community interest and American citizenship. It is, therefore, an institution which our city and our democracy can no longer do without. MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

AN INTERESTING SOLDIER LETTER

Music News is in receipt of the following nteresting letter from Josef Konecny, the Bohemian violinist, resident of Chicago, who s now in war service for the United States:

22d Receiving Co., Q. M. C.,
Camp Joseph E. Johnston,
Jacksonville, Fla., July 4, 1918.

Music News:

I suppose you, as well as some of your readers, vill be interested in some of the "adventures" that befall a "rookie" in Uncle Sam's army.

I left Chicago Saturday night, May 25, and arrived t Jefferson Barracks early Sunday morning, after hav- ng breakfast and changing cars at St. Louis, Mo. It vas with an admixture of manifold sentiments that I te my breakfast in the restaurant of the Union depot t St. Louis. Only a short time before I breakfasted n the same place with my two congenial co-artists n a concert tour, and little did I imagine then that when I next passed through there it was to be as a olunteer in Uncle Sam's army.

On our arrival at Jefferson Barracks the boys in haki greeted us, at every step and turn, with that ery significant and encouraging expression, "Oh, ou'll like it!"

We were quartered in tents in a beautifully wooded rove overlooking the Mississippi River, and for two lays had not much of anything to do. On the third ay we went up for the big examination. This was n event which will remain as one of the outstand- ng features in the memory of every soldier who has one through it. We entered the examination rooms t about 8 a. m. in an entirely nude state, and after eing subjected to a most minute and detailed physi- al examination emerged between 3 and 4 p. m. in a oldier's uniform with equipment. One may rest ssured that no weakling or defective will ever suc- essfully run the gauntlet of the many doctors, sur- eons and examiners—too numerous to count.

We remained two weeks at Jefferson Barracks, dur- ng which time all of us learned the practical mean- ng of that mysterious term, "fatigue duty." Fatigue uty is everything but what its name indicates. It ay mean every imaginable work under the sun— rom "policing" your tents and streets, peeling pota- oes, scrubbing floors, serving at mess ("kitchen police"), down to farming, carpenter work, breaking stones, loading and unloading cars, and what not. Every soldier goes through this, no matter what his rank in civil life. I have already added a number of "trades" to my list of accomplishments since I entered the army.

Of course, I took my violin with me, and from the very first made good use of it. If I had any mis- givings as to how the boys in khaki would take to classic music such doubts were quickly dispelled. At Jefferson Barracks I played almost daily for the boys; sometimes in our tents, at other times in the open, in natural amphitheaters surrounded by beautiful trees, under the auspices of both the Knights of Columbus and the Y. M. C. A., to as many as 3,500 soldiers and civilians at a time. Never will I forget the wonderful attention and the enthusiastic recep- tion accorded me by the boys, as well as the inspira- tion of the beautiful natural surroundings and re- markably romantic situation—a situation that will never recur in the lives of any of us—at least not in this generation.

After two weeks at Jefferson Barracks we were sent here to sunny Florida. It was a jolly crowd of boys, 350 in number, that took the train that Satur- day afternoon. We had our kitchen car with us and for two days and nights lived on the train, except at Birmingham, Ala., and Fitzgerald, Ga., where the Red Cross ladies met the train, and we were per- mitted to leave it for a short period. The Red Cross ladies treated us royally and I can't speak highly enough of their work. Of course I played for the boys on the train as well as for the officers. At Fitzgerald, Ga., the officers requested me to play for the Red Cross ladies. I mounted a baggage truck in front of the depot, crowded to the very limit with people, and was introduced by the "professor" (of whom more anon) in the following words:

"We are not from the South, but we have heard of it. We are here now and have enjoyed your hospi- tality, and in the words of Robert Louis Stevenson:

"Since we have no gold to share,
And love alone can make amends,
Let this then be our daily prayer:
God make me worthy of my friends!

"We have with us 'Joe'—the Bohemian violinist, Joseph Konecny, who has toured the country from coast to coast. 'Joe' can not only play, he can also fight. 'Joe' was not always a soldier. We have had him with us on the rock pile, at 'chow' and in vari- ous other situations. He will now play for you that which his heart dictates." (Applause and music.)

Of course the occasion was a great success. The Leader-Enterprise of Fitzgerald of June 10, speaking of the occasion, had the following to say:

"Joseph Konecny, a Bohemian violinist of note, gave a concert after the refreshments had run out that was full value for all the trouble the ladies of the Red Cross had taken to prepare for the boys. The Boches will probably find him as good a soldier as musician."

On my way to Jefferson Barracks I picked out several men from the rest who seemed to be out of the ordinary class. One of them was William Lloyd Davis, professor of sociology and economics from the State University of Wisconsin, well over draft age, who has lectured extensively throughout the States; a Chicago stock broker, Victor Berghan, 37 years of age; and to this charmed circle we added Silver J. Ray, cartoonist from the Kansas City Star, whose acquaintance we made on our arrival at Jef- ferson Barracks. The "professor," the cartoonist and myself have had the great good fortune thus far to remain together through thick and thin. We are in the same tent and our tent is the "headquarters," so to say, for the entire company. Mr. Ray's cartoons and artistic sketches, the "professor's" versatility and continuous effusion of wisdom, combined with the strains of my Guarneri, form a combination that powerfully attracts all of our "comrades in arms." Indeed, so great is the attraction that, when I prac- tice I must close the entrance to our tent and hang out the sign, "No admittance." Verily, "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast."

Here, as in Jefferson Barracks, I very often play for the boys. Quite often, after a hard day of "fatigue duty," provided I have no mashed fingers or blistered hands from grubbing stumps, the "pro- fessor," the cartoonist and I will sally forth into any of the company streets in this sea of tents. The "professor" in his stentorian voice will announce the "Pied Piper," who strikes a few chords in major and minor strains, and an audience of standing, sit- ting and reclining boys will come into being as if by magic, and will enthusiastically follow the performer from street to street. (I am inclined now to believe there is some truth in the fable about the "Pied Piper.") There, in the soft evening breeze, under the balmy and brilliant southern sky, the boys will be treated to Wieniawski, Beethoven, Schumann, etc. Such experiences as this awaken sensations which I have not the ability to describe. It is a great privi- lege and one of which I am proud. I celebrated the afternoon of the Fourth by visiting the base hospital and playing for the patients in the various wards.

Of course, nobody knows what our destination is, but all of us hope eventually to see France.

Cordially,
JOSEPH KONECNY.

FLINT, MICH.

Summer time is here and the teachers and musical activities are resting for a while. A splendid June Festival, with its series of musical programs, with visiting and local artists, local choruses and community orchestra, was a great success, made possible by the Flint Community Music Association, which has completed a successful year. The director, George Oscar Bowen, has been efficient and effective in his work and has made Flint a community singing center. He is now on vacation at the sea shore on the coast of Maine. A large patriotic pageant and sing fete was presented on June 14 at Masonic Temple, under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. The pageant required a cast of 125 characters, and the sing contest was between four local choruses, involving 400 singers.

The coming year will double the work of this year. M. F.

PASSING COMMENT

Music News is in constant receipt of enquiry about the convention of American Artists, Composers and Managers, which is to be held at Lockport, N. Y., the first week in September, as well as announcements from various artists, which show, conclusively, not only that interest in the event is keen, but that a fine attendance is assured.

The event is one of great importance, for, here, on common ground and with a most democratic working basis, American artists, young and old, are heard in American compositions and with an American audience to judge of their work.

Lockport itself is an ideal spot in which to hold such a convention and the management of the event last year was at such a point of efficiency, as well as sympathetic outlook upon the American musical situation, as to give guarantee that this year also will be well worthy of attention.

If any warrant were needed for the turning of a school concert review into editorial matter it would lie in the unusualness of the occasion.

And when a morning concert, such as that given by the Chicago Musical College last Saturday, in Mid-Summer, represents so many departments in such altogether fine way, and when there is an attendance and an enthusiasm which tell positively of unflagging interest, the function becomes worthy of special mention in any part of the paper.

To digress then from the usual review and to leave as a matter of course the technical excellence and the interpretative reasonableness, we will speak particularly of other and rather unusual things suggested by this concert.

Albert Leo Johnson and Louise Eldredge played violin solos and again proved that the Chicago Musical College has a fine violin department, but, as their numbers were by De Beriot and Wieniawski, the old query came to mind: Why do not violin teachers look more earnestly for novelties and especially for works by Americans?

"The classics" of any instrument are all right for the larger part of any musical menu, but really the public does get tired of the half dozen composers for violin who are used, in concert and recital, over and over again, and does long occasionally for the opportunity to judge whether or not something new might not possibly have merit.

The Happiest Moment of a Failure's Life

—QUITTING TIME

(Discovered on the wall in the Proofreader's Room)

Dr. E. S. Urbanowicz, Antoinette Smythe Garnes and Mrs. Edward Polk contributed vocal numbers at this time—two operatic and one the graceful old song, "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark" (Bishop)—and this writer must confess that he has grown so weary of the old round of well-worn operatic numbers that the Bishop piece, old as it is, seemed a welcome relief.

Mrs. Polk was (gracefully) announced as a pupil of a Texas teacher and also of Herbert Witherspoon, this indicating the scope and the extent of the influence on Chicago and the West and Southwest of the teaching here during the Summer of the great artists—Witherspoon and Saenger.

If this policy on the part of the Chicago Musical College is kept up, it will surely result in this city becoming the greatest Summer Musical Mecca in the World, for already the time of the two teachers mentioned is filled to the limit, and had Auer been here in violin this Summer his time would also have been filled.

Other departments would draw as much, and, beyond question, a colony of visiting teachers of the very highest class, drawn from whatever might be their usual habitat, would find in Chicago ample welcome, and each such success would add more and more to the prestige of the city as a place for Summer study.

Pupils of Karl Reckzeh, Rudolph Reuter and Alexander Raab in piano emphasized anew the value of each of these—Alice Letearte and Jane Anderson playing numbers from the established repertoire and Esther Lynch appearing in the Legend of Rossetter G. Cole.

This writer has long contended that the reason the really big piano works of Americans are not appreciated is that they are "read over" once or twice, or maybe even played once in public and then laid aside without further delving for content or working over for polish.

Suppose that the Ballades of Chopin, or Brahms, or Grieg were new and any one of them was to be played after a few weeks' study, with no "tradition" and no "accepted interpretation" to guide the student.

Would they seem so beautiful as now? Emphatically no. And this indicates the very reason why a big work of Cole or Cadman or any other American writer for piano should not be judged at all on one working over or one hearing.

It should be studied again and again, it should be practiced month after month, it should be played before many audiences before any sort of judgment is passed upon it.

Supposing, for instance, that some one teacher should adopt the Cole Legend and should have all his advanced pupils work on it and that it should be studied individually and collectively by his class for a year, until some sort of comprehension growing out of the multiplicity of minds at work on it should be established.

The result would surely be an intensive, comprehensive playing of it, which would lift it out of any semblance of commonplaceness and would show it as it is, a big, vital work.

Even to hear it once, as on Saturday last, shows that it is pianistic, that it contains a wealth of material and that it is most skillfully built.

Let us have more of the bigger American works and let us study them to a finish before passing judgment.

A point entirely aside from the interpretation of music and yet a very vital point in the success of any young artist with the public lies in the matter of stage appearance and conduct.

Part of this matter is settled by Mother Nature, but much can be acquired.

For instance, Mrs. Polk on last Saturday morning knew how to stand, how to hold her hands and how to address an audience; she also knew how to retire from the stage and in responding to a recall showed that she has acquired the ability to back off the stage. All this proves that she has had some experience and is a further indication of the class of pupils drawn by Mr. Witherspoon.

It suggests also that every student, in every school, should be taught stage deportment as a part of his equipment.

And, speaking of natural graces. Miss Anderson certainly looked a picture at this concert. She is rather tall, distinctly blonde and with most pleasing features. She sits rather straight and she wobbles over the piano bench not at all.

All this makes for enjoyment on the part of the audience.

When Mrs. Zeisler or Ethel Leginska hang over the keyboard in painful attitudes, it is accepted as a part of their personalities, and they are forgiven because of their greatness.

But, when a charming girl like Miss Anderson sits up straight and quietly allows her playing to speak directly through the medium at hand and employs no mannerisms at all, then, indeed, do we have something that is delightful to see.

Throughout this program the Locale which produced each pupil was named, and while Chicago was mentioned with considerable frequency it was noted that Texas and Ohio had representatives (of course, everybody knows that the Chicago Musical College draws pupils from every state and from almost all countries).

The Ohio girl, Miss Lynch, was from Lima, and the printed name brought up memories, for this writer spent the first twenty-one unsatisfied years of his life in that city. At that time Lima was unquestionably the most unmusical and least artistic spot in America, but it has improved now. There are several fine clubs, a big choral society (led for some years by H. W. Owens) and a good many fine teachers of music there.

Of late years the names of pupils from Lima, Ohio, have figured at intervals on Chicago commencement programs, and this is, emphatically, a status quite different from the old times.

In speaking of the metamorphosis of Lima (Ohio), from a muddy backwoods village to Something of a Musical Metropolis, mention should not be omitted of the fact that the city has been honored by the fact that a young soprano who was born there has taken the name of the town as her own for the stage, and is now known far and wide as Edna De Lima. Perhaps she will, in course of time, do as much for Lima as Melba has done for a certain city in Australia.

PELHAM BAY NAVAL TRAINING STATION

A high-class concert program with popular "seconds" (the sailor boys' name for encores) was given at Pelham Bay Naval Training Station Thursday evening, July 18, under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus. Miss Constance Balfour, the concert prima donna, and Charles Galagher, the distinguished basso, gained the appreciation of the sailor boys with classical numbers and won their hearts with the more popular war camp songs. Archibald Sessions accompanied both singers in his usual skillful manner.

Miss Alice Dinan was a most engaging soloist at the piano. A feature of unusual interest for the boys in the French classes was the appearance of Carlo Liten, the Henry Irving of Belgium, who recited a number of poems in French that were inspired by tragic happenings of the present war. Daniel Mayer, the concert manager, furnished the entire program in co-operation with Thomas Egan, the Irish tenor, who represents the Knights of Columbus in the presentation of war camp attractions.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Bertha Bribben, student of the College, has been engaged to play at the concerts which are being given at Ravinia Park by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Louise Eldridge, also studying at the College, has been engaged for next season as head of the violin department at the University of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla.

Ben Zimberhoff, student of Max Fischel, played with great success at the patriotic concert given last week by the American Choral Society at the Municipal Pier.

Some remarkable talent already has been disclosed as a consequence of the engagement of Professor Leopold Auer for the full season of the Chicago Musical College. It is one of the features of Professor Auer's teaching that, in this country as in Russia, genius for violin playing which may have remained unnoticed by others becomes a brilliant actuality under his influence. The desire to profit by his stay in Chicago has drawn to Auer great talents for violin playing, not only from Chicago and its vicinity but from points far distant.

A program arranged by the Chicago Musical College School of Expression was given at Great Lakes July 24. The following students of the College participated: Helen Hagen, Marie Gores, Mary Dowdy, Mrs. M. Taylor, Carmen Rooker, Ada O'Donnell. Marie Simons and Marion Bergman officiated as accompanists.

Applications for free and partial scholarships in the Chicago Musical College already are very numerous. There will be distributed before the Fall term in September no fewer than thirty-three free scholarships in the piano department alone, eighteen in the vocal and eight in the violin department.

Carl D. Kinsey and Mrs. Kinsey returned last Monday from a short trip to Michigan.

The Chicago Musical College's closing concert of the season will be given this Saturday morning at 11 o'clock. The program will be presented in the piano, violin and vocal departments. The following pieces will be interpreted:

AT THE WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

It was hot last Sunday afternoon, as you will very well remember, but all who were so lucky as to be at the Tew Studio at that time were indeed fortunate, for this is so spacious and airy a place as to be many degrees more comfortable than most, and, in addition, there was the joy of listening to an indicative and decidedly beautiful program of song.

By indicative one means Tew-indicative, or, in other words, with each pupil displaying great ease of vocal production throughout a long range.

The program, in full, and extending over several hours with much sociability and some explanations from Mr. Tew intermixed, read as follows:

Shadow Song ..... Dinorah
Mlle. D'Oex
The Spirit Flower ..... Campbell-Tipton
Miss MacNab
Pur dicesti ..... Lotti
Miss Alice Schaffner
Home Sweet Home ..... Lehmann
Cuckoo ..... Lehmann
Miss Emma Berg
Thus Saith the Lord / Who May Abide / For He Is Like } (Messiah) ..... Handel
I Attempt from Love's Sickness ..... Purcell
Mr. John A. Alcott
A Summer Night ..... Thomas
Che faro ..... Gluck
Miss Elizabeth MacIntosh
Duet—I Heard a Voice ..... Glover
Mlle. D'Oex and Mlle. Crevecoeur
In Flanders Field ..... Berger
Mignon ..... Thomas
Miss Winnifred Cline
Voi che sapete ..... Mozart
Serenade ..... Gounod
Miss Pauline Bernstein
Easter Eve ..... Gounod
Morning Hymn ..... Henschel
Mrs. Elsie Melins
(Cello obligato—Robert Cook)
Contralto—Lament of Isis ..... Bantock
Soprano—Michaela's Song ..... Bizet
Mrs. John A. Alcott
Contralto—O Don Fatale ..... Verdi
Soprano—Waltz Song ..... Gounod
Miss Cecelia Backes
(3 weeks' study—ended contralto song on D in alt.)
Bell Song ..... Delibes
Esto Mihe ..... Herbert J. Wrightston
Mlle. Roxan D'Oex
(Accompanied by the composer)
Liszt Transcription (Rigoletto) ..... Verdi
Miss Harriet Cartwright
Cello solos—
Sur le lac ..... Godard
Tarantelle ..... Popper
Robert S. Cook

It is exhilarating to watch the gradual development of any of the Tew pupils for, not only is one astonished at first by the great voice possibilities, but afterwards, and by very perceptible degrees, week by week, there is to be noted growth in various other directions.

For instance, Mlle. D'Oex, who surprised us with her great range and the ease of her top notes (very much "top" it may be added in passing), is now, in each appearance, proving growth in musicianship and in tastefulness and fidelity to best tradition in her interpretations.

For instance, this writer has heard her sing the "Bell Song" from "Lakme" several times previous to last Sunday, and while the tonal quality was wonderful from the first, it must be said that on last Sunday there was a very perceptible improvement in the interpretation.

She sang the number much more briskly than before, and while she maintained the same purity of tone, was able to allow herself more freedom of expression.

The same thing is true of all others who have been heard from time to time.

Miss Cecilia Backes, who was heard for the first time on last Sunday, has been a pupil of Mr. Tew only three weeks, but is certainly developing at a remarkable rate. She has added an unbelievable number of tones to her range, and on last Sunday her unusually good voice was heard to fine advantage in the contralto aria "O Don Fatale" (Verdi), and the Soprano Waltz Song from "Romeo and Juliet," which she ornamented with even more than the usual number of very high tones.

Mr. Alcott, whose voice is probably at first a high baritone, was heard in "Messiah" excerpts and in a Purcell song, the gamut thus covered embracing both bass and tenor material, and all of it was done exceedingly well.

Mrs. Alcott, also the possessor of a fine voice and a nice presence as well, was so successful in her group as to prove that her growth is rapid.

As usual, there were instrumental numbers by way of diversion, and these were especially good on Sunday.

A special feature of the program was the introduction of "Esto Mihi," a song written by the Chicago composer, Herbert Wrightson, especially for Mlle. D'Oex, and which she sang to his accompaniment.

It is a remarkable song from many standpoints, not the least of which is its almost superhuman range. Wr. Wrightson, however, evidently took Mr. Tew at his word, and provided something entirely out of the usual, which, it must be said, disturbed Mlle. D'Oex not at all; on the contrary, providing her merely with a fresh revel. The song made a good impression and will be heard again with pleasure. C. E. W.

Miss Gilbert, who has been teaching in the vocal department of the Lawrence Conservatory, Appleton, Wis., has returned to the city for the summer and is now working with Lucille Stevenson. Miss Gilbert has had a most successful year at Appleton, both as teacher and soloist.

A SNAPPY ADVERTISEMENT

Lee and J. J. Shubert, the New York theatrical managers who control several Chicago theaters, object to the review of their shows by the dramatic critic of The Chicago Evening Post and refuse him admission to their playhouses.

Believing that persons who will not permit their offerings to receive a fair criticism should not be allowed to advertise in its amusement columns, The Post has thrown out the advertisements of all Shubert plays and playhouses.—Chicago Evening Post.

AT THE WARRINGTON THEATER

Walton Pyre, at the Warrington Theater in Oak Park, has had the good pudgment to give his patrons the sort of thing that people need in these hot and stressful days. He has treated them to two weeks of real comedy.

Last week it was a rollicking, laughable performance of "Mam'zelle." "A comedy of surprises" it was advertised, and it was true to the promise.

Mrs. Pyre impersonated Mam'zelle, and she did most cleverly. Mam'zelle is, of course, French, young, chic and an orphan. She came to America to find her Uncle Francois, her only relative.

Tarleton Tupper (Mr. Pyre) and his wife, Louisa Tupper (Jean Cooper), are not getting on well because Mr. Tupper is too attentive, too much in love with his wife, so Louisa's brother Lionel fixes up a plan with Mam'zelle to make Louisa jealous, and thereby hangs the tale.

The second act presents a vaudeville performance and during this numerous members of the cast find their lines require them to take their places in the audience and on account of the disturbances they create the ushers have to remove them, even if it must be done in a free-for-all fight. It certainly gave many thrills and lots of laughable situations.

Mr. and Mrs. Pyre take their parts capitally. Mr. Louis Lytton, who is the "uncle," is the typical Frenchman. He first appears in the theater lobby scene and next his voice is heard from the balcony of the theater; in a few moments he is climbing on to the stage from the front. He creates lots of fun for everybody.

Warren Wade as Bob, the fiance of Mam'zelle, and Jack Goodwin as Lionel, the brother of Louisa, are both excellent in their parts.

The company is unusually good for the outlying theater and drawing well. This week's offering is "The 13th Chair."

PUPILS OF MME. YUNG AT MUNICIPAL PIER

In conjunction with the American Choral Society and under the auspices of the Drama League of Chicago the pupils of Mme. Marie Yung, one of Chicago's representative dance instructors, presented a program of delectable dance numbers last Friday evening at the Municipal Pier Auditorium. The numbers used were recruited from the recent Blackstone Theater function. The Juvenile Corps de Ballet again demonstrated the charming "Pirouette." Constance Penny repeated her finished performance of "Scenes from an Imaginary Ballet." This youngster bears watching, for she is one of the best exponents of the art of Mme. Yung's teaching.

Dorothy Gnaedinger was excellent in her idea of the "Danse de la Gypsy." Others on the program were Beatrice Groll, Dorothy Lang, Charlotte Stevens, Evelyn Atkeisson, Virginia Rucker, Hildegarde Brosnihan, Elinor Rice, Grayce Blair, Charline O'Shaughnessy and Claribel Schmitt.

The Russian ballet closed the program, coupled with a patriotic finale in which the participants of the entire program took part.

Altogether Madame's pupils disclosed professional stage presence, backed up by an accurate idea of dance technic.

GAYLORD YOST AT WORK IN THE COUNTRY

Gaylord Yost, American composer-violinist, is spending the summer in the country at Fayette, Ohio, where he is busily engaged on new material for repertoire for the coming season, and it is also to be expected that some new compositions will come from his fertile pen ere the season wanes. Mr. Yost has always been an ardent supporter of the American composer and has performed many American works on his programs. In 1913 he was one of the first violinists to play the Sonata in G by John Alden Carpenter. Likewise, he has introduced compositions by Albert Spalding and Cecil Burleigh, both of whom have dedicated works to Mr. Yost in recognition of his gifts and fine American spirit.

Before Mr. Yost returns to Indianapolis to resume his duties as head of violin department of the Indiana College of Music and Fine Arts, he will appear at Lockport, N. Y., the first week of September on two programs of the National American Music Festival.

CONCERT AT THE AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

Wednesday morning, July 17, was the occasion of another of the delightful series of morning recitals whch are being given at the American Conservatory. The soloists on this occasion were Silvio Scionti, pianist, and Louise Winter, soprano.

The following program was given:

Andante, Favors
Scherzo
Rondo, Sonata, Op. 2, No. 2 ..... Beethoven
Mr. Scionti

Two Children's Songs ..... Grieg
Dobbin Farmyard
Twilight ..... Glen
The Captain ..... Rogers
Mrs. Winter

Chaconne ..... Bach-Busoni
Mr. Scionti

Winter Roses ..... Fontenailles
Rose Softly Blooming ..... Spohr
Supposing ..... Bischoff
Mrs. Winter

Ballade, F major ..... Chopin
Two Pierrot Pieces ..... Cyril Scott
Lento
Allegro
Rhapsody, F sharp minor ..... Dohnanyi
Spring Night ..... Schumann-Liszt
Mr. Scionti
Miss Louise Robyn at the piano

Mr. Scionti played with temperament and artistic perception. He gave a scholarly reading to the Beethoven Sonata and played the Chaconne (Bach-Busoni) with great precision of technique and taste in interpretation. The Chopin Ballade was rendered with rare delicacy, and the Cyril Scott numbers with splendid breadth of tone.

Mrs. Winter was particularly fortunate in the choice of her songs. They were of just the type to appeal to a morning audience and were sung in excellent style. Mrs. Winter's voice, though not of great power, is very pleasing in quality and extremely well used. The first group was perhaps the more pleasing to the audience, inasmuch as it contained two of the too little used Grieg children's songs and "The Captain," a charming child song by Rogers. In the second group "Rose Softly Blooming" (Spohr) was warmly responded to, as was also the clever "Supposing" (Bischoff).

On Wednesday, July 24, a recital by Heniot Levy and Herbert Butler completed the series. MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

MINNIE MURDOFF KIMBALL

Minnie Murdoff Kimball, one of the best of pianists and a great favorite at Greencastle, Ind., where she is a member of the Faculty of De Pauw University School of Music, gave the following comprehensive piano recital recently:

Sicilienne ..... Bach
Sarabande ..... Rameau-Godowsky
Reverie (Dreaming Oreade) ..... Paul Juon
Etude (Naiads at the Spring) ..... Paul Juon
Fate ..... Francis Hendricks
Exotic Fragrance ..... Francis Hendricks
Rain Song ..... Blanche Goode
The Lark ..... Glinka-Balakirew
May Night ..... Palmgren
Rhapsodie ..... Dohnanyi
Two Preludes
Nocturne in D flat ..... Chopin
Waltz in E minor ..... Chopin
Allegro Appassionato ..... Saint-Saens

DANIEL PROTHEROE AT WARREN AVENUE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

At Warren Avenue Congregational Church on last Sunday evening the program was a distinctly "different one," and was given jointly by the pastor, Rev. James Jenkins and the Chicago composer-conductor, Daniel Protheroe, with good assistance from the regular church organist.

Dr. Jenkins devoted his talk to a defense of the presentation of matters of "outside interest" in the church and before he had finished had proven conclusively that everything has its place in a claim of attention from the pulpit.

He gave fine eulogies of President Wilson and the "Two Georges" of England—the King and Mr. Loyd George.

Mr. Protheroe not only gave a number of songs, but also appeared in a speech, his subject being Lloyd George.

His talk was exhilarating and bristled with interesting anecdote.

"Who is King now?" said an Englishman on his release from a prison sentence which had lasted since before the death of Edward. "George," answered someone. "Well, I always knew that the Little Welshman would come to the top," said the prisoner.

Among the stories told by Mr. Protheroe was this one: "We will soon have home rule in Ireland and all other countries," said Lloyd George in a recent speech.

"Like Hell," said a disgruntled hearer. "That's right," said Mr.. George, "I like to hear every man stand up for his own country."

For his musical numbers Mr. Protheroe gave an old Welsh song in a translation made by Dr. Jenkins, the Welsh national song, "March of the Men of Harlech," and "When the Boys Come Home," in all these singing with great spirit and a full patriotic understanding and disclosing the fact further that he has skill and style in vocal manipulation and knows always just how to appeal to an audience.

In his conducting of "America" he proved also that he can sway an audience to just the interpretative and emotional point desired. C. E. W.

LA CHORALE FRANCAISE DE CHICAGO

The music committee of "La Chorale Francaise de Chicago" (mixed chorus), will meet on July 31 at 8 p.m. at the studios of Charles Lagourgue, the director, for the hearing of voices.

Those wishing to join should bring one song. Inability to speak or sing French need not prevent singers from applying, as a French class will be held before each rehearsal in order to obtain the correct pronunciation.

The programs of "La Chorale Francaise de Chicago" will be sung partly in English.

HENRY ARTIST PUPIL TO PLAY AT RAVINIA CONCERT

Miss Ellen Ekholm, an artist pupil of Harold Henry, will be the pianist on the program, Friday afternoon, August 9, at Ravinia Park.

WESTERN CONSERVATORY

A piano recital was given at the Western Conservatory rooms on last Wednesday evening by Lucile Epstein, an 8 year old piano pupil of Grace Knowlton Scott, which was a model of what such a function should be.

In a little speech made by Mr. Scott, president of the Conservatory, he stated that the little girl was not presented as a prodigy, but merely that, having talent and brains, as well as a good, faithful co-worker in her mother, Mrs. Scott had been able to develop the talent to such a satisfactory degree that a recital was the natural thing, and doubtless would prove entertaining and act also as a stimulant to other young pupils.

All these results most certainly were attained and both Mrs. Scott and Miss Lucile may feel a great pride in the success of the work last Wednesday evening.

The young pianist is markedly musical—no such thing as a harsh tone seems to exist within her possibility, and in the matter of accuracy she is certainly a model.

Seldom, indeed, does any child show such skill in shading or tone color, and few are the pianists of any age who have such assurance in carrying out preconceived ideas of interpretation.

Of course, the numbers chosen were (and quite properly) mostly simple in construction and style, and yet there was enough variety and a sufficient amount of difficulty, both technical and interpretative, to prove both the innate musical feeling of the little girl and the excellent training she has had.

Dainty and cunning pieces by Bohm, Blake, Dennee and Wachs were played in like manner, while two short bits by Schumann and one by Heller proved that Miss Lucile has budding introspective powers and a very clear regard for inner voices.

A "Chaconne" (Durand), for two pianos, in which she was assisted by Mrs. Scott at the second piano, showed that Lucile has stability in contrapuntal writing and that she knows how to maintain her own musical independence against the rather involved accompaniment provided by the composer.

Altogether it was a delight to hear this playing, and the whole recital was musically fragrant and charming.

Several other quite small people assisted in the program.

Justin McCarthy, a small boy violin pupil of C. B. Durkee, played in an honest, straightforward way in solo appearance, and was joined by another little boy, Robert O'Reilly, in a definite reading of a violin duo.

Lola Bonita Strauss, the youngest person on the program evidently, represented the dramatic department of the Conservatory in a sure reading of "The Ruby Heart."

Two pupils of Margaret Dahlstrom supplied the vocal numbers. These were Mildred Gothard and Alice Gothard, sisters, both less than 20 and each the possessor of style and finish.

The former of these read very delightfully Denza's "May Morning," and the latter gave with spirit and understanding "A Japanese Maiden" (Gaynor) and "The Chrysanthemum" (Salter), all this work showing, definitely and pleasingly, the guiding hand of Miss Dahlstrom. C. E. W.

A MENDELSSOHN CHURCH PROGRAM

A Mendelssohn program was recently given at McCabe Memorial M. E. Church, Chicago, under the direction of Mary Willing Meagley, with Margaret Lester as soloist, the list reading as follows:

Organ prelude—Theme and Variations in D minor
Hymn—Still, Still with Thee
Bass solo—Lord God of Abraham (Elijah, Part I)
Mr. Fiske
Chorus—Cast Thy Burden Upon the Lord
Chorus Choir
Gloria Patri
Offertory—Adagio from Third Organ Sonata
Soprano solo—Hear Ye, Israel (Elijah, Part II)
Mrs. Lester
Bass solo—It Is Enough
Mr. Fiske
Tenor recitative—See Now He Sleepeth Beneath a Juniper Tree
Mr. Blye
Trio—Lift Thine Eyes to the Mountains
Women's Voices
Chorus—He, Watching Over Israel, Slumbers Not Nor Sleeps
Chorus Choir
Alto solo—O Rest in the Lord
Mrs. Black
Hymn—Come, Thou Long Expected Jesus
Organ postlude—Allegro Moderato from First Organ Sonata

Brumbaugh—Frances Pierson Brumbaugh, teacher of piano, is spending the Summer at Lake Placid, N. Y., where she will teach a special Summer course in piano, beginning August 1. Her Chicago classes will be cared for during her absence by Miss Hosier, her assistant teacher.

Wednesday Night

Not least in this season's splendid Metropolitan-Ravinia repertoire stands "Tales of Hoffman," the famous Offenbach opera comique, which was given on Wednesday evening with a splendid cast.

Two changes were announced. Mr. Harrold sang the role of Hoffman, replacing Mr. Sciaretti, and Giulietta, which was to have been taken by Ruth Miller in her initial performance, was taken by Lenore Ferrari, who exhibited a fair amount of dramatic and vocal artistry in her interpretation of the part. Mr. Harrold made an altogether satisfactory figure of Hoffman, besides distinguishing himself in the vocal parts. Rothier in the double role of Dr. Miracle and Coppelius acquitted himself remarkably well, taking full advantage of his opportunity for caricature and exercising his best voice throughout, especially in the last act.

The biggest impression of the evening, however, was made by Mabel Garrison in her famous role of the doll and later as Antonia. Though her voice is admirably suited to both parts, she is at her best in that of the doll, in which she reaches remarkable climaxes of tone and exhibits histrionic cleverness in a large degree.

Other parts of lesser importance, but none the less well rendered, were Niclaus, given a most sincere reading by Sophie Braslau; Dapertutto, done by Graham Marr in his usual splendid style, and that of the Vision, in which Miss Latham did the best work yet heard by this writer. D'Angelo acquitted himself well in the double role of Spalanzani and Crespel, as did also Daddi, with his usual cleverness, as Franz and Cochenille. M. C. W.

Thursday Evening

It would scarcely seem possible that "Aida," which is considered specifically as a "pageant opera," could be given successfully without much scenery and a host of supernumeraries.

And, in fact, it could not be unless the principal parts were in unusually good hands, and such, indeed, was the case on last Thursday at Ravinia, when Claudio Muzio, Sophie Braslau and Morgan Kingston sang the three major roles of Aida, Amneris and Radames, and were splendidly flanked by Leon Rothier and Louis D'Angelo as Ramfis and the King, providing such a wealth of vocal beauty as to leave no need of pageantry to complete the joy of the audience.

The music of the High Priest suits the wonderful Rothier voice excellently and Mr. D'Angelo, while not quite the right stature for the King, is yet unusually fine in the music.

The ensemble at the end of the first act was done by these five singers as well as it has ever been heard by this writer.

The stage was tastefully, if not gorgeously set, and the chorus did valiant service; especially good was the ensemble of women in the second scene (in Amneris' apartments).

Miss Muzio, who certainly has gained a great hold on Ravinia audiences, is regarded as better in "Aida" than any part she has yet essayed there, although this hearer likes her better in "Tosca."

She has a remarkable ability to show emotion through facial expression, and if any Aida ever could more affectively show her grief and despair through bodily writhings and heavings that singer has so far escaped attention.

Her voice, too, is exactly fit for the Verdi heroine and she was able to emphasize the dramatic possibilities of the two big arias of the first act very potently.

Sophie Braslau has been heard often in concert and festival and has been, in estimation, a constantly growing factor.

MORGAN KINGSTON

She had not been seen, however, by this writer, in opera until last Thursday, and her work at that time proved indeed a revelation.

The Braslau voice has always been a musical joy. It has quality and depth and it is backed up by great intelligence.

Few contraltos, indeed, have so smooth or equal a scale, and fewer still so completely escape having a "bad part" in the voice.

It was expected, therefore, that the vocal lines of Amneris would present no difficulties to Miss Braslau and that she would, on the contrary, invest it with great charm.

But, the event proved her capable of much more than that, for she not only sang it with opulence and vocal passion, but, also, in the dressing, posing and action of the part, and very especially in facial expression, she proved herself a remarkably good actress.

We have in Chicago been accustomed to the gorgeous voice and the superb appearance of Eleanora De Cisneros in the role, but Miss Braslau suffers not at all in comparison with that artist, and, in fact, has individual points of her own which more than compensate for any special graces in the De Cisneros reading of the part, and, as for other exponents of Amneris in Chicago, they are not to be compared to Braslau, even though the list includes Van Gordon and Claussen.

With such a duo of women singers in collaboration, it is not surprising that Morgan Kingston, in this opera, rose to even unwonted heights.

He certainly looks the warrior to perfection and, in walk, pose and dress, he has evolved one of the most striking portraitures of Radames ever seen in this part of the country.

His voice on Thursday was at top notch of condition and in "Celeste Aida" it rang out searchingly and with a full quota of that sweetness of quality which always obtains in his singing.

Many tenors have been tried out at Ravinia—some of them range from medium to good in certain operas—but, for week in and week out appearances and for a steady recurrence year after year, no one has done so many beautiful pieces of work or has made so profound and lasting an impression as has Morgan Kingston. C. E. W.

Friday Afternoon

Two young artists of unusual talent and ambition appeared on the Student-Artist program Friday afternoon. They were Miss Janet Linn Cobb, violinist, and Miss Mabel Lyons, pianist. Miss Cobb has studied violin with prominent teachers in Detroit, Los Angeles and Milwaukee, although within recent years she has had her training with Adolf Weidig of the American Conservatory. She played three numbers, Andante, Opus 19 (Vieuxtemps), "La Captive" (Mrs. H. H. A. Beach) and Bourree (Weidig). The first two were evidently selected with an eye to giving the prominence to tone rather than technic, which is not only unusual, but refreshing. The last number gave ample evidence of Miss Cobb's technical ability, so that as a group the numbers were peculiarly well adapted to a proof of the all-round qualities of Miss Cobb's playing. Miss Lychenheim at the piano exhibited qualities of sound musicianship and good taste in her splendid accompaniments.

Miss Lyons, a pupil of Howard Wells, has recently appeared with orchestra in the Saint-Saens G minor and the Rubinstein D minor Concertos and was numbered among the prize winners in the piano contest of the Lake View Musical Society, held recently. She played the Chopin Ballade (A flat major), Intermezzo-Scherzando (Leschetizky) and the MacDowell Concert Etude, displaying a faultless technic and artistic discrimination of phrasing and general expression. Her work throughout proved her a musician of temperament and rare promise.

The orchestra numbers, under the direction of Papi, made an admirable and distinguished background for the afternoon's performance. M. C. W.

Friday Evening

In the evening Mr. Hageman was again in charge of the concert, the soloists being Bruno Steindel and Graham Marr, singing in the place of Miss Braslau. The program was a great success. The evening was beautiful, not too cool for comfort and not warm enough for mosquitoes. So that, with these two evils avoided and an unusual number of army and navy boys present, the performance met with a hearty and enthusiastic response from the audience.

The program was as follows:

March Triumphale ..... Borowski
Overture—In Autumn ..... Grieg
Romanze from Suite Op. 19 ..... Dohnanyi
Le Cygne ..... Saint-Saens
Serenade ..... Rimsky-Korsakow

Bruno Steindel

The Damnation of Faust ..... Berlioz
Invocation
Menuet of the Will o' the Wisps
Dance of the Sylphs
March Rakoczy
Overture—With Nature ..... Dvorak
Selection

Graham Marr

Mock Morris ..... Grainger
Shepherd's Hey ..... Grainger
Valse de Concert, No. 1, Op. 47 ..... Glazounow

The Borowski March was broad and optimistic in flavor, and the Dohnanyi Romanze was rendered in the characteristic questioning mood of the composer, with a plaintive cello obligato. Mr. Steindel (in spite of his objections to the limitations which the war puts upon his repertoire) played the graceful Saint-Saens "Swan" and the Rimsky-Korsakow Serenade in his usual style.

Mr. Marr was in fine voice and his stage presence was exceedingly friendly and pleasantly informal. Mr. Hageman's accompaniments must again be mentioned. In fact, to anyone who is interested in accompanying, they cannot fail to stand out as among the most flawless, the most artistic executions of their kind.

The Grainger folk songs afforded a particularly charming contrast to the rest of the program and sent the audience away in a light-hearted and grateful humor.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Programs to Come

This, Friday, afternoon, at the Student Artists' Concert, the soloists will be Lillian Billow and Sylvia Loder.

This evening at the Symphony Concert, the popular Sophie Braslau will again appear as soloist.

On Saturday and Sunday afternoons there will be concerts, and on Saturday evening "La Boheme" will be given, with Muzio, Kingston, D'Angelo, Rothier and others in the cast.

On Sunday evening there will be a repetition of "Lakme," with Braslau, Muzio, Kingston, D'Angelo and others in the cast.

CARL CRAVEN

Carl Craven, tenor, was the soloist at a band concert last Wednesday evening at Winterset, Iowa, singing before a crowd of 2,000 people from the courthouse steps. Besides his regular group Mr. Craven was forced to acknowledge six well-earned encores.

FANTASTIC FADS AND FALLACIES

By HERBERT WHITNEY TEW

Two of the most mentally vacuous superstitions which have obsessed the vocal imagination of the moment are: First, the notion that the tone should be placed in the nose, or back of the nose, or somewhere in the immediate vicinity of this olfactory protuberance. Far be it from me to deride or malign the well-trained and duly sensitive proboscis; it uses are many and it is often, in the still watches of the night, vocal, nay, even sonorous; but for serious vocal work it must be regretfully laid aside. It is not the normal environment of the real vocal cords, although, upon the evident supposition that it is, modern vocal instruction rears its lofty superstructure of mystifying theories and riotous abandonment of speculation.

Whether or not the soporific effect produced by modern singing is in some occult way related to these nasal cords or snorers—science fails us for proper nomenclature—is not germane to our subject, but may suggest a line of musing.

The second phantasm of the vis inertia is the strange illusion that the modern average vocal range is more than a patch of the natural compass of the voice, every voice, all voices, to be clear.

This normal range is about 3½ octaves, and if this scale is not performed easily the vocal instrument is jammed.

If the instrument easily performs this scale then, and then only is it free and not forced. It must make this scale and will, if it is properly played upon by an intelligent breathing process.

In short, lacking this proper and natural breath control or art of emission, with a resultant short scale, the instrument is out of order, is suffering abuse and is being gradually destroyed by every tone produced by it; the process defies physical law, and runs counter to common sense and logic.

The fear one hears frequently expressed by those who do not understand the nature of the instrument and nature's principle in the production of pitch is not altogether to be wondered at in view of the crass immaturity of the general estimate and standards of vocal art; but it is an ignorance nevertheless which is inexcusable, and one which convicts of meager qualifications of observation and crude analysis.

The singers of the world who have in any sense mastered the art or won the right to be called "great" have, without exception, used from three to four octaves as a matter of course. And the hallucination that any sort of a vocal art is remotely possible without this mastery of breath is sublimely stupid, and arrogantly oblivious to the facts which the history of vocal art chronicles.

The singing—again a suitable vocabulary is like the disappearing fruit and water—of the prima-donne of the day in such music as the "Bell Song," "Shadow Song," "Ah! fors e lui," Charmant Oiseau, the Mignon Polonaise, etc., with their mad velocities and mawkish rubato, are grotesque travesties upon art and are inconsequent interferences with the divine authority of rhythm.

These meteoric accelerandos, these muscular shakes and cabbage flora, which a deceived public is educated to look upon as art standards, are caused through the vocal incapacity of the singers. They have no educated sustaining breath control which enables them to sing these arias in time or rhythm or with a true musicianship. This trained breath control is the lost element.

Vocal students should eschew the records of such, except perhaps to take warning from them, for they abuse every canon of art, ignore the constituents of melody and establish standards at once artistically erroneous and altogether pernicious.

ORCHESTRA HALL

The main attraction at Orchestra Hall this week is not the soloist, the orchestra nor the picture, though the latter is a winner; the interest centers around an American boy who has seen service "over there" and has come out unscratched to tell us of the terrible atrocities that our boys must face in conquering the Hun.

Small in stature, yet virile and well knit is Private Dempsey, in whose eyes blaze the unmistaken hatred for the foe, as he relates incidents of his life in service. He is an earnest talker and an excellent recruiter for Uncle Sam.

The picture is the cinema version of Rupert Hughes' marriage-divorce novel, "We Can't Have Everything," produced by the master hand of Cecil de Mille. Employing a cast of choice picture actors of the Pacific coast, the story is very jerky and ends incompletely, though it is able to hold our interest throughout by the expert acting of the cast. It deals with the idea that "if married unhappily, why, get a divorce and re-marry happily." So four of the leading characters indulge in the transfiguration, only to find that they "can't have everything." Kathlyn Williams of the "Adventures of Kathlyn" fame is the wife who divorces her husband and waits patiently for Elliot Dexter to undo his matrimonial knot so that she may be happy in the romance which culminates in a base hospital in France. Wanda Hawley does the innocent "baby vampire," who exists in real life also, and whose tactics are more deadly than Theda Bara's ever dared to be in "reel" life. Sylvia Breamer was excellent as the magnet that lures Thurston Hall (Kathlyn's husband) astray, giving her grounds for divorce. The balance of the case included such well known names as Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, Theodore Roberts, Charles Ogle and James Neill, who were content to furnish atmosphere, which goes to show that even picture actors "Can't Have Everything." The music furnished by the orchestra did not synchronize well with the picture, and the soloist, Grace Wynn, was handicapped by a hazy voice. ALLEN YORK.

CHICAGO PIANO COLLEGE

The big attendance at the rooms of the Chicago Piano College on last Tuesday evening was proof enough that the public is now keenly alive to music-educational projects, and the size and quality of the class appearing in piano numbers proved that Harmon H. Watt, the teacher of all those on the program, has a fine class this Summer.

As the same hopeful status is reported from all Chicago schools and studios, the inference is very easy to draw that a reaction has certainly set in over the conditions which prevailed at this time last year, and that the public is again alive to the pleasures of music as well as to the necessity for its cultivation.

The program is reprinted here in entirety because of the fact that it is a model of its kind. Any teacher might well use it as copy, and any teacher who can produce the pupils to give this list a successful presentation may safely claim himself to be a fine one:

*Duo—Minuet, A flat major.....Whelpley
Miss Dorothea Marks
Pasquinade .....Gottschalk
Miss Thelma Simons
*Duo—Sonata, C major, First Movement..Mozart-Grieg
Miss Mary Beall
Au Matin .....Godard

*Concerto, E flat major, Op. 32.....Von Weber
Mrs. Hazel B. Bryant
In My Neighbor's Garden.....Nevin
Miss Hildur Bergstrom
*Concerto, F sharp minor, Op. 69, Last Movement .....Hiller
Miss Dorothy Linker
Soirees de Vienne, No. 6.....Schubert-Liszt
Mrs. Nellie S. Dohmen
Prelude, C sharp minor.....Rachmaninoff
Miss Dorothy Rivkin
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 11.....Liszt
Miss Helen Moskowitz
*Concerto, C major, Op. 11.....Von Weber
Richard Schweitzer
Nocturne, B flat major.....Paderewski
Return of the Braves.....Cadman
Miss Julia Perry
Air de Ballet, G minor.....Moszkowski
Miss Lavinia Kent
*Concerto, G minor, Op. 22, Last Movement.....
..... Saint-Saens
Miss Agnes Peterson

* With Mr. Watt at second piano.

This program was an apt admixture of old with new and of grave with gay, with the result that it was of fascinating interest throughout.

The ensemble numbers proved wholly good. The Whelpley Minuet is novel and exhilarating, and the Grieg-Mozart Sonata, as always with these skillful adaptations, proved delightful.

Grieg, himself in style very opposite Mozart, has yet sensed exactly what Mozart needs of background, and his second piano parts to many of the Sonatas are altogether apropos and equally delightful.

Von Weber, simple and direct as to content, was yet a master writer of graceful pyrotechnic display, and his works light up and vivify any program.

The Hiller Concerto is an example of "linked sweetness long drawn out" and provides fine contrast to Saint-Saens, who is glittering and flamboyant, if not wildly bravura. The solo numbers were of fine choice and great contrast also.

The "Pasquinade" (Gottschalk) and the "Air de Ballet" (Moszkowski) are brilliant examples of that sort of piano pieces which depend upon crisp rhythm and a very definite cantabile statement for their effect, and have, therefore, for lo! these years, been favorites of advanced players who had a direct rather than an introspective turn of mind.

The Liszt Eleventh is the most pleasing of the Rhapsodies, partly, perhaps, because it is the shortest, and the Nevin excerpt of this program is one of the most graceful bits from the exceedingly facile and graceful pen of "the American Chopin."

"Au Matin" made the Godard fame in so far as pianists are concerned, and had not Rachmaninoff written the C sharp minor Prelude the pianist world would have been bereaved indeed.

The "Soirees de Vienne" (No. 6) is made up of a lot of gems of the Schubert storehouse, tricked out in a way to delight any young pianist by the master trickster, Liszt.

Like a famous prototype (Rubinstein), Paderewski has been proven to be a much greater pianist than composer, and his Nocturne appeals but little on a first hearing, although, doubtless, it has qualities which "grow on one."

Cadman usually strikes fire when he attempts the melodramatic, and his "Return of the Braves" is no exception to this rule. It is big, pompous and, at times, terrible.

All these numbers were well played, Miss Peterson naturally reaching a finer quality of tone and a more definite reading than the others, inasmuch as she is an artist pupil of long standing and has had much experience to draw upon.

She was sure and facile, and in quality of tone was distinctly in the artist class.

It is a characteristic of the Chicago Piano College that its pupils remain in the studios a long time. They take the Preparatory and the Graduating courses as a matter of course, but they also go on with Post-Graduate and Artist courses, and for years after they are independent teachers and players they continue in the school as pupils.

Such a one is Miss Peterson, who post-graduated some time ago and who has a large and thriving piano class of her own.

Misses Perry and Kent also are very advanced and both did fine work.

Young Mr. Schweitzer played with skill and power, and Miss Moskowitz again proved her superior mettle.

Dorothy Rivkin, daughter of one of the best flutists in Chicago (E. A. Rivkin), proved her worth conclusively, and Mrs. Dohman, for many years a pupil of the college, showed that her years have been spent to good advantage.

Not all of the others were heard by this writer, but each one of them deserves credit for careful and tasteful work. The whole program was a proof of the good technic, the fine style and the conscientiousness of the teaching at the Chicago Piano College.

GRANT KIMBELL

Grant Kimbell, who has fulfilled a great many concert engagements during the season, besides holding most important church and temple positions, has developed a large class of students in vocal art, and so insistent is the demand for his work in the line of teaching that he has decided to remain in his studio during the Summer.

Mr. Kimbell has been a most thorough and careful student of the vocal art. He has read extensively and has tested to a finish every method or development of vocal art which has seemed to him to offer any help in the difficult art of singing.

He has thrown aside everything which proved to be mere fad and has held fast to all good ideas wherever found, and has amalgamated them into a system which, having also the force of his experience and his personality back of it, has developed him into a thoroughly successful teacher.

His repertoire is limitless and his routine of church, concert and opera have been such as to make his work as a teacher invaluable.

In opera he has made many appearances and during the past year has scored especially in performances of "I Pagliacci" and "Carmen" at the Ziegfeld Theater in Chicago.

For years Mr. Kimbell has been in the famous quartet at the First Congregational Church in Oak Park, one of the very best of local positions, and has held also one of the finest temple positions in Chicago.

His recital giving and his appearances in concert, both in Chicago and throughout the Middle West especially, have been extensive and his appearance as soloist in "The Messiah" with the Chicago Apollo Club last Christmas was a very great success.

Mr. Kimbell has an unlimited number of friends and his personality is such as to make him, always, a prime favorite with any audience before which he appears, even before he sings.

And when he sings, the audiences know also that he is the possessor of style, repertoire, technic and skill, as well as of personality and beautiful voice, and, as a result, all these things have combined to make him one of the most sought after singers in Chicago.

LUCIE ROBERTS-LENOX

Lucie Roberts-Lenox was hostess at a studo party given her pupils at her Oak Park studio last Tuesday evening. A program delightful in all its features was given by Frances Coates and Hazel Meisterling of Oak Park and Margaret Neville of Anamosa, Iowa.

Among the numbers were "Seguidilla," from "Carmen," by Miss Meisterling; selections by Miss Neville which have met with hearty approval from the jackies of Great Lakes, and an aria from "Linda di-Chamounix" and two charming groups of Dutch and Irish songs in costume by Miss Coates.

Mrs. Lenox will leave shortly for two months' special vocal work in New York City.

ANNA GROFF-BRYANT NOTES

Mrs. Anna Groff-Bryant, director of the School of Three Arts, Lombard College and local manager of the All-Star Course of Galesburg, Ill., is spending the summer between Chicago and Galesburg. She is a regular attendant at the Ravinia Park opera, which series is more nearly possible for reproduction at Galesburg. The opera program planned for next season at Galesburg is one which will enlarge the musical activities of Galesburg to such an extent as to approach the standards of the North shore production. The opera series, in addition to the Artists' Recital Series and the series of recitals by the members of the faculties of the two music schools of Galesburg, will indeed be musically active this season.

William T. Tomlins gave a lecture and impromptu sing with a chorus of 100 children at Lombard College Chapel on Thursday evening, July 18. Mr. Tomlins' coming to Galesburg was under the direction of Anna Groff-Bryant. She left Chicago the first of the week for Galesburg and returned to Chicago July 23.

FOURTH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

LUCIA SMITH AND ELIZABETH GILBERT IN SONG PROGRAM

At the Cosmopolitan School of Music last Friday evening Miss Lucile Stevenson presented her long-time pupils, Lucia Smith and Elizabeth Gilbert, both sopranos, in a charming program of song before about as many people as could get into the attractive little recital hall.

Mrs. Smith has hosts of Chicago friends, for she sang here in church and concert throughout a period of several years with unusual success.

Since then she has lived for a year in Boston and has there also reaped a sheaf of appreciation.

On Friday evening she appeared again the same sincere, lovely personality, and her voice has retained its unusual beauty and has attained also more of depth and emotionality.

Her splendid vocal control was shown in the unusual length and suavity of her phrases, and her intelligence was proven anew in her impeccable enunciation of text as well as in many other details.

Her groups included "Ah, Love, but a Day" (Beach), a very unusual song, "Standin' in the Need of Prayer" (Reddick), in which her power was admirably shown; "A Bag of Whistles" (Crist) and Seiler's soaring "A Burst of Melody," which, as always, attained great success.

Elgar's suave "Pleading" and Fay Foster's beautiful "One Golden Day" were both done with fine vocal charm. Kramer's "Last Hour" demonstrated the exceptional value of Mrs. Smith's low voice, and Whiting's "A Birthday" completed the list of pleasure-giving numbers, augmented, of course, by encores.

Miss Gilbert, a Chicago girl, who now teaches at Lawrence Conservatory, Appleton, Wis., is the happy possessor of fine presence and a manner which is at once gracious and sincere.

In her two groups she showed great versatility of musical feeling and interpretative ability and proved also that her range is very exceptional.

In such a song as "Bois Epais" (Lully), for instance, her tones were so low as well as full and intense as to almost deceive one into classing her as a mezzo-contralto; but when, in the Scott "Wind's in the South," she soared to a high C and took it with absolute ease and fine effect one realized that she is a soprano of the widest possibilities as well as distinct beauty of quality.

Especially does Miss Gilbert excel in French text songs, and besides the Lully she sang "Green" (Debussy) and "Le Papillon" (Fourdrain), in the last named being so gay in spirit and so exuberant in tone as to provide a very wonderful contrast to the somber mood of the Lully number.

The Romanza from "Cavalleria Rusticana" was presented with great dramatic power, and in the last group Miss Gilbert proved herself the possessor of versatility in mood painting as well as in tone coloring.

"Summertime" (Ward-Stephens) and "Pirate Dreams" (Huerter) are two fine songs and were both done—each after its kind—extremely well.

"By the Waters of Minnetonka" (Lieurance), as well as the Scott song, was done superbly.

A noteworthy feature of the recital was the fine quality of the poems used throughout, this being enhanced, of course, by the perfect pronunciation and enunciation of both singers, while the fine vocal qualities and the perfection of musicianship in both were amplified and solidified through the sensitive, resourceful accompaniments provided by Miss Stevenson. ## A TRIBUTE TO FRANK DUNFORD

During the recent trip of the Paulist Choristers their concert in San Francisco was attended by Clarence Eddy, the distinguished organist, who afterward and unsolicited gave the following letter to Frank Dunford, Chicago basso:

San Francisco, May 30, 1918.

Frank M. Dunford has a bass voice of unusual compass and remarkably fine quality, which has received most admirable training. His enunciation is wonderfully clear and distinct, his phrasing intelligent and musicianly, and as a rare accomplishment, he sings in perfect tune. CLARENCE EDDY.

SUMMER PHILISTINE THEATER

The Philistines have moved north for the Summer and can now be found in their new abode at the north end of the grounds of the Edgewater Beach Hotel. There they have rigged up a miniature outdoor stage where one must bring along a top coat and plenty of citronella, the first to protect one from the treacherous breezes that infest the border land of the lake and the second to successfully "shoo" away the mosquitoes that the tungstens seem to be a magnet to draw in swarms. But aside from this the players seem more at home under the trees than they did cramped by four walls in the Fine Arts Building. Their art has for some reason broadened and the bits of realism they gave were consequently presented and received with greater enthusiasm than formerly.

Three one-act sketches occupied their attention; the three that made the best impression during their Winter run in the Loop—a comedy, a drama, and a farce. (One of which was bound to please the pilgrims that worship at the shrine of the Little Theater.)

Lillian Bell's "The Bride," a study in darky dialog, was the curtain raiser, featuring Mary Moncure Parker. Arriving late, we did not hear this. It was followed by "No Sabe," a drama of intense purpose whose main character is "Wo," a Celestial who murders his employer that "Letty may marry Georgie."

It served to introduce Elisha Cook in the capacity of actor-author. It is a neatly written bit of realism, pulsating and original, but inhumanly acted save in the case of Mr. Cook. Mr. Wolff can act, but he did not in this, and the two other gentlemen were a little miscast. The lady was sweet and that was all.

The farce, "The Warrior's Husband," was a merry dialogue in "Reverse English," by Captain Julian Thompson, U. S. A.

If one is not interested enough to delve into ancient history to ascertain how mere man became the master, one can obtain the answer by witnessing Captain Thompson's elucidation with sterling comedy on the side. This is a conscientious, well written satirical moment, and by far the best presented play of the evening. Each character was chosen for his or her adaptability to the role.

First honors go to Helen Converse Gatchell as the Queen of the Amazons, or more properly "King," the queenly honors going to Ray Wilson as Homo, her husband, a clean cut youngster, who seemed to enjoy the ludicrous speeches he uttered as much as did the audience. He is a decided acquisition to the Philistines.

Phillis Fay was Antiope, sister to the Queen, who succumbs to the kiss of "Theseus," which overthrows the rule of woman; for, like Samson sans his hair, woman, sans her girdle of Diana, is a weakling.

Robert Graceland indulged in some sidewalk talk as Hercules. Wingfield Carnegie flung the robes of the Greek hero Theseus to the four winds with good effect.

A laughable moment was introduced by J. Mitchell Leisen as the Greek Herald, "who had great difficulty in remembering the speech his tribe sent to the Queen." Helen Connor and Nell Barnes played their respective roles with understanding. This is a venture well worth while and worthy of the North Shore's endorsement, and this humble scribe wishes Mr. Cook and his coworkers a speedy entrance into the usually frigid bosom of our neighbor to the north. ALLEN YORK.

SUMMER NIGHT MUSICALE AT THE RIVER FOREST TENNIS CLUBHOUSE

On last Saturday evening, through the courtesy of Arthur Randolph Fraser, a splendid summer night musicale was given at the River Forest Clubhouse before a fine audience.

The place is ideal for such purpose. A fairly large and very pleasant auditorium, well lighted, well seated and with fine acoustics, is flanked by verandas which stretch out in all directions and offer cool, as well as comfortable additional places.

The stage is well equipped (including a grand piano), and everything about the concert of last Saturday evening was in keeping with the place and the splendid audience.

Mr. Fraser, besides being a delightful host, played most of the accompaniments of the evening and did it in a way to prove himself expert to the last degree.

This writer has never heard, for instance, a better playing of the difficult Prologue from "I Pagliacci" than provided by Mr. Fraser at this time.

Probably his duties as organist of Grace Church in Oak Park and his very large class of piano and organ pupils make it impossible for Mr. Fraser to enter the field as a public coach and accompanist, but he may be very sure, indeed, that no one in this vicinity is better equipped for such work.

Mr. Fraser also offered a sample of his teaching ability in the playing of his talented young pupil, Elizabeth Harris, whose work has so lately been reviewed in Music News.

She opened the program and gave a fine account of herself in a Chopin Polonaise, the Leschetizky left hand arrangement of the "Lucia" sextet and a Concert Waltz by Whitney.

This young lady (14, I believe) has presence and poise, as well as an unusual technical development and some very clever interpretative ideas.

She was so much liked that an encore was necessary, when, by special request, Mr. Fraser joined her in a duet arrangement of the Elgar "Pomp and Circumstance," which was played superbly.

The second soloist of the evening was Rollin Pease, who is billed as bass-baritone, but who ought always to be called "master interpreter," so alert and forceful are his readings.

His voice is rich and suave and is used with great skill, but it is in interpretation that he excels very signally.

He prefaces each group, each song, in fact, with explanatory matter which is of extraordinary interest and which he presents in such a way that it is one hundred per cent understandable.

Cowen's "Border Ballad" was very dramatic in his reading and provided a wonderful contrast to "Down in the Forest" (Ronald), a song this writer never before heard sung by a basso, but which, as read by Mr. Pease, was delightful.

The "Prologue" (in Italian) was a distinct piece of virtuosity and was topped by a high note which any tenor might envy.

The Tosti "Serenata" flowed its usual sugary course and the Burleigh "Deep River" held a little added significance in the Pease reading. "Tobacco," a quaint old song of the James I period, proved a distinct novelty, as well as a piquant joy, and "Uncle Rome" was given a reading at once sensible and different.

ROLLIN PEASE

Mr. Pease has been doing much cantonment work, and in his last group he showed us how "the boys" are taught songs.

It was very interesting and much could be said of the method and the manner of the Pease illustration.

"Land of Mine" (MacDermid) is "one of the best," according to Mr. Pease. "On the Road to Mandalay" and "Mr. Zipp" were done with great spirit and effect and John Alden Carpenter's "Home Road," a "much better song than it pretends to be" (Pease) closed the group. Mr. Pease's encores were well chosen and very much to the point.

The third artist of the evening was Allen York, a young actor who has made much success in Oak Park and River Forest, and who, for this occasion, made special arrangements of his own play, "The Coward," and an act of "The Man That Came Back"—two plays which made repeated successes in the Community Hall series at Oak Park last Winter.

At this time Mr. York appeared minus scenic assistance and with only a suggestion of the parts in his costumes, but so keen is his perception of dramatic values and such control has he of voice and facial expression that he was able to create a fine impression.

"The Coward" is a distinct "thriller" and its tragic story made much impression, while the popular "Man Who Came Back" again gave great pleasure.

JENNETTE LOUDON

Mr. York elected to present also at this time "In Flanders Fields" in the cantillation form, as written by Jennette Loudon, and the composer paid him and the audience the great compliment of coming out to River Forest just to play this for him.

"In Flanders Fields" is a wonderful poem, and its presentation at the present time, even without music, is attended with intense enthusiasm invariably.

Miss Loudon has added very materially to its interest by her music, and, of course, she plays it "con amore."

Mr. York proved himself an effective reader and very much in the picture by his clear and impassioned recitation of the verse.

Miss Loudon certainly has a unique gift for cantillation, and it is suggested that should she write something especially for Mr. York it could not fail of effect, especially when given by the two in collaboration.

BUSH CONSERVATORY

The third studio recital at the new Conservatory Building took place on Tuesday afternoon with four sterling artists as soloists—i. e., Theodora Troendle, pianist; Hazel Silver, soprano; Lillian Wright, mezzo-soprano, and H. William Nordin, baritone.

The spacious school was crowded to overflowing and the interest in the program at hand was at the highest pitch.

Hazel Silver, soprano, disclosed also that she possesses excellent mezzo tones and a keen perception of the musical as well as the artistic values of the works she presented. She is an ideal exponent of a gamut of compositions, as evidenced by the numbers she sang. "Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal" (Quilter) was properly presented in style and interpretation. An unusual arrangement of Burleigh's "Deep River" next occupied her attention with splendid results. "I Heard a Cry" (Fisher) was effectively presented, and "My Lover, He Comes on the Skee" (Clough-Leighter) was rendered with vivacious animation that was most delightful. In all, Miss Silver made a distinct personal impression.

Verne Tomlinson assisted with good taste at the piano.

Theodora Troendle, a disciple of the peerless Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, came next in a group of piano numbers bordering on the sentimental, languid type and temperamental outbursts.

Miss Troendle in both groups played with ease, sensibility and assurance that suggested a masculine touch. Particularly brilliant was her playing in the rapid passages, which were done with remarkable pearliness.

H. WILLIAM NORDIN

Lillian Wright is a most generously endowed young singer with a mezzo voice of opulent quality. Rapt attention on the part of the hearers spoke well for her ability to charm her audience. Her singing of the afternoon was a great artistic treat. "Romance" (Debussy), "Le Pleure en Reve" (Hue) and "Tes Yeux" (Rabey) were chosen with true regard for the best that her organ has to offer.

Edgar Nelson shared honors for his sympathetic work at the piano.

H. William Nordin closed the afternoon in good fashion. This baritone gave a wonderful reading to the numbers that fell to him, and he was throughout at ease, displaying a personal magnetism that knitted his audience to him thoroughly.

His temperamental nature gave life and color to the works he sang and he carried his listeners far from the busy streets of the bustling city. The merry Roundelay "Now Is the Month of May," "Sweet Violet of Sunny Spring" (Grieg) and "The Prologue" from "Pagliacci" constituted his offering, and they were heartily appreciated and vociferously applauded. He is a versatile and artistic singer.

Miss Wright lent aid at the piano.

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD WILL "TALK"

Many teachers who attended the "Music Test" last Saturday morning at the Effa Ellis Perfield Music School were disappointed because Mrs. Perfield's talk on "Musical Memory and Fore Feeling" had to be cut short on account of the large number of pupils from Kankakee, Aurora and Joliet appearing in a music test.

The Summer Session of the Effa Ellis Perfield Music School closes Friday, but Mrs. Perfield will give a special talk Saturday morning, July 27, 9 to 11 o'clock. Her subjects will be Material, Three Educational Senses and Pedagogy.

At 11 o'clock Felicia Turner, assistant teacher for Effa Ellis Perfield, will conduct a music test with pupls. Teachers, parents and students are invited.

N. A. O. ANNOUNCEMENT

In Portland, Maine, the annual convention of the National Association of Organists will be held August 6 to 9. The city of Portland is leaving nothing undone to make this convention a memorable one.

Conventions such as have marked the progress and activity of the N. A. O. are the planting times for organists. The seed sown at all former conventions has borne such fruit. The value of our conventions inestimable. Music needs our serious attention at this time. The war has aroused a spirit that calls for a fuller expression in music. Are we as musicians living up to our mission in guarding the sacred in music, in sensing the higher privileges of mastership?

At conventions we meet upon high ground. To unify our efforts, to broaden our viewpoint, to recognize a deeper significance in musical activity, to sense a diviner purpose in musical expression, to cultivate the desire for mastership, and so become instruments in the hands of destiny—these prompt us to meet, to collect and to express a larger idea.

The association is strong. During the past year notable musical events have occurred in many states. Increase in membership has been most gratifying. Maine has formed a chapter. Good fellowship, one of our richest possessions, is as lofty and contagious as ever.

The program this year is of unusual interest. Subjects dealing with higher musical problems in connection with the activity of the organist have been assigned to men of thought and experience.

While it is impossible to offer the full details of the program, some of the subjects, names of speakers as well as recitalists, follow:

"The American Organist: Is He Living Up to His Opportunities?"

"The Municipal Organist: The Immediate and Remote Effect of His Work."

"The Art of Being Particular."

"The Poilu and His Music."

"Polyphony versus Monophony in Sacred Music."

"Rhythmic Values in Interpretation."

"Choir Problems: Organization and Management," etc.

"Music in Wartime."

Among the speakers there are: Will C. McFarlane, Municipal Organist of the City of Portland, Maine; Hamilton MacDougall, Reginald McAll, Harvey Gaul, Walter Gale, Frederick Schlieder, Wallace Goodrich, Miles Martin, and others.

Recitals will be given by: Will C. McFarlane, Henry S. Fry, Huntington Woodman, William Zeuch.

Rollo Maitland, well-known photo player, will give a unique demonstration of film expression in music.

The local committee has arranged four delightful events for the entertainment of members.

ANNA TOMLINSON NORMAL SESSION

Miss Anna Tomlinson's first normal session for this season closed last Friday with expressions of the greatest enthusiasm from the teachers assembled from various States over the many benefits they had derived from the course with Miss Tomlinson and deep regret that it must come to a close.

The teachers presented Miss Tomlinson with a beautiful gold filigree bar pin set with a pearl and two sapphires as a token of their gratitude and love. The presentation was made in a very clever and interesting manner by Mrs. Brennan of New Orleans.

Miss Tomlinson's classes are held at the Sherwood Music School, 300 Fine Arts Building, and cover a course in fundamental training that is broad and inclusive, and also gives a very valuable and unique method of hand development, with exercises at table and piano to fit all types of hand and bring them under control until the much-desired "piano hand" is acquired. Every exercise is applied at once to the piano and to pieces and studies, so no particle of the pupil's time is wasted and all is subservient to the chief aim of good tone with proper shading and coloring to insure the most interesting and artistic finish in playing.

The teaching material given in this way covers the first four grades for children or adults and is invaluable to the teachers, while Miss Tomlinson's interpretation of even first-grade music is a revelation in what effects can be obtained even in a "five-finger province."

The classes are held daily except Saturday from 9 until 1 o'clock. The second class started last Monday and the third class will open Monday, August 5. For these normal classes Miss Tomlinson's textbook, "Forty Lessons on Hand Development," which is an education in itself, is used.

Miss Tomlinson is also conducting the normal work for the Sherwood Music School, of whose faculty she is a member, and gives the teachers from the branch studios, which embrace almost every State in the Union, the main school's interpretation of how best to present to their pupils the printed lesson sheets of the Progressive Series, which is the standard adopted by them.

BERTHA BEEMAN IN DEMAND

Although it is Midsummer, Miss Beeman has just had, almost in the same day, offers of short tours in North Dakota and Iowa, where in each locality she was desired for two weeks.

As the dates were in direct conflict, Miss Beeman accepted the Iowa trip and will leave Chicago on August 3 for a fortnight engagement in that State.

Hebert—Harriet L. V. Hebert, contralto, who makes a specialty of programs in French, in which she is very adept, as proven in a series of studio recitals given by her in Chicago last Winter, is spending the Summer in Helena, Mont., where, in addition to teaching a Summer class, she will make a number of important concert appearances.

VIOLA COLE

The interpretation class organized among pupils of Viola Cole met in the Fine Arts Building for their final program of the season on Friday evening, July 12. Piano numbers were given by both junior and advanced students and a peculiarly interesting feature of the work was that, except for the expected difficulties presented in the senior work, the work of the smaller pupils was just as satisfying as that of their older associates—their numbers contained none of the usual commonplace pieces designed by unworthy composers to meet the supposedly meagre capacity of the child student and tolerated by us as one of the necessary evils accompanying the first stages.

A little 8 year old boy, Harold Rudnick, played a group of six songs from Schumann's album with a quality of musical ability not at all to be associated with the choppy style usually accepted from children.

Janet Miller played a Bach Bourree with emphatically well trained fingers and an understanding of the Bach theme treatment quite out of relation to her years, which number only eleven. Her second piece was a taxing concert etude, which was given in graceful manner.

Moszkowsky's "Serenade" was played very musically by Margaret Garwood, who caught just the right degree of whimsicality of this little piece of sentiment.

The treat of the evening came with Bess Clair Murray's interpretation of Schumann's Fantasie, probably one of the most exacting compositions ever written. As performed here, it was one of the most intelligent and sympathetic examples of piano playing by students. This young musician has command of a splendid grasp of the keyboard and a mature judgment for sensing the niceties of the composer's trend of expression.

One of the most worth while achievements of Viola Cole in her work with students lies in the way in which each retains his individuality, and it is noticeable that, although all of her pupils display the same efficient technic, beautiful tone quality and musical idea of interpretation, no two play the same piece in the same manner.

ETHEL M. RICE

The phenomenal success of the new concert management, the Ballantine-Rice, which has lately been established in Chicago, has attracted especial attention to the personalities of Mrs. Ballantine and Mrs. Rice, and Music News is glad to show today a likeness of the latter with the promise that we will soon show, also, a picture of Mrs. Ballantine.

Ethel M. Rice is a southern woman, petite and thoroughly alive in appearance and manner.

She knows what she wishes to say and she knows how and when to say it. Her great success in management is due not alone to this personal quality, but also, and very emphatically, because of her artistic outlook and experience.

In her public work she makes a specialty of southern folk stories, although she is adept in every line of dramatic art, and not only will she fill engagements in the future, but will also establish a coaching department at the Ballantine-Rice offices, where she will especially prepare pupils for lyceum and chautauqua work.

Mrs. Rice has appeared numerous times in her home city—New Orleans—as also in New York and Washington.

She has been a resident of Chicago for some years and has appeared here before numerous clubs and societies, including the Southern Woman's Club, Allied Drugs Club, Daughters of the Confederacy and the National Ship of States.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK ENGAGED FOR PEORIA AND DAYTON

Two of the many cities to hear Arthur Shattuck, American pianist, for the first time next season are Dayton, Ohio, and Peoria, Ill. In the former city Mr. Shattuck will appear as soloist with one of the orchestras in the symphony course, and in the latter he will play under the auspices of the Amateur Musical Club.

Mr. Shattuck's repeated successes last season, both as soloist with the Chicago and Philadelphia Symphony Orchestras and in recital, established him as one of the elect among the younger pianists, and as an American artist whose rank rests on enduring qualities.

RUSSIAN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The growth in popularity of the Russian Symphony Orchestra has not been an accident, but the direct result of purposeful work toward definite ideal. The conception of this organization was to give the right interpretation to Russian music in order that the American people could understand the length, breadth and depth of the feeling expressed by the music. In order to accomplish this, only one who could feel as the composer felt was fitted to express his meaning. Modest Altschuler did not organize this great body of musicians just to be the leader of an orchestra, but, feeling strongly the heart throbs of a people oppressed by autocracy to such an extent that learning to read was a crime, he wanted to tell the story in that wonderful universal language, music, which is understood by all nations alike and which stirs in the hearts of its hearers the emotions felt by the composer when those emotions are rightly understood by the performer.

Modest Altschuler is a native Russian, born at Mohileff on the Dnieper River. His father, the founder of the first local theater, was a violinist, as was also an older brother; but the instrument chosen for Modest was the cello, and this he began to study at the age of eight years. At eleven he became the pupil of Gobelt at the Conservatory of Warsaw, and at thirteen made his first appearance as soloist with the conservatory orchestra under the leadership of Zarzicky. After graduating with honors at Warsaw Altschuler went to Moscow, where he won a scholarship at the Imperial Conservatory, then under Safonoff's direction. After the formation of the Russian Symphony Orchestra Mr. Altschuler brought his former master, Safonoff, to this country—a beautiful expression of gratitude.

In 1890 Modest Altschuler conducted the first symphony concert given in his home town, which was also his first wielding of the baton. His family trace their ancestry back 500 years to a Bohemian family by that name, which emigrated from Prague to Russia. Musical Prague at that time was divided into two factions, the "old school" (altschule) and the "new school" (neuschule). Thus the name Altschuler comes from the people who allied themselves with the old school of musical composition to interpret the new.

Mr. Altschuler says "only Russians can interpret Russian music." It is a music peculiar to itself, as it is the outgrowth of oppression. Some compensation had to come, and it came through music. So the musicians who form the personnel of the Russian Symphony Orchestra live each piece as it is played. Their temperament is the development of years. To the audience it is not an invitation to listen to what they can hear, but listen and feel what we would have you know. This high ideal, this real mission, this purpose to cause responsive feeling, is the why of the success of this great orchestra. Its scope is growing wider and wider, and now, as before, they carry a traveling orchestra of fifty men, so that they can reach music lovers in all parts of this country and Canada.

Daniel Mayer, under whose management the orchestra now is, says the bookings for the coming season include a tour of considerable distance during the early Autumn until December, when they return to New York City to fulfill engagements. In January they will make a special tour with Elias Breeskin, a remarkable young violinist, as soloist, and in March and April of 1919 they will make another extended tour. After a concert in Washington in 1916 Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the President, who is a great admirer of Mr. Altschuler's work and a personal friend, took him for consultation to the heads of the Education Department, and there Mr. Altschuler propounded the advisability and the outlines of a national conservatory of music, and at Mr. Clayton's request submitted a brief giving in full his ideas of the constitution of such a conservatory. In all things Mr. Altschuler's thought is one of growth, construction, permanency. His orchestrations of American compositions whose themes are based on old negro melodies show how keenly he appreciates the emotional side of music and is able to set it in classical form.

MODEST ALTSCHULER

This is the sixteenth season of the Russian Symphony Orchestra, and the gradual, steady growth gives a feeling of permanent dependability. Its concerts are enjoyed by music lovers from New York to California and from Canada to the Gulf.

It not only gives a message—it leaves a message, because the conductor, Modest Altschuler, says: "Music is not a work; it is a religion."

One of Mr. Altschuler's characteristics as a conductor is his great respect for the melody which, he says, "runs through every piece like a road through a country hillside. The art of conducting is to clear the way for this melody—to see that no other instruments interfere with those which are at the moment enunciating the theme." This makes listening to his orchestra of inestimable value to the music student as well as enjoyment to the layman, for perfected ensemble work is, after all, the perfected solo, and the interpretation is one with the interpreter. To quote the great conductor again: "A man is then privileged to play, not upon instruments of brass or wood, but upon human strings."

The programs of the Russian Symphony Orchestra are not confined to Russian music, but all composers of all nations are treated with the same sincerity and musicianly understanding.

Every locality which has the opportunity to hear one of the concerts will realize for itself a musical growth which will be lasting and most beneficial.

Report of California Music Teachers' Eighth Annual Session, Held at Los Angeles, July 9, 10, 11, 12, 1918

By S. W. MOUNTZ

After much thoughtful study on the question of holding the annual session this year and the financing successfully, in this trying year of extreme demands on the people for the war, and which has hit the musical profession more than any other line, a musical business man came to the rescue and made it possible to launch the enterprise and carry out the eighth annual meeting. The hope of a large attendance this year, on account of high transportation, could not be anticipated from the state membership, so distantly separated, hence local responsibility was involved. Mr. L. E. Behmyer, our city and Pacific Coast impresario and artist manager, donated star artists of his supply, who are now here, in giving a varied program of great excellence at an average admission fee of $1—worth two or three times that rate—to finance the convention and the surplusage for a benefit. This drew a good capacity audience of several thousand. The artists were: Leopold Godowsky, pianist; Loisa Patterson Wessitsh, soprano; Gregor Cherniavsky, violinist; Arthur Farwell, "community music"; Zoellner Quartet, chamber music: Antoinette Zoellner, violin, Amandus Zoellner, violin, Joseph Zoellner, Sr., viola, Robert Alter, cello. Blanche Hennion Robinson and Margaret Hughes, accompanists.

Addresses of Welcome by Mrs. Norton Jamison, President of Local Music Teachers' Association, and Manager L. E. Behymer, in hearty welcome to guests, citizens and music supporters.

Address—Community Music
Arthur Farwell

It is needless to comment on the artistry of such renowned artists—Godowsky gets an ovation; the Zoellners recalled; Cherniavsky (a "brother" to the famous trio of the same name) entranced his auditors by his witchery in art, and as an encore gave Schubert's "Ave Maria." Mme. Wessitsh, in her operatic and other selections, made an attractive appearance and gave several encores to frequent recalls. The accompaniments of Margaret Hughes and Mrs. Robinson were on a par with the great artists they supplemented in the dual expression. Mr. Farwell came at the end of a prolonged program and from a rehearsal of a community chorus somewhat distant, and had the disadvantage of an interested audience, but spoke enthusiastically on the general dissemination of community singing for universal democracy. The troublesome feature of the public event—the expense account—was solved and well promoted to the entire citizenship.

A musical event of much value was a reception given by the Los Angeles Musicians' Club to the guests and teachers of the state and city. The program was a "manuscript" list of the members of the club exclusively. There was grade of merit that bespeaks that America is coming forward. The artists were chosen as possessing ability to demonstrate the author's idea. Mrs. Hope, in the Webster piano suite, was well chosen and met with credit to author and demonstrator. Mr. G. Hayden Jones, in the Cadman group, was much enjoyed. Hague Kinsey, with the interpretation of Miss Petre, sang telling songs. The string selections from Diggle, Mason and Pemberton were all gems and a splendid contribution to the listening world. All America needs is a chance to be heard. What a fine opportunity is now before us.

The program:

The convention program opened Tuesday morning at the Gamut Club auditorium, a fair number of the local membership and the guests of San Francisco, Sacramento, Oakland, San Diego, Fresno and a dozen other more or less important towns in the state were in attendance. Mme. Abbie Norton Jamison, the local president, in an opening address of optimistic spirit gave the living yeast to the whole lump.

The happy introductions proved adeptness in the chairman's duty. Mr. Bernard McFie, vice president of the Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. L. E. Behymer, president of the Gamut Club, and Albert E. Conant, president of the State Music Teachers' Association, were introduced and made brief, but to the point, fitting addresses, succeeding the sprited singing of "America," led by Mr. Cogswell. With their solicitous words, the program of education and artistry moved on.

Address—Shall California Be the Mecca of the Future Music Student?
Mrs. Soña Newland Neustadt of Oakland

Miss Dillon was present, but resigned her piano works to the artistry of Mrs. Hope, a rapidly growing virtuoso. Miss Wenzel gave a fine rendition in those characteristic idyls of scale and harmony of the Oriental color, as expressed by Mme. Ross, our local writer of music. Mr. Grunn came with the Indian color, and by contrast, or comparison, shed some of the characteristic coincidences of the peculiar emotional nature of each and the other. The half hour lecture of Mrs. Neustadt was very suggestive for future possibilities and very highly favorable to this coast, due to climatic conditions, to be the music "mecca" for our wonderful U. S. A. The paper was so interesting it was reread at a later session of the convention and commended.

Tuesday, July 9, 2 P. M., First Congregational Church

Organ recital by Gerard Taillandier of Oakland, W. F. Skeele and Clarence Albert Tufts, assisted by Mrs. Virgilie Moore Mattoon:

Prelude in G minor ..... Pierne

Mrs. Mattoon
Choeur in G minor ..... Hollins
Melodie in E ..... Rachmaninoff
Serenade ..... Lemare
Scotch Poem ..... MacDowell
Scherzo ..... Hoyte
March Russe ..... Schminke
Mr. Skeele

The organ artists, on a fine instrument, really entertained, but the singing of Mrs. Mattoon charmed with her rich mellow quality, especially so in the MacDermid composition, and she was compelled to give an encore. The Cadman songs called for more color temperament and intensity of tone and the mystic tones, but the voice gave much pleasure to all. With proper training great promise awaits Mrs. Mattoon.

(The opera was given with great success, March 23, 1918, at the Metropolitan Opera House)

At 6:15 p. m. a dinner was given by the Gamut Club in the club auditorium in honor of visiting musicians, and an invitation was extended to members of the M. T. A.

The table discussions were most helpful on how to teach the young. These skilled specialists of different methods shed much light on the methods of approach with all kinds of mentality and musical genius. Mrs. Cambell from Pasadena gave a good talk. There was much uniformity in the idea that "thought and feeling" of the pupil must be aroused. Miss Crane, interested in all—organization, concentration, unity and purpose—will reach the goal and develop a musical people by slow stages of growth.

Mrs. Porterfield's singing was much enjoyed. Her verbal mention was helpful, and particularly in those songs of foreign texts.

Miss Ethel Vernice Widener of San Diego gave exquisite accompaniment to her foreign and American compositions.

Mr. Plowe, the veritable flute artist that he is, in the Scotch Pastoral was heartily received. The singing quality and the piano work of Miss Wall added greatly to the beauty of the selection.

Miss Frazee put over her songs in good style, particularly the Grieg group.

Mr. Cady's paper sugested much work needed to make the relationship more favorable for the growth of the child. He gave no definite remedy, but thought much was valueless that is attempted.

Mrs. Sweezy advocated methods, devices, outlines and efforts that will make possible the advent of better conditions for the growth of the rising generations to hope for rich return for the work done and bring about more favorable conditions.

The Tabloid renditions of Cadman's "Shanewis," by himself, at the piano, and Mrs. Lynde, as delineator, were unique, entertaining and instructive. Such preludes to an operatic representation would add much to the appreciation of the Indian-American opera.

The dinner was a double treat—the feast from the Gamut host and the musical program by the convention. The viands of the first were delicious. The programs were the delectables. The body and the mind abundantly supplied. You see by the following program. The first was not a la carte. Two hundred or more sat down to the feast, and at the close a large list of guests were introduced by President Behymer to the club of men and their lady guests of the convention. Mr. George Kruger, of the San Francisco Association; Mrs. Dreyfus, president of the Domimant Club; our own Mrs. Jamison; Mr. Conant of San Diego; Mr. and Mrs. Pease, of Sacramento; Sir Henry Heyman, San Francisco; our Charles Lummis; Cadman; Grunn; Hugo Kirkhoffer, community song director; Mr. William Chamberlain, of Alameda; Mrs. Florine A. Winzel, of Sacramento; Bessie Beatty, newspaper woman of fame, and many more worthy of knowing if space were abundant to mention them. Then all repaired to the auditorium theater of the club to hear the following excellent program:

Wednesday, July 10, 1918, 8:30 P. M. Gamut Club Theater

Musical by Olga Steeb, pianist; Mme. Loisa Patterson Wessitsh, soprano; Mme. Anna Ruzena Sprotte, contralto; Mr. Giuseppe Jollain, San Francisco, violinist; Mr. Amon Dorsey Cain of New York, baritone.

Floral Dance ..... Moss
Mr. Cain
Song of the Robin-woman, from Shanewis ..... Cadman
Mother, Dear Mother ..... B. Treharne
Your Kiss ..... Fay Foster
Mme. Sprotte

Mme. Sprotte was artistically effective in the Ross group of desert songs, as well as in the Cadman, Treharne and Foster selections.

Mr. Jollain has a lovely violin tone, and with Mr. Kruger's piano artistry and musicianship the work had a splendid rendition.

Mr. Cain, a newcomer to Los Angeles, proved his artistic interpretation, the first in French. The Moss declamatory song was well delivered and enjoyed.

Mme. Wessitsh sustained her popular favor of the opening concert and was obliged to give an encore. The audience broke in vociferous applause on the entrance of our ever popular pianist, Miss Olga Steeb. Her group was virtuosic to the limit of excellence. She played a Chopin nocturne for encore.

MANDY SCHOOL OF MUSIC

On Friday evening, June 28, the Lyon & Healy Recital Hall was filled with an appreciative audience for the recital given by pupils of the Mandy School of Music. It is impossible to give in detail the work of each one apearing on the program, but they all did exceedingly well.

It was a beautifully built and well-chosen program, the piano numbers alternating with the violin. The concertos were played with a great deal of dash and assurance, having the artistic and wonderful support of Mrs. Mandy at the second piano. She also played accompaniments for the violin numbers.

To take the program as a whole, I should say the work on the piano was decidedly superior to that of the vast majority. Oliver Burnett, La Vera Nelson and Blenda Sterner deserve special mention, with Virginia Shawhan and Olga Mattas closely following. The violin work was also above the average of students' recitals, and particularly so was that of Anna Takach in the Spanish Dance and Maurice Hibler, who played some Variations, each displaying an unusual amount of technical skill as well as dash and brilliance.

The ensemble class, under the direction of Mr. Mandy, did some very good work.

Louise O. Ford and Bertha W. Hall, pupils of John Loring Cook, each sang a group of songs and were thoroughly enjoyed.

The program follows:

Morning Mood (Peer Gynt Suite) ..... Grieg
Dorothy Sorensen
Cantabile et Bolero ..... Danbe
Charles Hoffman
Spring ..... Carreno
Ethel Gahlbeck
Souvenir de Lubeck ..... Riecken
Chester Sobierajski
Serenade ..... Drigo-Auer

WORLD'S GREATEST WEEK OF AMERICAN MUSIC

OPENS AT LOCKPORT, N. Y., SEPTEMBER 2 AND CONTINUES FOR SEVEN DAYS—SEVENTY GIFTED AMERICAN ARTISTS, NOTED SPEAKERS AND SPLENDID MUSICAL ORGANIZATIONS APPEARING—THE FAMOUS APOLLO QUARTET A FEATURE OF EACH SESSION OF THE FESTIVAL—140 AMERICAN COMPOSERS REPRESENTED ON THE WEEK'S PROGRAM — MOST OF THESE WILL ATTEND THE FESTIVAL.

The stage is set and a wonderful performance is anticipated for the National American Music Festival. If you do not already know the fact, it is perhaps the most important gathering of American artists and composers held in America.

It is the world's greatest week of American music, a wonderful week. From every corner of this land artists, composers, speakers and music lovers are coming to join in this American gathering.

Opportunity is the dominant note of the whole festival — opportunity to meet and fraternize with other musicians, other teachers; to see, to hear, to improve oneself; to have a wonderful vacation.

This great national festival works for the future development of our countrymen as composers, performers, critics and listeners. It offers abundant opportunities for performance, comparison, criticism; and in the nature of events the competition, to say nothing of the artistic conscience of the artists, helps to eliminate the poor work and develop the good.

This great American festival is a "tryout ground" for both artists and composers. Everything deserving trial has here the opportunity. Only the good survives.

The festival this season opens on Labor Day, September 2, and continues with three sessions a day for seven days, closing on Sunday night, September 8, with a big patriotic concert. The announcement made some time ago in this paper offers a splendid array of talent. Many artists of world fame are announced, together with well-known speakers and choral and instrumental organizations.

It is held in the spacious Thurston Auditorium, where the acoustics are said to be remarkably good and which has a seating capacity of 3,500. The platform, raised six feet off the floor and built up in tiers, is located directly in front of the center seats and is plenty large enough to seat, without crowding, a chorus of 300 voices. An extra platform directly in front and continuing out is used by the artists and speakers.

One of the features of this great festival, and one that plays no small part in its success, is the manner in which the entertainment of guests is provided; for while the spacious Kenmore Hotel offers every convenience for guests able to pay for the demand, the Festival Committee has arranged with the ladies of St. Peter's Church to conduct, as usual, an artists' dining room, which insures the best of home cooking and at the modest fee of $9 for the week. Splendid rooms in private homes near the Auditorium are offered to guests at $6 for the week, making a total of $15 for both room and board.

The artists' dining room has been declared one of the bright spots of the festival. Those who love good-fellowship, sociability and harmonious fraternization think highly of this form of "get-together."

Crystallized, the object of the National American Music Festival is this:

"To bring together American musicians, critics, managers, composers and educators in order that the managers may hear the composers' works and use them; the composers may become personally acquainted with the artists and learn their needs, possibilities and limitations, and that a general feeling of camaraderie may be established between them all that shall be as leaven to the loaf."

NERVOUS MUSICIANS

In these days of marvelous invention in a material way, it is not surprising to learn of important discoveries in the domain of psychic research. Such a discovery is psychoanalysis, developed by celebrated nerve specialists. Daniel Bonus, psychoanalyst of Decatur, Ill., is giving special attention to nervous problems of musicians, with the result that he is being consulted by people from many parts of the country. Psychoanalysis is the logical treatment for those persons of good physique with no serious organic defect who suffer from stage-fright, worry, depression, irritability, forgetfulness, slips of tongue and pen, headaches, neuralgia or other mysterious disorders so common to musicians. It is in the removal of such impediments by a psychological process that Mr. Bonus is having unusual success.

Music in New York

No Recess for Music

Of all the countries at war none is so active in music as our own. This summer New York gives concerts in the parks; the Stadium (City College) proceeds with its musical entertainments, many soloists participating; the Jersey coast, the Long Island resorts, the Maine shores—all make music the attraction.

Charity performances are being given constantly. Ocean Grove on the New Jersey coast has thrown its summer doors open and a throng at the great auditorium listened to the first summer concert on the evening of July 18, when Liliane Ginoris, soprano; Pompilio Malatesta, basso of the Metropolitan Opera; Quintano, violinist, and Francis Rogers, accompanist, appeared.

On July 27 Enrico Caruso appears in recital with Carolina White in the same place. July, perhaps, will bring more Ocean Grove concerts, but definite musical announcements of future appearances at this summer resort are: John McCormack, August 19, and Galli-Curci, September 2. The season of 1918-19 promises to be a fertile one, and all indications point to an early opening.

Permanent Theater for Light and Comic Opera Assured by the Commonwealth Opera Association.

The success of the movement of the Commonwealth Opera Association to provide light and comic opera at cost of production is assured by the executive manager, A. H. Byrd. The staff of the new enterprise met at Aeolian Hall on July 18, and the announcement was made public that the sum of $20,000 had been subscribed and that a permanent theater had been offered for the movement.

John Philip Sousa is president of the association, Raymond Hitchcock is treasurer, and the following artists are closely interested in this new enterprise: Mmes. Eleonora De Cisneros and Anna Fitziu, and Messrs. Ricardo Martin and De Wolf Hopper. This is the second organization to be founded—after the American Society of Singers.

Leone Zinovieff Engaged by the San Carlo Opera Company

Fortune Gallo, the valiant impresario of the San Carlo Opera Company, makes an early announcement of his opera season, and despite everything he will be first in the field, inaugurating his 1918-19 season earlier than last year. The Forty-fourth Street Theater, owned by the Shuberts, has been rented, and in the last week of August Mr. Gallo will commence his four-week New York run.

Although no announcements of new forces are at hand, we are in position to know that Leone Zinovieff, who made three successful appearances with the Chicago Opera Company last year, has been engaged for six extraordinary performances. And thus Mr. Gallo's company will be enabled to produce results as good as those of the Metropolitan Opera House.

Louise Darclee, who is now en tour with Impresario Braccale through Central Latin America, will again join the Gallo forces, and Stella Demette will also appear in conspicuous roles.

Owing to Maestro Peroni's call to the colors with the American forces a new leader will be at the baton—perhaps Maestro Guerrieri.

The Stadium Concert

The popular concerts continue to attract large audiences. Through the guarantee of Mr. Lewinsohn, a music patron, the prolongation of the summer entertainments is assured. The weather, which is retarding old friend Summer, played an important part with the attendance. The program for the week ending July 21, with soloists, was most enjoyable. Arnold Volpe is conducting the orchestra nightly.

The Rialto

The week ending July 21 Mr. Riesenfeld conducted the orchestra in a rendition of Litolff's overture "Robespierre," presumably in honor of Bastille Day. Count Lorrie Grimaldi, basso, sang an aria from "Robert the Devil" (Meyerbeer). Lucy Lee Call, soprano, was under nervous strain and, besides, she sang off-pitch, thus marring the effect of her small but excellent lyric voice. She gave the aria "Give Me Back My Hope," from "I Puritani" (Bellini). The orchestra played some fragments from musical comedy, and Mr. Depew, organist, rendered "Marche aux Flambeaux" (F. Scotson Clark).

Musical America Eulogizes Hearst

That Eastern musical magazine which stands by American artists and American art (sic!) and which deemed it unnecessary to attend a genuine American festival at Lockport, N. Y., eulogizes in its issue of July 5 William Randolph Hearst, owner of a chain of papers, because the California millionaire offers a $5,000 price for the best American patriotic song. Like Geraldine Farrar, who refused to stand up when our anthem was played and who is trying now to regain the graces of our 100 per cent Americans, William Randolph Hearst is attempting to regain the sympathy of full-blooded Americans.

Fernando Carpi Returns from Caracas

The brilliant tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company has just returned from a successful tour through Latin America. He will tour with the Chicago Opera Company next fall with Galli-Curci and Stracciari, when "The Barber of Seville" is to be sung by the Western company. At present he is reposing in Spring Lake, N. J.

Donalda and Mischa Leon Married in Paris

The correspondent has received an announcement from Paris that Pauline Donalda, formerly of the Manhattan Opera Company, and Mischa Leon, tenor, for some time a resident of Minneapolis, were married in June in the French capital. Congratulations.

The harmony discussion was most interting. Miss Alchyn could not be pres-t. Mrs. Gertrude Ross and other local mposers made contributions to this phase music. The question was, shall we fol-w the basis laid down fifty or more years o by the classic school, or follow the clodists or the "queue" of the "whole ne" (step) scale modernist, or the so-lled "erratic despoilers of music"?

Miss Cave demonstrated great technical astery and interpretative resources in her t of ten well chosen masterpieces. In en-re she gave Grainger's "Shepherds, Hey!" The singing of Mme. Calleau was the at-active event of the morning. Her sweet nes and delectable French diction were a light to those who understand the text. er English was equally satisfactory, and r mannerisms were the inspiration of the ntiment. Her light lyric voice was pure d in florid passages most exquisite in tistry.

A group of violin solos left over in for-r program, due to a broken string, was w given, Mr. Kruger at the piano, giving ach pleasure to all.

The voice discussion, like the harmony, ew out many valuable suggestions from gers of large experience in opera, con-rt and teaching. All were uniform in e idea of release and freedom of tone. Participants were Mr. Pease of Sacramento, Mme. Sprotte, Mr. Babcock, Miss Goetz and Mr. Cogswell.

Mr. Behymer being ill, Mr. Leroy W. Allen of Camp Kearny, director of singing, gave an interesting talk and rehearsal on camp songs, leading with a cornet, in which the audience participated with great patriotic gusto. This was continued until Miss Peycke vocally read or sang, in her unique delivery verse-story, in monologue, with piano settings of charm and expressive foundation for the sentiment.

Mr. Poulin's singing in French (his native tongue) their great aria, the "Marseillaise," was heard, the audience standing and giving hearty response. Mrs. Robinson at the piano.

Great interest was aroused in the new "Sonata Heroique," by our local composer and pianist teacher, Mr. Alfred Appling Butler. We were happily surprised at the strength and expressiveness of the composition. It is near 30 minutes in duration. He is to be congratulated on his work as a composer and the approval of his fellow musicians in the same field.

The gem of serious composition, Stevenson's "Invocation to the Dawn," with the highly artistic rendering of Mrs. Dreyfus, and cello obligato by Mr. Simonsen, was perfect.

The program was noticeable for its presentation of American composers, and suffered none from its general use.

The "trio" was omitted in the absence of some player. It was filled by Mr. William Edwin Chamberlain of Alameda, Cal. Mr. MacManus at the piano, who is a baritone of fine quality and giving bass aria from Handel's "Semele" and Korbay's "Had a Horse" and encore.

The artists presenting the "Marteau Prize" outdid their former performances, making a great treat for musical guests and those not having ever heard it.

The Webster Quintet was a great musical surprise in its wonderful development. This was its premiere performance and the pleasure of his fellow artists must have been very encouraging to him.

The Friday sessions were of a business and organization nature, held at the Exposition grounds. The entire day was spent here with luncheon and dinner services, where much good work was performed for the state and auxiliary local organizations supporting the music teachers' interests, anxiously awaiting the pageant hour.

Community song rang out clear after darkness had made it difficult to see the conductor or the band musicians.

Mrs. E. M. Bartlett is entitled to the honors of providing with her corps of helpers a program that was full of interest, entertainment and educational as well. So closed the eighth annual, all in all the most delightful, with less disappointments than ever known. Mrs. Jamison and her helpers are to be congratulated on the success of it, coming on an off year under very embarrassing conditions.

ELGIN, ILL.

Elgin musical leaders are bending their efforts toward the development of community singing and community interest in better music.

As a stepping stone in this direction, Franklin C. Sorn and Harry H. Hintz, who have brought the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra to Elgin for concerts this spring and last, have outlined more comprehensive plans for a festival next spring.

Emil Oberhoffer, conductor of the Minneapolis orchestra, was delighted with the plan announced, of having a chorus of 1,200 older school pupils formed to sing to orchestral accompaniment at one of the two concerts planned for the 1919 festival day.

Mrs. Grace Wheelock, who is co-operating with Messrs. Sorn and Hintz in their festival plans, will prepare the pupils for their participation in the concert, and Mr. Oberhoffer generously has offered to arrange orchestrations for the choruses selected, in case they are not already in the orchestra library.

The growing interest in the symphony music is indicated by the fact that this year, despite war handicaps, the attendance was increased by about 50 per cent. The number who indicated their desire to have the orchestra returned next year was twice that of the first year.

Community Singing

Several months ago Elgin had her first community sing at the high school auditorium. As a "starter" it proved successful and led to further plans along the same line.

Tuesday evening, July 16, Elgin held its second "sing" in connection with a great "citizenship festival" held in honor of the youths who this year attained their majority and registered for war service.

The music for this affair was under direction of Franklin C. Sorn, an experienced choir leader. With a crowd of 5,000 and a band of forty pieces as accompaniment, the singing of patriotic songs took on a noble ensemble that augurs well for future efforts of this sort. The band, under leadership of Prof. Thomas Egbert Perkins, furnished an excellent concert that rounded out the celebration, which was held at Lord's park.

Another affair of this sort came a week after the citizenship festival, when Prof. H. L. Tomlins of Chicago came to Elgin to direct a chorus of 500 school children in a community sing at Lord's park. Prof. Tomlins' ability as a chorus leader figured greatly in the success of this undertaking.

Elgin is particularly fortunate in having a natural amphitheater for community concerts in Lord's park. The park has a lagoon with a small island in the middle, which is an ideal place for the band or singers. Around the lagoon the hills slope gradually upward on all sides, and just beyond are surrounding roads that give place for hundreds of automobiles. No more suitable place could be found anywhere for an open air sing. F. C. S.

CRYSTALLIZED MUSIC

In the old fairy tale, the ill-treated stepdaughter was rewarded for her love and unselfishness by having her words turn into gold as they fell from her lips. In the modern sense, Charles W. Clark has accomplished a like result, but he has the added pleasure of bestowing his crystallized notes on the helpless orphans of France.

LOS ANGELES

The closing concert of the season of the Woman's Lyric Club was received with much interest. They had the usual selections of hems for four-part singing and with the harmonious blending of many highly cultivated, locally developed singers the finest artistic results were attained. Lighter's "After" and The Deep River" melody harmonized. ecker's "Song of the Winds," with delightful lo by Mrs. Norman Robinson, contralto, was ffective. Hahn's "If My Songs with Airy inions" was a favorite and required a repeion. Woodman's "Night of a Thousand yes," "Fair Daffodils," Frederick Stevenson's Viennese Serenade" happily led up to the emberg "Death of Joan of Arc."

Mrs. Bessie L. Howell, in the soprano, was ell supported by the large chorus under the illful baton of Director Poulin. The organ as most effective by Mrs. Chick; violin, Miss ecker; cello, Mrs. Naujoks, with Mrs. Robson at the piano, adding color to the enmble.

Mr. John Smallman, a baritone of fine voice, ng a group of well chosen songs and another ith chorus and orchestra. Mr. Smallman, om Boston, is a late arrival and will reside re.

Mr. Earl M. Bright, cellist, presented Mr. lme Beck in a violoncello recital, in Conrtos from Rubinstein, Neruda, Cui and opper. This young man possesses superior nius and will be in demand.

The closing of the Orpheus season was ry satisfactory, considering the great inads, taking fully one-third of its members the colors. A respectable balance remained d the club will try to renew the loss and ep up the work. The list contained a numr of a patriotic character, which met with vor. The "Kaiser Bill, Good Night," by L. Selby, was a hit from the beginning and as encored. Cadman's "Love, Like Dawn, me Stealing" was a success. Leoni's Brownies," Tosti's "Serenata" and G. A. Morner's "The Rosebush" were charmers. The Orpheus Four" (male quartet) were the spel auxiliary attraction. This combination has ent the past year at all the camp cantonments and is exceedingly popular. They were recalled many times. The director, Mr. J. P. Dupuy, who trained the boys, in the absence of one of the tenors, supplied well the vacancy.

The Welsh Choral Society of forty voices gave a concert for war sufferers. Good ringing choruses, with Mr. G. Isaac as director. Mr. Dana Bartlette, cellist, gave several solos, with Mrs. Bartlette at the piano. Mrs. Norina Coleman, a very promising soprano, gave a group from Rogers, Beethoven and Woodman. Mr. G. Haydn Jones, tenor, sang most effectively a Treharne number and the Hatten "Revenge," and had to respond with an encore.

Mr. Vernon Spencer presented a large class of pupils from his school and his able assistant teachers. In a second recital two artist pupils appeared, Mrs. Halbert Thomas, in a dozen choice piano selections from Chopin, MacDowell, Bollinger, Debussy, Raff, Liszt and Saint-Saens. Her playing was marked by a good technic and fine interpretation. The alternate on the program was the artist pupil of Mrs. Emma Porter Mackinson, a youthful soprano, Miss Ruth Hutchinson, who manifested a beauty of tone, breath control and diction to place her in the best rank of artists. Her program included ten fine songs. Among them were: "Aira Louise," by Charpentier, and "Jubel's Lyre," by Handel; also his "Come, My Beloved," and "Magdalena at Michael's Gate," "Madame Butterfly" aria, and several encores on urgent recall. Much promise for renown is in store for Miss Hutchinson.

One of the most attractive and art expressions is the great pageant play, the "Light of Asia," by Sir Edwin Arnold, which portrays the philosophy and teachings of the theosophic or Buddhistic concept of the spiritual life. The play is staged at the hillside home at Krotona, the theosophs' center on the Pacific coast, a very charming locality. Mr. Walter Hamden is in the role of the Prince, The Buddha, and it is carried in the most effective dramatic way. The terraced lawn is wide and deep, in the open air, with trees, foliage and oriental settings. There is an extensive line of assistants of all classes, fine electric appliances and oriental costume. The spiritual teaching is most interestedly unfolded to the conclusion. The calm of the canyon and starry heavens makes it most realistic. Mr. Cadman assisted in the adaptation of the music for the oriental instruments, and it is quite a feature, as well as the quaint songs employed for solo and ensemble vocal expression. It will continue through July and is attracting great interest and crowds. It is the miracle drama, the "Oberammergau" and the "Mission" play all in one.

Loudon—The setting of piano accompaniment for "In Flanders Fields," which has been made by Jennette Loudon, and which she calls "A Spoken Song," has been issued in very attractive form by the Willis Music Company of Cincinnati and will undoubtedly have a big sale. This has been heard in Chicago several times, while yet in manuscript, and has created a profound impression.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Opinions of the Press on Emma Roberts

In the first place Miss Roberts has a voice of extraordinary richness and power. In the second place she has a technic of the first order. Her tones are perfectly free from the top of her scale to the bottom and she has so perfected the dynamic treatment of them that she sings from a full forte to a pianissimo with exquisite gradation and smoothness. Without entering into further details it can be said that Miss Roberts has one of the few great voices that have come before the public in recent years, and that she uses it with the finished beauty of the genuine old Italian school.—New York Sun (W. J. Henderson).

Her voice is a real contralto of very considerable power and of a flexibility rather uncommon in such voices. Miss Roberts sings with much intelligence and taste, with a gift for interpretation, for conveying the essential significance of her songs, for differentiating their moods and emotional expressiveness. She is, in other words, artistically gifted as a singer and has cultivated her gifts to excellent issues.—New York Times (Richard Aldrich).

Throughout the program Miss Roberts' performance showed an alert intelligence, a skill often very fine indeed in phrasing, a pronunciation in English of the vowel sounds that cannot be lauded too highly, an unusual sense of the design of a song as a whole, and great assurance, yes "punch," in delivering its and her message. Miss Roberts' singing displays beyond question some uncommon technical merits, conspicuously the roundness and ease of the production and a flexibility recalling the palmy days of Italian song, as well as a generous endowment of voice.—New York Evening Globe (Pitts Sanborn).

She has a fine voice of generous compass, brilliant rather than sensuous in timbre. Admirably suited to songs of a dramatic nature, songs that make an immediate and frank appeal to the emotions, still Miss Roberts is not deficient in sense of humor or limited in the art of coloring tone effectively.—Boston Herald (Philip Hale).

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder at the Missouri Convention

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder's presentation of the immensely difficult Scarlatti Gigue prepared her hearers for her yet more ambitiously designed offering of the two of Rhene-Baton's works, "The Deserted Sands" and "The Spinning Girls of Carantec." Her unquestioned tour de force was Saint-Saens' Study in the Form of a Valse, in which the limpidity and clarity of her playing, as well as its tremendous speed, were the outstanding features. Her most novel offering consisted of Thorwald Otterstrom's transcription of five tribal songs as sung at their ceremonials by Chippewa Indians.

Two Medicine Man songs, "The Dog Feast," "A Love Song," and "The Storm" were the component selections. From which the listeners gleaned that even in savage bosoms there are longings, yearning, strivings, which said savage breasts comprehend not.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, who does not eschew the abstruse, introduced sundry novelties by the Russian, Vladimir Ivanovich Rebikov, who was born in the somewhat distant settlement of Krasnojarsk in Siberia, the late Czar Nicholas' celebrated penal colony, and has since come into Eastern European notice with his Dance of the Daughter of Satan. Other Russians represented in the pianist's bizarre group were Mily Alexejevitch Balakirew, by a Cradle Song, and Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff by his Polichinelle.

In conclusion, Mme. Sturkow-Ryder improvised a duo version of "The Star Spangled Banner," for violin and piano, which she and Miss Neill played, while the audience heartily joined in splendid refrain.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Springfield, Ill.

Despite the rainy evening an appreciative gathering of music lovers enjoyed the recital given by the pupils of the Tiffany School of Music at Christ Church Parish House last night.

The recital was the first of a series to be presented by the young people who have been studying piano with Mrs. Mary Berdan Tiffany and voice with Miss Rena Lazelle.

So well arranged was the program and so delightful the numbers that the event was a real musical treat. All of those appearing on the program acquitted themselves with credit both for themselves and the very excellent instruction which has been given them. Many of the numbers were professional in execution and brilliance and all were given with smoothness and music loving interpretation.

The work of Miss Agnes Lloyd, who has appeared before a number of Springfield audiences, is most interesting. Miss Lloyd plays exquisitely, with great feeling and talent, and shows promise of a glowing career.

The song cycle for two sopranos was exquisite. Miss Olive Monroe and Miss Marie Schevers sang these numbers in solo and duet rendition, and both young ladies were in beautiful voice.

There was only one boy on the program, a very promising young pianist, George Ditz Anson. He deserves a great deal of credit for his performance.—Illinois State Journal.

A Dramatic Critic on a Lark

The Metropolitan-Ravinia Company, to employ one of Mr. Donaghey's insidious hyphens, essayed on Sunday night its annual joy ride into the melodious roughhouse of "The Barber of Seville."

This frolicsome horseplay permits the amiable esthete of grand opera to unbend, and to revel, childlike, in such artistic lather as the classic tonsor may see fit to spread about.

It is an efficacious antidote to the tragic bolus which usually, in the language of the barracks hard by Ravinia, composes the "mess" of those who love music when it is sung and acted.

It is the prank, the lark, the White City, the Barnum & Bailey, the Charles Chaplin of the lyric cognoscenti; and, gosh, how they dread it! Music by Rossini, book by Sid Smith. With Frank Tinney as comedian, Miss Mabel Garrison as prima donna, a coupla bare legged dancers and a slap-stick, "The Barber of Seville" might make grand opera an investment, instead of a philanthropy.

Pinch hitting for a music critic stricken with brain-fag, one must hot-foot to one's adjectives descriptive of song and the singing thereof. This writer in so doing assumes the arduous gait of the soldiers and sailors who, preceding the opera on Sunday, engaged in sack and potato races. To his customary waddle a limp is added and he hops about desperately, grasping for words instead of spuds.

What would Mr. Donaghey say in the circumstances? Would he say that Miss Mabel Garrison was a somebody of the Metropolitan, and that ... was a good reason for attending? ### A Pitfall for an Alien Singer

A curious plea is put forth by Margarete Ober, the rman singer who is suing the Metropolitan Opera mpany for damages because of her dismissal. She s for exemption from questioning on the ground t her defective knowledge of English might lead to say things which would result in her intern- nt. It is difficult to understand why she should fear if she has nothing to conceal. However badly she y express herself in another language than her e, she should be able to convince an impar- court of her innocence unless she is really liable the charge of being a dangerous alien enemy. if she prefers to speak German it would be quite y for the court, in person or by proxy, to under- nd her. We have no desire to prejudice Mme. er's case, but her attitude in the past, like that certain other German singers in this country, has n extremely dubious, to say the least. Is her r of internment stimulated by a suspicion that deserves it?—Philadelphia Inquirer.

French Band at Chautauqua

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., July 17.—The Musique litaire Francaise, which in plain American is the nch Military Band, and one of the greatest bands r heard in America, and said to be the equal of band in the world, is to give eight concerts on Chautauqua platform during Music Week, July to Aug. 3. The appearance of the French Mili- y Band at Chautauqua is its only one in this part the country. In the great cities of the United tes the band has been limited to one or two per- mances, but visitors to Chautauqua during Music ek will have the unequalled opportunity of not y hearing the famous band, but in becoming thor- ghly acquainted with its extraordinary mission of piration and patriotism.

The band, which is composed entirely of selected nch musicians who have fought through many ttles of the great war, comes to America by the hority of the French government. At first the ention was to give concerts only at the military nps throughout the country, but in addition to this certs have been given in many large cities, in- ding appearances in Symphony Hall, Boston, and rnegie Hall, New York, where the playing of the nd aroused tremendous enthusiasm.

The members of the band have all been soldiers the great war, which is inspiring itself; they ap- r in their uniforms of horizon blue; but they are ve all a company of musicians chosen with great e to represent the musical intelligence and re- ement of a nation proud of its arts. That nearly of these men have been decorated for bravery in ttle, and many of them wounded in action is not y a proof of the valor and patriotism of the men of ance, but the unequalled devotion of the mu- ans of France in her great need.

Capt. Gabriel Pares, the conductor, is well known musical circles in America, for he conducted the famous "Garde Republicaine" band at the St. Louis and San Francisco expositions. His official title is "Chef de Musique de Premiere Classe." M. Roger Villate, a pupil of M. Fares, concertmaster of the organization, was formerly conductor of the Twenty-eighth Regiment Infantry, and fought through the battles of Guice, the Marne, Rheims, and Berry-au-lac. M. Leon Leroy, the virtuoso clarinet of the band, has been solo clarinet for the "Garde Republicaine," the New York Symphony and Philharmonic orchestras, professor at the Institute of Musical Art, New York, and a member of the jury of the Paris Conservatory. M. Georges Mager, cornet and trumpet, has been at the front since the war started. He was taken prisoner and exchanged in July, 1915. He has served in Serbia and Salonica. All the others of the sixty-eight members of the organization have brilliant military as well as musical records.

Throughout the week the French band will be assisted by the Chautauqua Choir and other musical organizations. Tuesday evening, July 30, the choir, reinforced by the Jamestown Choral Society and the orchestra augmented by members of the French band, with Mr. Henry B. Vincent at the organ, and Mr. Alfred Hallam conducting, will give very appropriately the remarkable musical production, "Joan of Arc." Wednesday afternoon, July 31, is the Children's patriotic song festival with the French Military band. On the final day of the program the band will give concerts both in the afternoon and the evening.

Chautauqua has always been favored during Music Week by having a leading orchestral organization in the feature. The Victor Herbert Orchestra, the Russian Symphony Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra, all have appeared at Chautauqua; but in popularity, because of its heroic appeal, the French Military band promises to exceed them all.—Jamestown Morning Post.

Musical Club Aims

In reading the closing statements of a number of the ladies' musical clubs during the past month the reader begins to wonder what the aims of these organizations are and just in whose interests are they enlisted. It would be interesting reading to see how much money is expended for outside artists and how much for the encouragement and support of resident soloists. Also a summarized statement of the average musical function of one of our societies, would it not read something like this:

|---|---|
| Hall rent | $ 7.50 |
| Extra Chairs | 2.50 |
| Flowers | 5.00 |
| Tea and luncheon | 15.00 |
| Piano cartage | 4.00 |
| Postage | 3.00 |
| Soloist—Good advertisement (?) | ----- |
| | $37.00 |

These figures might vary, according to location, for the incidentals of the affair but the honorarium of the soloist remains fixed at nil and, mind you, he or she is the important functionary of the occasion. The writer recognizes this is no easy matter to adjust, but it is unfair to the "star" of the occasion, be it big or little, just the same.

The writer is convinced there are few clubs that cannot afford to pay for the musical services of their soloists. The financial statements generally reveal quite large balances in the treasury with Liberty Loan Bonds investments besides, and a president of a society, it would seem, feels as though her tenure of office has been a failure unless she shows a larger balance to the credit of the organization than her predecessor.

We believe the duties of musical clubs that are organized on the lines of the average ladies' musical societies should be three-fold; first, self-development, as represented in music study programs; second, local improvement, as shown in encouraging resident artists, new teachers, talented pupils and being identified with musical movements for community service, and third, making it possible for the larger artists to be heard and get the inspiration they bring.—Music and Musicians (Seattle).

THE COMPONENT PARTS OF THE SINGING VOICE: THEIR RELATION TO EACH OTHER

Thinking students of singing and teachers are finding it necessary to be able to intelligently analyze and build a substantial singing voice. To build a voice that is sure of tonal pitch and combined with durability and beauty we must have a logical system. So many naturally good voices, after a period of study, "lose out," so to speak. Why? Simply this, they have been taught by imitation and guesswork, which never makes the real product and forever places them in the class of amateurs. They have begun with making a tone pleasing to the ear, rather than leaving pretty tones until later and first laying a foundation upon which all tones are made and all tones are substantially supported.

There are two and only two parts, and are better understood as qualities, which compose the singing voice, viz., high quality and low quality. The high quality is of a shrill, piercing nature and predominates in soprano and tenor voices. In building the singing voice we must first establish mentally a horizontal plane for all tones by using this high quality only. Right here I will state that the foundation of every singing voice is this high quality, and in every voice it is the carrying power of every tone. After we have established our first condition in tone building we are ready to admit low quality in a small degree. Now, low quality possesses all which rounds out the tone, for it has depth, breadth and richness and predominates in contralto and bass voices. Most voices have an abundance of low quality, but do not use it rightly—in most cases it is pushed into the tone, thus choking out the high quality (which is essential to all voices), making a covered tone or throaty tone that does not carry very far over the footlights and eventually shortens the range of tone for singing. Many a throat is enlarged abnormally by pushing too much low quality into the tones before the voice is ready to receive it. When we use low quality too soon the natural beauty of the tone is being drowned out and causes a covered tone, which is not the real true tone. We must not tolerate covered tones, for they cause flatting and sharping. What we want and must have is a free open tone to make a beautiful singing voice. A free open tone is spontaneous and not hampered by conscious breath control, pitch, placement or power, but is made involuntarily, dominated by mind only.

Not only is this high quality the foundation of the singing voice, but it also is the instrument or tool used to open the channel into which low quality can gradually and naturally enter, making the tone broader and more mellow. After this low quality has become slightly blended with the high quality we find a blocking in our tone or, in other words, the low quality is trying to overbalance the high quality, so we find it necessary to return to high quality and expand our singing condition, making room for our low quality to adjust itself. Each succeeding time we return to the use of high quality tone we find our technical tone has lost some of its shrillness, because it has blended with a portion of low quality. In this manner or process our tones are being blended and broadened gradually toward balance. Now, some may ask: What is balance? Balance is when our tones respond to a given number of vibrations, according to pitch. But before this balance is attained the singing tone must be built by systematically blending the two qualities, high and low, one with the other, step by step.

IN WHICH THE MEANING OF WORDS IS DISCUSSED, TOGETHER WITH SUNDRY OTHER THINGS OF INTEREST TO MOVIE-GOERS

By BELLE SQUIRE

When is music incidental and when is it not incidental, and, if it is not incidental, what is it?

This may seem a very trivial question, but, as a matter of fact, it is a very pertinent one.

"Incidental," says the revered dictionary, "(1) Happening occasionally; or as an occasional event; casual; accidental; fortuitous;

"(2) Not necessary to the main action or design; subordinate; happening or done by the way.

"(3) Falling out or happening undesignedly as a result; contingent."

Yet in spite of all this weighty evidence, it is a matter of record that a special press agent of the Griffith productions, Jack Lloyd, by name, came to Chicago recently to tell Chicagoans, among other things, that "the incidental music of 'Hearts of the World' was exceptionally well handled by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra men!"

All well and good so far as the tribute to the Chicago Orchestra is concerned, but how about the incidental part? Of course, no one expects a press agent to stick entirely to the truth! As a rule, the veracity of such a one is not always above suspicion. But if anybody on earth is supposed to know words and their meaning—adjectives, especially—that one person is the press agent of a show, a circus, star, production, or what not. Not only a knowledge of adjectives, I take it, but a rich and varied assortment of them, is the press agent's stock in trade, without which the gentleman is not worth his salt.

I make this assertion advisedly. After having twice listened carefully to the music in question; after identifying many of the tunes, analyzing the psychology of the music heard, and after interviewing everybody who can be interviewed at a movie performance, I cannot agree with Mr. Lloyd that the music of "Hearts of the World" is incidental.

To say that would imply that the music of "Hearts of the World" happened occasionally, or that it was an occasional event; that it was casual, accidental or fortuitous. It would be saying that the music in this case was not necessary to the main action or design; that it was subordinate; that it happened or was done by the way. If I should be guilty of implying any of these things I would be fearful that not only my veracity, but my sanity might be questioned. So I am wondering just what the imported press agent means when he talks about the incidental music of "Hearts of the World."

After reading all the dictionary has to say about this word, and remembering also the charm of the music in question, I am forced to the conclusion that either Mr. Lloyd does not know what he is talking about or else he has never listened to the music that so delightfully accompanies this latest Griffith production. For this music certainly is not incidental. It is not subordinate. It is, in fact, quite as important as the play itself. Indeed, without its musical setting, the play would lose half its charm, so perfectly does the music fit the picture story. It is not that the music is so wonderful! Taken by itself, it is doubtful if it would be intelligible, except as a medley of musical scraps; but taken in connection with the play to which it is adapted, it leaves little to be desired. It supplies the emotional atmosphere. By means of those many and varied devices of tonal art, the music provided for this great production supplies a tonal mood for each and every emotion that the screen visualizes. Does it adroitly, too.

So cleverly does the music fit the action of the play that it might be possible for one skilled in following themes to sit blindfolded and follow the story emotionally by merely listening to the music. Many an old friend would he meet among those themes, for "Hearts of the World" music is "original," quite as original as that of "Intolerance," "Ramona" and others, being composed by the illustrious Rossini tschaikowskysuppeegriegchopinwagner et al except where the skilful adapter, Elinor has supplied the gaps with original Elino music.

Not only does the music supply the proper atmosphere for the play, but it does it strictly on time, or somebody hears about the fact that a cue has been missed. And a missed cue in a Griffith production is an artistic crime, for which the guilty one goes voluntarily into sackcloth and ashes.

To appeal to the "dear reader" is sadly out of fashion, but for all that—"Dear Reader! Let me put the case to you. I appeal to your fairness, your sense of justice. Can music that is played to a stop watch, that is regulated by a speedometer that times its cues to a fraction of a second that proceeds simultaneously with the action on the screen, that changes its mood and its themes a hundred times, if necessary, that the music story may be adequately told—can such music so performed rightly be called 'incidental'?"

Press agents are supposed to know their adjectives. From a child I have stood entranced before the billboards of circuses lost in the maze of gorgeous, flowing adjectives that described the wonders of some colossal aggregation of stupendous wonders! In my ignorance, I thought one of the main attributes of a press agent was to adjectivize! And this authority speaks of "incidental music!" Incidental! "It isn't incidental that he means, but synchronical! Synchronical, which means happening at the same time. The gentleman should have said, "The Chicago Orchestra handles the synchronical music exceptionally well!"

As a matter of fact he could have taken his choices of several words meaning the same thing: synchronical, synchronal, synchronistic and synchronous. With all this array of high sounding words to choose from, that he should call the music of "Hearts of the World" incidental, passes understanding. I have no grudge against the gentleman. I do not know him, but I maintain that any press agent who should be guilty of such violence to the English language ought to lose his job—or else be condemned to study his dictionary for a month in solitary confinement.

It isn't as if the word were new to the Griffith management! It isn't. As a matter of fact, the Chicago home of "Hearts of the World" fairly reeks with synchronizing. In some form or other it oozes from everywhere. You cannot be there five minutes without learning some form of the word that combines the prefix syn with the Greek word chronos. I did some mental gymnastics the first time it was used on me. For a moment I confused the chronos with chromo, and thought of color instead of time. They are so used to it down there that they slide over it now. The regular press agent, Walter Lindlar, will tell you feelingly and from the bottom of his heart how well the music synchronizes with the action of the play. Antonio Rizzio, first violin, speaks often and as feelingly of the same fact. He will tell you how much better this music synchronizes with the action than the music of other similar productions did. Ragan, the union operator, is enthusiastic upon the subject. I am not so sure that if you were to ask this last-named gentleman suddenly just what the name of the piece now running was, he would answer "Synchronizing," merely from force of habit. Not only is he a skilled operator, with a union card, but he is familiar with the whole range of big moving picture productions beginning with "Spartacus" and ending with "Hearts of the World."

Various aspects of synchronizing is all they talk about. It's "hitting the cue!" and "100 per cent efficient!" and "running close to time!" They fairly revel in synchronizing! Speedometers, stop watches, time plot sheets or time schedules, cues—all these things and more play their several and artistic parts to make the whole. As for the union operators (there are two of them, in fact), they are both artists in their line, which is running the picture out at the proper speed, or speeds, best adapted to a proper and artistic projection. And the speed varies considerably.

As Ragan says: "If you're running two feet a second and are two seconds behind time, you don't hit 'em on the head!"

Temperament is by no means confined to the orchestra. The union operator is also temperamental. If all goes well, and speedometer, stop watch, standard timekeeper and time schedule all synchronize, he comes out of his little booth triumphantly. "Hit 'em 100 per cent that time!"

"Once I was five seconds late on my reel," confessed Ragan's working partner, Jack Mulvaney, "and Ragan came running in here, tearing his hair and telling me that I'd 'spoiled the whole show!' That I 'was fifteen minutes behind,' and that I'd 'missed every cue!' And I wasn't five seconds off. It was only about a second or a second and a half. But he was crazy about it!"

It was my privilege to sit through several reels of "Hearts of the World" with Ragan beside me to interpret phenomena, point out the fine points, anticipate tunes and such like things.

"Watch how this synchronizes here!" he would say. "They're running 88 there! That cue comes on a split second! Tympani! There comes Von Strohm, the villain! The tympani always announce him!" And again, as he watched the battle scene where the forlorn little bride-to-be, half crazed by grief, staggers over the shell-torn field searching for her wounded love, clicked in her wedding finery. In the midst of the terrific battle music comes the strain of the "Lohengrin Wedding March." It is the duty of the conductor to time his beats to the uneven footsteps of the stricken girl. "That's a hard scene," explained Ragan. "No less than four different cues right close together!"

Later, though this is a state secret, I viewed the film from the peep hole of the operator's room, where the noise of the great projector behind me drowned out the sound of the music, except the battle music. Even that was difficult to hear, however, with the roar of the machine behind me. I was hot, too, and I had great goggles on, that Jack Mulvaney had chivalrously lent to me, that my eyes might not suffer in the intense glare of the big projector. Stop watch in hand, with an eye to his speedometer, his time schedule, his machine and the screen outside, Ragan yet managed to give me pointers—pointers that I couldn't quite take in, so intricate they seemed. His speedometer, for instance, being made for an automobile, registers miles. He works in feet. So Ragan is a mathematician, too. He has to be, to make that contrivance of his work. Also, he is a bit of a musician. Not that he knows anything about music, except by ear, but it is told that he rehearsed an orchestra up in some town for the music of "Intolerance." He doesn't read music, but he did know the cues. He knew the proper rate of speed, too, for each and every scene and every fragment of a scene, and so passed muster!

With a rush and a roar, with cheers from the audience as the "Marseillaise" and the "Star Spangled Banner" and other tunes roused them to enthusiasm, and at top speed the second act came to an end, and we stepped out of the little hot room on the dot of 5 p. m.

We had run true to time!

The music of "Hearts of the World" is another feat in synchronism, just as "Intolerance" was and as "Ramona," "Civilization" and "Fall of a Nation" were. Every action has its corresponding sound; every important character has its own peculiar tune or theme. The synchronizer, Carli Elinor, deserves much credit for the way he has handled it. It is excellently well done.

Especial attention is called to the theme of the "Littlest Brother," "Peek-a-Boo," which is worked into the general scheme in a variety of ways and in a manner to excite admiration. "Peek-a-Boo" in turn expresses adoration, devotion, jealousy, heartache, tragedy and joy. Charming indeed is that brief portion in which "Peek-a-Boo" plays the part of a heartbroken obligato to the "love theme" of "Big Brother's" wooing. The jealousy of the "Littlest Brother" is pathetic indeed, quite as pathetic as his infantile rage is laughable when first he discovers "Big Brother's" love affair. "Peek-a-Boo," slightly out of tune and on French horns, tells the story of his impotent indignation even better than the screen portrays it.

Pages could be written (and later will be) upon the synchronous music of "Hearts of the World." There are a thousand interesting things to be said about it—of Von Strohm's theme and the theme of the "All-Highest"—(wait until you hear it). Of the theme of the "Blind Fiddler" and the "street music" of the strolling players much might be said. There is one charming scene where, by a judicious employment of "rests," Victor Herbert's "Badinage" is made to fit absolutely in every detail the first stage in M. Cuchoo's droll love affair.

Both "The Boy's" theme and "The Girl's" are original, which means they presumably belong to Elinor, the synchronizer. A little "French air" adapts itself quite graciously to the caprices of the "Little Disturber," with her free and easy ways, her bold, audacious behavior, which, after all, are seen to be only a little more primitive than is usual. The thin crust of civilization has not been molded upon her—that is all. In the essentials she in no wise differs from her rival who, in different and more subtle ways, strives for the same goal—to arouse the admiration of the man who has charmed them both.

And now, dear reader, let me take you into strictest confidence. Take the advice of one who knows and go to hear as well as see the "Hearts of the World," where the seeing and the hearing are artistically and beautifully synchronized. Do not, I beseech you, make the mistake of waiting to see this play at your favorite theater, because if you do you will fail to hear it, and so lose half the charm. Without much rehearsing, the best of orchestras could not possibly handle the synchronal music; without rehearsal, the best of union operators could not possibly know his speeds, for there is quite as much artistry in the "projection box" as there is at the conductor's stand. After watching Mulvaney and Ragan at work I know whereof I speak.

Hear the battle music in the tremendous finale, which is begged, borrowed or stolen from various sources and cleverly adapted by the synchronizer. Without so much as "by your leave," Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, the "1812 Overture" and Rossini's "Semiramide Overture" are freely used. For the retreat, Suppe's "Light Cavalry Overture" does duty, as also does "The Marseillaise" in minor, the latter bringing a lump into the throat as the significance of this harmonic device is realized. I fancied, too, as I watched this retreat, that I heard the strains of "The Girl I Left Behind Me," but I am not sure.

Of course there is a big patriotic appeal in "Hearts of the World." The audience goes wild as the rousing strains of "Tipperary" are followed by Scotch and Irish tunes, mingled with those of France. Lastly come the Yankees, bringing with them "Columbia," "Dixie," "Yankee Doodle" and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Nothing new in all this? Of course not. It's been done a thousand times, only it has never before been so well synchronized. Let me assure you, too, that after you have had a taste of fine, synchronal music, you will lose your appetite for the incidental kind that is our usual portion at our favorite theaters.

And now, as a final word, let me assure you all that something new has come out of the movies after all—synchronous music. Of which, more anon.

RAOUL VIDAS' OWN CHAT

Several artists were grouped together one afternoon, and reminiscently they told various stories of their experiences with audiences. Raoul Vidas, the young French violinist who has just arrived in this country, broke in with: "The best behaved audience I've ever had was one that was being bombarded by Zeppelins; though, for that matter, I shan't ever be likely to forget my very first audience."

The young violinist is now a seasoned giver of concerts—and successful concerts, one might be forgiven for adding. He belongs to the French school of violinists, a pupil of the blind Berthelier, to whom France accords the highest place among her teachers.

"I shan't forget my very first audience, I assure you. I was five years old, and mother and father were so proud of me! You all know how parents are in such matters. [A great many of us did, and nodded our assent amidst the general laughter.] I had usually been cool enough when playing at home for the family. They were always quiet, and never applauded me. All went along pretty smoothly at the concert for a time, but soon many who evidently could not see me began to rise in their chairs, to stand up on them even, and when I finished they were generous enough to applaud me vigorously. Today, of course, I am overjoyed if they do that—but at that concert! At first to poor me the noise seemed so overwhelming that I was just rooted to the spot. Soon I became absolutely frightened and my one thought was to get away. That was it; my mind seemed to tell me, You must get away; you must run! No sooner thought than done. Clutching my small violin and bow, I turned and with all the speed I had, started to dash away. But I took the wrong turning, for suddenly I found my way absolutely blocked by the piano. There was no space to get around it, and a small boy could not go over it, so the only thing left for a small boy to do was to drop to the floor, crawl under it and so finally reach a piece of scenery which at least was between him and that audience. There, of course, I was met by my much embarrassed mother, and though the audience seemed to enjoy the spectacle, I didn't enjoy that 'curtain lecture' I got, I can tell you."

Someone asked him to tell about the audience which was bombarded by Zeppelins, and he continued: "We had left France, where the experience of being bombarded had already been ours, and so, when the Germans raided England on one occasion, I was giving a concert in Woolwich. The arsenal was not far from the concert hall, unfortunately for us, since the Germans naturally made it their target, and the bombs came unpleasantly close. The experience had, of course, lost its novelty by repetition, and I kept on playing. Not one person in the audience moved until it was all over; there was not the slightest panic even though the audience was composed almost entirely of women."

PASSING COMMENT

Clarence Bird, a pianist who was once a nember of the faculty of the Gottschalk yric School in Chicago, has enlisted for ar service and has received a commission s first licutenant in the intelligence depart- nent, and expects to sail at once for France, here he will be attached to General Per- hing's staff.

Gluck's "Orpheus" is to receive what is dvertised to be its "first complete pro- uction" in San Francisco, under the di- ection of Paul Steindorff shortly.

The announcement of soloists in the Pa- ific Coast Musical Review includes the ame of Lydia Sturtevant, "the popular so- rano, formerly of the Chicago Opera Com- any." It may be surmised that this means ne former Chicago Grand Opera Company r The Chicago Opera Association, as The uditorium Company is now known, but a areful search of all available records fails o show that any one of the name of Stur- vant has ever apeared with the organiza- on in Chicago.

Of course, where a young singer has ac- ually appeared in a part of any prominence, ven once, it is all right and very good pol- y to advertise as having been a member of e Chicago Grand Opera or any other com- ny in which the appearance was made. ut—far, too many who have merely been the chorus or at most have been en- ged but never allowed to appear, are ntinually advertising themselves as men- rs of the company and this, to say the ast, is misleading.

"When does the Elderly Person come ck?" This is a question we are asked ry often throughout the summer. Like all Elderly Ones, he needs and de- mands a good, long vacation, and so he does no writing during July and August.

He will be back, hale and hearty and just as young-old as ever, in September.

We are glad to show his likeness on our cover page today. There are still a few people who do not know that The Elderly Person and Mr. Albert Cotsworth are one and the same; in fact, the editor of Music News has often been accused of being the E. P.

"If you think some praise is due them,

Now's the time to slip it to them,

For they cannot read their tombstones when they're dead."

—ANON.

The summer sessions at all the Chicago schools of music have been exceptionally attended, and every one of these schools reports fine bookings for the fall.

August will not be minus on music by any means, for a great many teachers will continue to teach throughout that month and there will be many studio recitals.

Ravinia is under full sail and will throughout August afford musical pabulum to thousands of Chicagoans and the visitors within the Chicago gates.

September is the really dull month musically, as it is too early either for artist recitals or school functions, and Ravinia does not remain open beyond Labor Day.

This year, however, a lot of interest will be transferred the first week of September to Lockport, N. Y., where, at the convention of American Artists, Composers and Managers, a great many Chicagoans will appear.

It would be difficult, indeed, to imagine any Summer entertainment more delightful or more varied than that provided at Orchestra Hall.

To say nothing of the splendid cinema pictures, presenting a great variety of stars and stories, as well as travel pictures, comedies, war pictures, etc., there is usually a solo singer, an orchestra and very clever manipulation of the organ.

All this provides pabulum for every taste and much of instruction, as well as delightful entertainment. And, every week, the bill is entirely different from the previous week.

A very great feature last week was the talk of Private Dempsey, an American boy who has seen three years of service in the French army.

It is a pity that he could not have been heard by every person in Chicago, for he certainly told some interesting things, and, of an equal surety, no one could go away from his talk feeling otherwise than that the Germans must be absolutely defeated.

Private Dempsey paid his respects to the German propagandists in this country in anything but delicate language. "Now," said he, "we interne them and give them the best of treatment in every way, but the time is soon coming when we will stand them up against a wall and blow their d—— heads off."

The lastest Chicago musician to volunteer for service is M. J. Brines, the popular tenor.

He will take up war industrial work at Watertown, Mass., and will also lead community and cantonment singing.

Robert R. Birch, one of the most popular of Chicago's young organists, but now in war service with the 332nd Field Artillery (musician) at Camp Robinson, Sparta, Wis., was married on July 20 at the Jackson Boulevard Christian Church to Blanche Bayley. The numerous friends of Mr. Birch offer congratulations.

Ravinia is in the heyday of its success. The warm weather of the past week has made the place seem doubly desirable, and the fame of the fine company current this year has penetrated so far that the desire to travel Raviniawards has received a great impetus.

The season is half over, but new singers are constantly arriving, new bills are being introduced and, altogether, the season promises to go into history as the best, by far, ever given.

On last Saturday morning this writer sat for forty-five minutes again under the spell of a lecture, demonstration, or whatever you may like to call it, given by Effa Ellis Perfield as the closing function of her Summer session in Chicago.

Here is a remarkable woman. Always brimfull of enthusiasm, always very sure of herself, she has now added a poise and a persistence of statement which comes from tried and proven theory, which has been so universally accepted as to give its author very great authority.

Mrs. Perfield believes nothing that she has not proved—she asks her pupils to prove every statement she makes to them.

This method of study is, of course, vastly more difficult than the old "leaning-on-authority" kind, but it is also equally exhilarating, and it is, therefore, a mental uplift to listen to Mrs. Perfield urge the claims of her methods of music teaching.

Not every one will agree with her in all that she teaches, but of a certainty no open mind can listen to one of her talks and go away without at least having imbibed some truths about education, as well as an abiding respect for her sincerity and enthusiasm of purpose.

Mr. Witherspoon and Mr. Saenger have both returned to New York, after completing a thoroughly successful Summer season at the Chicago Musical College.

Both these visiting artist teachers taught at absolute capacity throughout their five weeks in this city.

In a talk with Mr. Kinsey last Saturday morning, he made the statement that the Summer session at the college, throughout, was more than 60 per cent greater than last year and that the bookings for the fall are progressing excellently.

All this goes to prove once more the contention taken up by Music News some weeks ago that conditions this Summer are greatly improved over those of a year ago.

The New York managers are now planning things much more freely, the big schools are feeling the effects of the fact that money is in very free circulation in the country and all this should prove an incentive to all musical factors. If the International Artists feel sure of a successful year, it may be safely assumed that the younger ones will fall heir to considerable business also, and if the big schools book to capacity it is equally certain that the studios will, just a little later, be in line for full attendance also.

AUDITORIUM CONSERVATORY RECITAL

After a most successful Summer term, Mr. and Mrs. Karl Buren Stein closed their work for this year with another extremely good recital given by their pupils in the Auditorium Recital Hall, Wednesday, July 31. Pupils of Mr. Erst and Mr. Hrusa also participated.

THE ORCHARD SCHOOL OF MUSIC AND EXPRESSION

Marie Veatch, teacher of classical dancing at the Orchard School of Music, will spend the month of August in Fifield, Wis. Pupils of hers who have recently appeared are: Helen Uafe, Michigan City Theater; Margaret Meany, Great Lakes; June Cook, Willard School; Helen Marie and Alice Virginia Spayd at Kranich & Bach Hall, Chicago and Decatur, Ill.; Margot Buxton, Nancy Grubb, Gloria Randolph and others, in a pageant at Studebaker Theater.

Miss Veatch has recently completed a course in dramatic art, which she will use in conjunction with dancing and pageantry the following season.

A NEW MUSIC BUILDING

The Moody Bible Institute has recently secured for its Music department a four-story building at 831-833 North La Salle street. It has six studios, totaling thirteen rooms, and thirteen rooms for practice purposes; also additional rooms for dormitory purposes.

Prof. Warren C. Coffin and Mrs. M. Lee Storrs have studios on the first floor; Prof. Foss L. Fellers and Miss Edyth E. Carlson on the second floor; while Prof. Guy Clare Latchaw and Prof. George S. Schuler may be found on the third floor.

This new home, redecorated and furnished, is located across the street from the main buildings, and it is now felt that there is sufficient room for their present needs.

The Institute has, from the very beginning of its existence, given special attention to the training of students in music, and because of this, provided comfortable rooms for students coming from distant points. Members of the faculty are gratified over the large attendance at the special summer music course classes.

It is announced that the graduation exercises for the 1918 summer class will be held in the Institute auditorium, Aug. 8, Thursday, and a recital by this class in the afternoon at 3 o'clock.

SUCH IS FAME

In a recent letter received from Lieutenant Albert Spalding, the American violinist, now serving with the American Aviation Forces in Italy, he tells a good story on himself which serves to illustrate a somewhat different viewpoint of the Italian conception of American musicians. Mr. Spalding writes:

"A good one was pulled on me day before yesterday as we were coming from Paris to Rome on the train. Captain La Guardia, commanding officer of one of the American Aviation Camps in Italy, with whom I was traveling, met one of the high Italian officials to whom he presented me, saying I was a famous American musician. The dignitary seemed quite impressed, and I was too, until he said: 'Oh, a great American musician. Yes, I have heard how fine they are on the ukulele. Do you know other instruments as well, lieutenant?'"

ORCHESTRA HALL

A Robert Chambers novel in the celluloid hat bears the nondescript title "The Danger Mark" evidently was chosen as a box office attraction, and featuring the newcomer to the screen, Elsie Ferguson, is the feature picture this week at Orchestra Hall. It is one of those stories that Mr. Chambers (the written-out author) palms off on the unsuspecting public as daring in content, and is about as thrilling as a chocolate nut sundae.

Geraldine Seagrave (Miss Ferguson) and her brother (Edward Burns) are the sole heirs to the millions bequeathed them on the death of the father, who went to his grave a drunkard. The conditions of the will say that the children must be raised so as not to suspect the immense fortune that is theirs when they reach their majority, and that they shall live in seclusion and should be watched most carefully for the taint from which the head of the house succumbed. A distant relative is named to be the guardian of the orphaned children (Maude Turner Gordon).

Years pass uneventfully and we come upon the heirs grown and chafing against their veritable prison. The girl longs for dresses and fine lingerie, and the boy wants his fling, so they hie themselves to the passionless trustees and demand their rights.

Immediately after, the girl gives her coming out party and is given a hearty welcome into the world that befits the station her millions entitles her to.

It is upon the eve of the debut that she takes her first drink, though the director shows us she has not altogether escaped the taint, for she puts cologne on lump sugar because she "likes it."

However, her first highball goes to her head, much to the amusement of the social butterfly (Crauford Kent), and when the maid finds her mistress a little weak she recommends a little wine that finishes poor Geraldine, for a little calls for a little more, till finally she is reelingly intoxicated and makes a shameful demonstration before her childhood sweetheart (Mahlin Hamilton), falling down a staircase to his feet. He tenderly puts her to bed, and a little later persuades her to let him lend his strength to battle with the desire for drink.

She becomes engaged to him only on condition that when the craving is gone he will marry him, and so it goes on until the "Willum" comes upon the scene to try his luck for the Seagrave millions.

It seems that Hamilton's sister (Gertrude McCoy) is betrothed to the unscrupulous gentleman, but he chooses to do away with the obstacle that stands in his way to the fortune. Geraldine, hearing of this, however, turns the tables, and while ostensibly he elopes with him, she signs the other girl's name to the license, and when the minister ties the knot, it is Miss McCoy he marries, and not Miss Ferguson.

Mr. Hamilton, like all heroes, imagines she is jilted and leaves a nasty note behind, and poor Jerry reverts to the terrible craving. During the fight he returns, after having met his sister and her husband on their honeymoon. And then they elope. Finis.

In spite of the stupid story, Miss Ferguson was at all times interesting. She is "screen pretty" and "screen wise" and, considering she is still a novice, she has a large following of fans that followed her from the legitimate to the cinema.

Mr. Hamilton did not suggest a Robert Chambers hero. He was inclined to pose, and was dreadfully afraid that he might get his clothes out of press.

Gertrude McCoy and Crauford Kent showed their seasoned movie ability, and Miss Gordon and Mr. Burns gave a good account of their roles.

The music established the fact that another besides the erstwhile conductor could furnish adequate accompaniments for the pictures.

The prelude to the feature was magnificently done, and George Bass' violin solo was a rare artistic treat. Next week the much over-estimated Douglas Fairbanks will unreel his latest "Morocco Bound."

ALLEN YORK.

BUSH CONSERVATORY RECITAL

The following sonata recital was given in the new and attractive quarters of the Bush Conservatory on Thursday afternoon, July 25, by Edgar Nelson, pianist, and Richard Wagner, cellist, assisted by Helen Touts Cahoon, soprano:

Sonata in E Minor ..... Georg Schumann
Allegro Moderato, Andante Cantabile, Allegro Energico con Fuoco
Mr. Nelson and Mr. Wagner

Nightingale ..... Alaleiff
Come, My Beloved ..... Handel
Shadow Song from Dinorah ..... Meyerbeer
Mrs. Cahoon

Lillian Wright at the piano

Sonata, Opus 18 ..... Rubinstein
Allegro, Moderato, Moderato Assai, Moderato
Mr. Nelson and Mr. Wagner

Though the day was one of the hottest of the season and must have been very uncomfortable for the soloists, the cool furnishings and draperies of the rooms and the delicately refined atmosphere of the chamber music made the audience feel very comfortable.

The Georg Schumann sonata, which is certainly one of the finest productions of the more conservative modern German school, was played with great mastery of style and interpretation, as could not have been otherwise with Mr. Nelson at the piano. To this writer Mr. Nelson always appears not only as the most dependable of musicians, but as one from whom a listener always receives fresh enjoyment and inspiration. Mr. Wagner's playing displays a pleasing technique, with great suavity of tone and confidence of execution. The two soloists worked together admirably.

Mrs. Cahoon, who assisted, is a singer possessing charm of personality and a small, bird-like voice, very lyric and supple. She seemed to be able to do anything with it in the way of trills and like "quips and pranks."

How to Obtain a Scholarship—

THE Educational Aid Society has relations with more than one thousand of the leading Colleges and Private Schools of every kind throughout the United States and, in return for services rendered, receives a limited number of full scholarships or Credit Certificates for students enrolling through the Society.

These Scholarships in the best institutions of every kind are sold to parents and students at lower rates and on more favorable terms than those charged by inferior institutions.

On a course in a Business College, the usual saving is from $10.00 to $25.00; in a Medical or Law School, $15.00 to $50.00; Music or Expression, $25.00 to $100.00; in Military or Boys' Boarding or Girls' Boarding Schools, $50.00 to $200.00. It is the agreement with each school not to sell its scholarships to students who have previously attended that school; otherwise there are no restrictions, excepting that the student must be qualified to enter the school selected.

The student paying his fees with a scholarship is considered by the school to have paid the school's regular rates even though he may have purchased the scholarship at one-half its value. In case of a sharp reduction, of as much as one-third or one-half of the regular rate, the student is expected to perform some service in bringing the work of the Society to the attention of his friends and acquaintances. Students who will be able to repay the Society at a definite future time or who can furnish a responsible guarantor can arrange with the Society for a scholarship.

To obtain a scholarship, either call or write, stating the kind of school desired, the location preferred, and you will be informed what rates of discount are obtainable in the school which will most nearly meet your requirements. A copy of our COLLEGE AND PRIVATE SCHOOL DIRECTORY, 480 pages, containing complete lists of all colleges and private schools in the United States with some facts about each and much information about many of them, will be sent to any address upon receipt of 25 cents.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

The Sonata Recital by Herbert Butler and Heniot Levy, Wednesday morning, July 24, at Kimball Hall, brought the series of summer recitals to a close. The attendance was large and the audience was highly appreciative. Three sonatas for violin and piano were played, the Grieg C Minor, the Kreutzer, and the Bossi sonatas.

At the previous recital, Silvio Scionti and Mrs. Louise Winter presented an interesting program. In these five recitals were included some of the great masterpieces of piano chamber music and song literature.

John J. Hattstaedt will spend a few weeks at the Lake Mohonk Mountain House, Lake Mohonk, N. Y.

The summer session of 1918 closed July 27 with a most favorable record, showing an unusually large attendance from all parts of the country. The fall term will open Sept. 9.

CAN YOU IMAGINE?

Mr. Clark washing every morning in a tin basin;

Eating over a red checkered tablecloth with a bent fork;

Wearing fierce looking "chaps" and a sombrero;

And lassoing obstreperous cattle on the sun-scorched hills?

It may not be as harrowing as the foregoing picture, but he really is going west to a regular, sure 'nough ranch.

ANOTHER NOTABLE ARTIST AT BUSH CONSERVATORY

Richard Czerwonky, the well known violinist, is a recent addition to the faculty of Bush Conservatory. In securing this eminent soloist and teacher, President Bradley of this progressive institution has added another distinguished member to the group of artists at Bush Conservatory, which participates so prominently in Chicago's musical life, and which includes Charles W. Clark, Edgar Nelson, Mme. Julie Rive-King, Moses Boguslawski and others.

The masterly violin playing of Czerwonky has been acclaimed by audiences of practically every large city in the United States. Probably no soloist now before the public has had such an extended experience and routine, and still retained the charm and beauty of style indispensable to the successful soloist. Czerwonky plays a beautiful Cuadagnini violin, which has a truly golden tone—a recent purchase for use in his concerts next season.

The full aspect of Czerwonky's achievements is found not only in his solo playing, but in his teaching and composition. He has that rare gift of imparting his artistry, so seldom found in successful soloists, and his lessons are an inspiration to his large class of pupils. So also are the ensemble classes which are so large a feature of his work at Bush Conservatory, in which are found many prominent pianists.

In addition to his teaching, Czerwonky finds great inspiration in his compositions, many of which have become well known. Among his works are a piano quintet, written under the inspiration of his own romance and marriage, a trio for piano, violin and cello, two string quartets and innumerable works for piano and violin, and songs which have found a place in the repertoire of the prominent singers of the day. In fact, the chief reason for the artist's resignation from his post as concert-master of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, which he held for eight years, was that he might have ample time to devote to composition.

Czerwonky has had an interesting career since his student days. He was a favorite pupil of that great maestro, Joseph Joachim, and studied with him many years. He won the Hasse and Beethoven prizes and was twice awarded the Mendelssohn prize, an unprecedented honor. After a successful concert tour, Czerwonky accepted an offer to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which position he afterward resigned to become the concert-master of the Minneapolis Symphony. As soloist of this organization and in recital tours, he has played in almost every city of the United States, both east and west, and in Canada. His appearances create unfailing enthusiasm and are eagerly anticipated from year to year.

Czerwonky is booked for recitals in the fall in New York, Chicago and Boston, and with his large class of pupils and other activities, is looking forward to a busy season.

SONATA RECITAL AT AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

One of the great advantages of summer study in Chicago lies in the fact that pupils have exceptional opportunity for hearing good music at that time.

Throughout the summer session the American Conservatory has provided fine artists and fine programs in the Wednesday morning series of concerts at Kimball Hall, and the program of last Wednesday, which was the last for this summer, was an exceptional one, indeed.

Heniot Levy, than whom there is no more popular or better pianist before this public, joined with Herbert Butler, violinist, in presenting three complete sonatas, and that the work was done skillfully and artistically goes without saying.

The works chosen for exploitation were the "C Minor Sonata" (Grieg), the "A Minor" (Beethoven), and the "E Minor" (Bassi), this list providing a great range of technic and a wide gamut of emotions.

Both the artists were in fine form, and the program proved an intense delight to the very appreciative audience present.

LEMUEL KILBY PRESENTS ARTIST PUPIL IN AURORA

One of the finest song recitals ever presented in Aurora was given by Miss Maude Bouslough, soprano, of the faculty of Columbia Conservatory, of which Harry P. Detweiler is president.

Miss Bouslough is a teacher pupil of Lemuel Kilby, and her singing showed excellent training, both as to voice production and interpretation. She sang with exquisite nuance the classic group, which included, among others, the "Pastorale" by Veracini, and "Silently Blending" by Mozart. She was especially happy in the modern songs, which were chosen from the most difficult and yet the most interesting of the Russian, French and American literature.

Miss Bouslough's future will be watched with interest, as her resonant and well controlled voice and genuine musicianship promise much. H. R. D.

ALBERT COTSWORTH

Music News is privileged today to present on the cover page a likeness of Albert Cotsworth, who is known to all our readers, both for his reviews under that name and also for his special articles under the caption "The Elderly Person."

The following interesting article is from The Diapason, published in Chicago by S. E. Gruenstein, and is reproduced by kind permission of that paper:

Ordinarily the taskmaster is not a popular functionary. But in Chicago guild circles it is different. The man who has made the members of the A. G. O. work in the past season is also the "beloved disciple" of the Illinois chapter. He is Albert Cotsworth, veteran organist, musical critic and business man and retiring chairman of the program committee. His experience in each of these lines tempers his action and judgment in the others, and thus he has made a place for himself in Chicago musical affairs which justifies the often-misused adjective "unique."

In the last season Mr. Cotsworth arranged fifteen services under the auspices of the American Guild of Organists and in doing so made good use of fifty members of the chapter in Chicago and other cities. Seventeen organists who had not heretofore played at a guild service were heard and nine churches which never had had such a service enjoyed it for the first time. Five services were held outside Chicago. More services would have been arranged but for the coal shortage of the winter. The out-of-town people were especially pleased over the services, and in every instance "return engagements" were sought.

Mr. Cotsworth was for five years organist and director of the Union Park Congregational Church and for more than six years organist and director of the quartet after that church had been amalgamated with the old First into the New First Congregational. Here he had a fine old Hook-Hastings organ of fifty speaking stops, the specification of which was drawn by Dudley Buck. The famous chorus choir of 250 voices gave a large number of oratorios every year under the baton of H. Augustine Smith. Mr. Cotsworth resigned this post when his work on Music News, known to all Chicago musicians, and the strain of the festivals became too great. He is now minister of music at the South Cong. Church. Mr. Cotsworth has been on the staff of Music News for 10 years, and his column, signed "The Elderly Person," is always read eagerly by the Music News family. He has also been president of the Bach Choral Society for two years. He has been a member of the executive committee of the Illinois Chapter for eight years. In addition to all this Mr. Cotsworth is the right-hand aid of an attorney. He is married and besides three children has nine grandchildren.

Before coming to Chicago Mr. Cotsworth played for eighteen years in the Congregational Church at Burlington, Iowa.

SPALDING SCORES HIT IN ROME

Word has just reached us of a remarkable success scored recently in Rome by Lieut. Albert Spalding, the famous American violinist, now attached to the American aviation forces in Italy. The occasion was a monster benefit concert given in the open air in honor of the oppressed nations: Poland, Belgium, Italia Irredenta, Servia, Bohemia and Russia, and each nation was represented on the program by the works of some of their composers. Spalding represented Poland, playing some of the violin compositions of Wieniawsky. Battistini, the great Italian baritone, was the other soloist, while Georges Pomerantzew from Moscow conducted a specially augmented orchestra. The complete program follows:

To Bohemia—Overture ..... Smetana
To Russia—2d Symphony ..... Tschaikowsky Orchestra
To Poland—
Romance ..... Wieniawsky
Polonaise in A ..... Wieniawsky
Lieut. Albert Spalding
To Serbia and Belgium—Group of Native Songs

Thursday—"Manon"

For the first time this summer the opera company presented Massenet's version of "Manon," with the versatile Muzio as the heroine. It is thoroughly understood that this role is usually assumed to be the property of a lyric soprano, but nothing seems to daunt this determined young Italian. Recalling her "Aida," "Tosca" and "Santuzza" one would hardly give her credit for a skill so remarkable as to completely assume in voice and manner the lyric demands of "Manon." Yet she came through with flying colors.

She, however, did not fare so well in "Faust," and, like her idea of the Gounod heroine, she made the Manon of Act I too knowing—more worldly, in other words—and not sufficiently naive. Her makeup, too, was of the frail delicate texture, instead of the healthy bloom of a country girl.

A few mistakes that will be remedied by this thoughtful artist when she sings the role another time.

Orville Harrold assumed the role that Muratore does with our opera and, while he is vocally good, his appearance belies that even a country girl would be taken in by his fat, unromantic person.

Graham Marr did not seem to appreciate the possibilities of Lescault. We suggest that another time Louis D'Angelo be allowed to try his luck. The last named gentleman shone in the small role of De Breitigny. Leon Rothier appeared a brief second as the elder Des Grieux. This singer's diction is so flawless and his organ so well under control that he is fully able to cope with any assignment, whether small or large.

The work of Richard Hageman at the baton convinced one that he fully understood the demands and the highlights of the Massenet score. ALLEN YORK.

Olivebelle Hamon Plays

On Thursday afternoon a children's program was given in conjunction with the Symphony Orchestra, under Papi's baton, with a dancer and a tiny violin prodigy. Sig. Papi again demonstrated his extreme good taste in the arrangement of the following program, which the orchestra responded to in excellent fashion:

Star Spangled Banner.....Key
Overture—Raymond.....Thomas
Solveig's Song.....Grieg
Arabian Dance.....Grieg
In the Spinning Room.....Dvorak
March—Moracaine.....Berlioz
Chanson de Nuit, Op. 15.....Elgar
Chanson de Matin, Op. 15.....Elgar
Panorama
Puss in Boots and the White Cat
Waltz from Suite The Thorn Rose

Florin Hahn, a north shore product, appeared in five dance divertissements. "La Gypsy," Indian, a series of barefoot Grecian poses, and an adaptation of the appealing story of the all-night vigil of pretty Cho Cho San, who waits for Pinkerton, sure in the belief that "some day he will come when the robins nest again."

All this was enacted in the quaint style that has made Mme. Butterfly one of the most popular attractions of modern story-operas. It is especially adaptable to the rhythmic possibilities of panto-dancing.

Little Olivebelle Hamon, an unspoiled youngster and a prodigy in every sense of the word, is a violinist of great powers. Not only does she play correctly, but her repertoire includes passages in intricate technic and a demand of mature memory, for the little lady plays without notes at all times. On this occasion she offered "The Meditation," from Thais, Bohm's "Perpetua Mobile," "The Scottish Paraphrase" and "Southern Melody Variations." Little Olivebelle plays with exceptional interpretation, as well as a technical display that is amazing.

She has been heard previously at a studio recital of her teacher, Miss Mildred Brown, and at the very successful concert given at Central Music Hall last Winter by children for the purchase of an ambulance to send to France, and at other times and places, and always the impression made has been a profound one.

She has such poise and personality back of her remarkable facility and such a musical feeling to guide her interpretations that she fascinates every audience before which she appears.

In the days to come, when Olivebelle Hamon shall have developed to full musical stature and shall have become one of the world's big violinists (and it is very easy to predict that she will do this), those who were at Ravinia last Thursday afternoon will be glad to recall the fact and, even if that time is a good many years away, no one who heard her last Thursday will have forgotten the charm, the fresh beauty and the insistent musical feeling of her playing at that time. ALLEN YORK.

Friday at Ravinia

Interest in the Friday programs at Ravinia is not lagging; instead it is on the increase and each succeeding week brings out a larger and more enthusiastic audience. This remark, however, is to be taken "with a grain of salt" in much the same way as are the encouraging headlines in our morning newspapers announcing that the Americans are "surging" forward; which usually means that they have gained about ten yards. This journalistic deception may be all very well for the preservation of the proper morale, but it proves to be a more or less dangerous statement for those whose efforts toward helping the good of the cause rest upon none too sure a foundation. For these it is made very easy to form the conclusion that the war is nearly over and therewith to withdraw their support, which, however scanty, is only too sorely needed. In the same way those whose interest at the Ravinia concerts has been short-lived may make the mistake of believing that their support is superfluous. But such is not the case. Though the change for the better is noteworthy, there is still ample room for improvement, which the artists not only hope for but expect as the inspiration of and the reward for their efforts.

Afternoon

The Student-Artist concert on Friday afternoon must be called distinctly a success in spite of the severe thunderstorm which came up in the midst of the program. It seemed neither to affect the spirits of the young artists nor those of the circles of friends who afterward surrounded them.

The soloists were both young women representing noted teachers. Miss Sylvia Loder, contralto, is the 18-year-old daughter of Dr. S. K. Loder of 4307 Grand boulevard, and is a pupil of Edoardo Sacerdote. That she is also a talented linguist was shown in a small degree in her opening song, "Psyche" (Paladilhe), sung in French. The remaining three were English songs, "Japanese Death Song" (Earl Cranston Sharp), "Deep River" (H. T. Burleigh), and "Love, I Have Won You" (Landon Ronald). Her voice was rich in quality and markedly resonant, though a slight tremolo in the upper register may have indicated a degree of nervousness. None of this appeared, however, in the lower range, her deeper voice being velvety and smooth. She was accompanied by Miss Katherine Kittilsby.

Miss Lillian Billow, a pupil of Mrs. Ella Dahl Rich, played the brilliant and difficult Chaminade "Concert Piece," with Mrs. Rich at the second piano. She scored a marked success in this number, which is among the most worthy of the works of this popular salon composer. Miss Billow played it with grace and charm, in good taste, not attempting to give it any of the lofty character which it has not. Her technique is extremely facile and her whole stage presence very charming. It would be a pleasure to hear Miss Billow in a composition requiring more breadth of tone and deeper insight. We feel that she could do it equal justice.

The work of the orchestra naturally suffered somewhat through the unexpected absence of Mr. Papi, though the spirited Spanish suite, "La Feria" (Lacome), and the Delibes Ballet suite "Coppelia," were both moderately picturesque.

Evening

The evening's program, Richard Hageman conducting, was evidently designed with several variations from the straight orchestra numbers in view. This was fortunate, as the latter were in large part of the more serious Russian type, which are likely to become depressing. The program is printed as follows:

Overture—Carneval, Opus 45 ..... Glazunov
The Young Prince and the Young Princess, from Suite, Scheherazade, Opus 35 ..... Rimsky-Korsakow
In the Village, from Caucasian Sketches ..... Ippolitof-Ivanof
Romance, Opus 10 ..... Franchomme
Espagnola ..... Glazunov
Mr. Bruno Steindel
Forest Spirits, from Suite, Opus 42 ..... MacDowell
Theme, Variations and Polonaise, from Suite No. 3, Opus 55 ..... Tschaikowsky
Selection
Miss Sophie Braslau
French Military March ..... Saint-Saens

The Glazunov overture, with its pathetic episode, was temperamentally rendered as befitted the composition, while the Rimsky-Korsakow number which followed was plaintive, but more legendary in character. The Ivanof sketch, with its curious theme and its charming obligatos for viola and English horn (admirably taken by Messrs. Esser and Napolilli), made a very popular impression on the listeners, and Mr. Hageman courteously repeated it, much to their gratification. Following this was Mr. Steindel's solo group with the orchestra, magnificently done. He encored with the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," that jewel of all arrangements for the cello.

This writer regrets that she was unable to stay after the intermission, for Miss Braslau was again scheduled to sing. But from repeated hearings we do not doubt that whatever she did was done in her usual splendid way. She has certainly won the hearts of all Ravinia audiences this summer. It is reported that Miss Braslau is soon to appear in the role of Mignon. We look forward with pleasure to hearing her interpretation of that part.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Saturday Evening

Saturday evening was ideal Ravinia weather and, consequently, the crowd was the greatest, probably, since the opening night.

And the performance of "La Boheme" was equally great.

The entertaining fooling of the first act was done as effectually as it is ever done at the Auditorium, by Kingston, Picco, Rothier, D'Angelo and Daddi, and the exquisite vocal numbers assigned Mimi and Rudolpho were at top notch of beauty and finish in the experience hands of Claudia Muzio and Morgan Kingston.

The third act introduced the big quartet scene by Mimi, Rudolpho, Musetta and Marcel, which was done at a splendid point by Muzio, Kingston, Ruth Miller and Picco.

The event was the debut of Miss Miller and proved her a distinct acquisition—a singer who will be heard in other parts with keen delight.

She has acting ability of the exact type to fit the Musetta requirements, and her voice, on Saturday evening in the ensemble, was clear, sweet and powerful.

A constant reading of the New York letter in Music News last winter showed that Miss Miller was forging ahead very rapidly at The Metropolitan, and it will require but a few performances such as that of last Saturday evening to place her in the ranks of prime favorites at Ravinia.

Muzio is very good, indeed, as Mimi, better, perhaps, vocally than histrionically, but good enough in both ways.

Her singing of the first act aria was almost a revelation, for, few, indeed, are the singers who have so glorified that score.

Mr. Kingston, in co-operation with her, and also independently in his own solos, was in the prime of condition, and added one more to the current list of big successes which have been credited up against his name.

All other parts were well done, and the opera was well staged.

When an opera such as this is given at Ravinia, there is fine opportunity to study the orchestral score, for the orchestra is spread out just in front of audience and it is possible to watch the solo bits, the

WARREN PROCTOR

Warren Proctor, the well-known tenor, has been re-engaged for special guest performances by Cleofonte Campanini, general director of the Chicago Opera Company, for next season, and will appear as Don Ottavio in "Don Giovanni," Cassio in "Otello," and also assume the leading tenor role in Massenet's "Griselidis," and in the "Barber of Seville."

This popular young tenor was unable to accept an engagement for the entire season, owing to his numerous concert and recital dates.

He recently completed a number of records for the Columbia Phonograph Company.

MARIE YUNG'S PUPILS

Mme. Marie Yung is now rehearsing seven of her pupils in solo and ensemble dances engaged by the Thaviu Band and Opera Company to make a seven-week tour throughout the states, leaving August 23. Those engaged are: Dorothy Gnaedinger, prima ballerina; Dorothy Lang, first solo dancer; Virginia Rucker, Grayce Blair, Anna Peterson, Claribel Schmitt and Lillian Young.

ANTOINETTE PERLOWSKA APPEARS AT DRAMA LEAGUE FUNCTION

Each week the Drama League of Chicago gives an evening to the masses at Chicago's million-dollar municipal pier, and last Friday was Polish night. Among the representative Chicago artists engaged was Mme. Antoinette Zebrowska-Perlowska, the Polish violinist and a well known Chicago woman.

Everything about the program was Polish—the folk songs by the Chopin Choir, under B. J. Zalewski; the folk dances by the pupils of Mme. Agnes Nering; children from the St. Stanislaus School, and school of St. Mary of the Angels. The new "Marsz," dedicated to the new Polish army, organized in France for service on the western front, received its first official introduction by the St. Cecilia Choir, while Rose Kwasigroch was listed for a soprano solo. Mme. Perlowska played "Legenda" (Wieniawski) in costume, presenting a pretty picture of demure grace, and gave the popular work in delicious tone that reached the very corners and crevices of the acoustically bad mammoth Auditorium. At all times her tones were bold and solid, elusive and crystal, as the composition demanded. Altogether, madame's versatility was well illustrated in the work she exploited. She earned the hearty endorsement of the packed house.

FRENCH MILITARY BAND

Capt. Gabriel Pares, conductor of the French Military Band, now on a visit to this country to give concerts in the military camps under the auspices of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., is well known as the former conductor of the celebrated "Garde Republicaine," with which he visited the United States to give concerts at the St. Louis Fair, in 1904 and again in 1915, at the San Francisco Exposition. Captain Pares was signally honored by the French government in being chosen conductor of this band of brave French musicians, almost all of whom have been wounded in battle and many of whom have been decorated for bravery under fire. The French title of Captain Pares is "Chef de Musique de 1ere Classe."

WILLIAM GRISWOLD SMITH

William Griswold Smith, choirmaster of the Normal Park Baptist Church, will leave the church music in the hands of some of his choir soloists and give up his heavy teaching work, resting throughout August at Manitowoc, Wis. This has been an exceptionally busy year for Mr. Smith, both in concert engagements and teaching. Although his prize-winning choir has been considerably depleted on account of the war, he has some very promising new singers who will probably enable him to restore the organization to its former efficiency. Two of his choir men, Clarence Coe and Burton Knapp, are gold stars in the choir service flag.

Von Ritter—Mrs. Marie Edwards von Ritter has just returned from a motor trip through the east, having visited in Detroit, Niagara Falls, Ont.; Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Rochester, N. Y.

M. BARBEREUX-PARRY
ORIGINATOR AND FOUNDER OF THE BARBEREUX SYSTEM OF CONSTRUCTIVE VOICE PRODUCTION AND UNIFIED DICTION, director of the Vocal Department of the National Conservatory of Music, will conduct Summer Normal Classes in New York City June 17th to July 6th, in Chicago July 8th to 31st, in Asheville, North Carolina, August 15th to 31st.
A course of written lessons is arranged to assist the student and teacher. This course can be used either for preparatory or supplementary study, and can be obtained by mail for a minimum sum.
Teachers are wanted to teach this system in every locality. On application addresses will be given of teachers in all parts of the United States who are using this system with great success.

mosaic ensemble, and the massive effects at leisure and impressively at close range.

Gennaro Papi had the baton on Saturday night, and the orchestra seemed in an absolutely inspired mood.

Never have the men been better directed than at this time, and never have they responded more alertly or more artistically.

The result was a hearing of the score which was far, far above the ordinary, and which could not fail to impress every hearer. C. E. W.

Other Bills

The concerts at Ravinia, under direction of Richard Hageman, are of such great worth and beauty that could they be fully realized by the concert going public the gain would be very great.

However, they are attended week after week by fairly good audiences of great discrimination, and the enjoyment afforded is beyond telling.

On last Monday evening there were fine numbers by Smetana, Suk, Tschaikowsky, Massenet and Godard for orchestra, and the Paganini concerto for solo violin.

The Thursday and Friday afternoon concerts, each of particular kind, are reviewed in another column.

On Saturday afternoon the following program was given:

Star Spangled Banner.....Key
Overture—The King of Yvetot.....Adams
Poetic Scenes.....Godard
In the Forest
In the Village
Bavarian Dances, Op. 27.....Elgar
Suite de Concert—L'Arlesienne.....Bizet
Pastorale
Intermezzo
Menuet
Farandole
Flute and Harp Obligato by A. Quensel and Mrs. Jiskra
Petite Suite.....Debussy
En Bateau
Cortege
Menuet
Ballet
Popular song—Cow Keeper's Tune and Country Dance, Op. 63.....Grieg
Merrymakers' Dance (Nell Gwyn).....German

On Sunday afternoon the list read as follows:

Star Spangled Banner.....Key
Overture—Fra Diavolo.....Auber
Serenade.....Moszkowski
Menuet of the Flies.....Czibulka
Little Waltz.....Teresa Carreno
Ballet Henry VIII.....Saint-Saens
Irish Rhapsody.....Herbert
Under the Linden Tree.....Massenet
Duet for Cello and Clarinet.....
Messrs. Steindel and Schreurs
Conductor, Gennaro Papi
Ballet Suite Egyptien.....Luigini

On Sunday evening "Lakme" was given again, when Mabel Garrison appeared for the last time, and successes were scored by Braslau, Kingston and Rothier.

On Tuesday the bill was "Faust," with Braslau, Muzio, Harrold and Rothier.

On Wednesday, Lucy Gates made her first apearance at Ravinia, the vehicle being "Traviata," and on Thursday "La Boheme" was repeated.

Today, Friday, at the Artist Students' concert the soloists will be Irma Bray and Mark Wessel, and this evening the favorite symphony soloist, Sophie Braslau, will again apear.

On Saturday afternoon there will be athletic sports, and in the evening "L'Amour dei Tre Re" will be sung for the first time.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE NOTES

Sylvia Loder, student of the College, sang at the concert given by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at Ravinia Park last Sunday. Miss Bernice Seabury and Mrs. Carleton Vail, also studying at the Chicago Musical College, are also scheduled to appear at Ravinia Park, the former August 16, the latter the first or second Friday in September.

Eric De Lamarter of the Chicago Musical College faculty, will produce his solo cantata—"Give Ear, O Israel"—for tenor, at the Vesper Choral Prelude at the Fourth Presbyterian Church, North Michigan Avenue and Delaware Place, next Sunday. The following Sunday he will give the first interpretation to a motet—"Thy Word Is a Lamp," for six-part chorus, solo violoncello and organ—by Felix Borowski.

LILLIAN DYER

Lillian Dyer, soprano soloist at Unity Church, Oak Park, will appear on Friday afternoon, Aug. 9, at Ravinia Park, in the Student-Artist concert.

"BOSTON SYMPHONY TROUBLES"

(Contributed)

In a recent issue of the Literary Digest appeared an article headed as above; the article is worthy of consideration by more than one board of trustees who are responsible for the policy of their organizations as regards the engagement of their musical directors, and through these, of their ensemble musicians.

Starting out with the question: Who will be the successor of Dr. Karl Muck? (now interned in a southern detention camp as a violently outspoken enemy alien), the article leaves the impression that Sir Henry J. Wood (to whom the conductorship was offered) had declined the offer because of the predominance, in the orchestra, of the German element, and the refusal of the management to purge its ranks of at least the unnaturalized Germans and Austrians at present belonging to it.

We print almost verbatim the concluding paragraph of the article:

"To Mr. Krehbiel, of the New York Tribune (fine musician, admirable writer and true American, editor): It seems a lamentable circumstance that orchestras of the United States should seem to be wholly dependent upon foreigners as conductors. The fact that some of these men are now making loud protestations of devotion to our country's ideals offers nothing in the way of extenuation for their conduct in the past.

"There are men in every rank of life—in every profession—ready to 'crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, where thrift may follow fawning.'

"Is Mr. Stock an American citizen? Is Mr. Hertz? Is Mr. Bodanzky? The first has been with us thirty years." (Give him his due, only twenty-three years—Editor.) "All but the last have lived through a period in which Germany conducted an insidious campaign to establish 'imperium in imperio' here. . . . If we cannot have conductors of native birth, let us at least have Britons, Frenchmen, Italians or Belgians; the tenure of loyalty in the other countries, even in Russia, is too unstable."

And now comes the question, suggested by the "troubles" of the Boston Symphony. What are WE, the music-loving public of Chicago, the 8,500 people whose contributions gave the Theodore Thomas Orchestra a permanent home, and saved that orchestra to Chicago, what are we going to do about pro-Germanism among its musicians? For more than one-third of them are of German birth; another third are of German parentage and sympathies, and you can count on your fingers and toes the total number of real Americans (by birth or adoption) British, French, Belgians, Italians and Russians.

This is not surprising, in view of the influences which for many years have controlled the musical "end" of the big corporation which the Orchestral Association has grown to be. Its director is an unnaturalized German; that director's immediate subordinate or "straw boss," a German. What wonder that, if a vacancy existed, and two men, one an American and the other a German, applied for the position (both equally good musicians), nine times out of ten the Teuton would get the job. Vacancies now exist; a number of young men have gone into the service of our country. The policy henceforth must be to engage not a single man who is not a full AMERICAN CITIZEN. W. E. S.

BUSH CONSERVATORY

Last Tuesday was just such a day as the one last summer when Mme. Julie Rive King elected to play her annual piano recital for Bush students and her many admirers, who packed the old Bush Temple Theater. Hot and stuffy it was that day, with no cooling showers to relieve the humidity, as on Tuesday, yet on both occasions not only the weather but her hearers accorded this artist a "warm reception." It amounted almost to an ovation that bespoke without a doubt her popularity is not on the wane.

Still masterfully does this mistress of her art play; the instrument still responds to her capricious movement.

By request she gave the Liszt "Tarantelle" aside from her regular program; i. e., "Rhapsodie No. 14' (Liszt) and "Themes and Variations" (Nicode), which gave her ample opportunity to display a wide assortment of tonal moods and technical accomplishments, thus showing that not only was Madame equal to the fireworks display, but her touch was firm and her tone solid, big and crystal.

Herbert Miller, baritone, appeared in two groups of songs, one of German classics in English translations and the other French Chansons. In the well-known aria, "Honor and Arms," from Handel's "Samson," Mr. Miller indulged in unmistakable basso cantante quality to good effect. Both "Adelaide" (Beethoven) and "Two Gondoliers" (Schumann) were sung in a pleasing and expressive voice. The many effective passages in the French group were enhanced by the gorgeous reading his big, masterful, luscious tones afforded the compositions.

Among the representative Chicago violinists is Roland Leach, who at all times exploits exceptional talent and remarkable virtuosity. His tone is suave and ingratiating, his style luxurious, and his manner unaffected. He presented himself as the master of his instrument, no less than of himself. His interpretation is original and he does not spoil his impression with turbulent movements of head or hair, or any other histrionic illusions of genuine feeling. Indeed his playing of the Elman arrangement of the Schubert "Cradle Song" was simplicity and sweetness in itself, while in the "Danse Diabolique" he played with a dash and abandon that earned him unstinted applause and left a pleasant memory.

The accompanists, Opal Antrim and Esther Goetz, provided substantial support.

FOURTH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The organ recital at the Fourth Presbyterian Church last Thursday afternoon with Dr. Carver Williams as assisting artist was as follows:

Sonata Pontificale ..... Semmens
Allegro Moderato, Adagio, Fugue
Cantilene Pastorale
Marche aux Flambeaux } ..... Guilmant
Ecce Panis
Scherzo Symphonique
Solo cantata for bass—"Bless Jehovah" (Psalm CIV) ..... Eric De Lamarter

Mr. De Lamarter played with his usual ease and artistic insight. The distinguished feature of the program, however, was the cantata for bass and organ, written especially for Dr. Williams by Mr. De Lamarter. In point of composition it is a splendid piece of work, displaying marked originality and scholarship. It was an unusual and very interesting form, requiring good musicianship in performance. It was admirably suited to Dr. Williams' voice and he gave it a most impressive reading.

MISS PETERSON PRESENTS PUPILS

Miss Agnes Peterson presented two of her pupils in piano recital at the pretty Adam Schaaf Recital Hall, Tuesday evening, and the result was an hour of great pleasure.

Many teachers are learning the lesson that a short program is far better than a long one, especially in war times, and the fact that the program was only an hour and a quarter long is to be commended, and it constituted one factor of its great success.

Two little girls each played six short pieces and another one sang three songs.

Dorothy Jane Hughes is probably no more than 10 and, naturally, she has very little voice. She has, however, musical feeling and fine interpretative ability. And, when you come to think of it, what is the one big factor in interpretation? Undoubtedly it is pronunciation and enunciaton of text. In these respects, Dorothy Jane was remarkably good.

Among her selections was "His Buttons Are Marked U. S.," and the appeal of this song was immediate and emphatic.

Carrie Jacobs Bond wrote it under the inspiration of the Spanish War (I believe), but it is certainly apropos of the present moment in even more emphatic degree.

The program as given on Tuesday was as follows:

*Duo—Farandola ..... Mueller
Cabaletta ..... Lack Spinning Wheel ..... Spindler
Beatrice Stanek
Coronation March ..... Meyerbeer
Butterfly ..... Merkel
Spring Showers ..... Fink
Grace Fletcher
Songs ..... Selected
Dorothy Jane Hughes
Prelude, F major ..... Bach
Music Box ..... Liebich
*Duo—Danse Moderne ..... Dennee
Beatrice Stanek
Prelude, C minor ..... Bach
Balancelle ..... wachs
*Duo—Marquise ..... Lack
Grace Fletcher

* With Miss Peterson at second piano.

Beatrice Stanek and Grace Fletcher are attractive girls, and they both have nice friendly manners.

This always brings a like response from the audience, and so on Tuesday there was a nice and friendly greeting and endorsement from those who listened to the well chosen program.

Too many teachers think that Liszt, Chopin and Beethoven are essential to all programs, even those of little children, but, unquestionably, this is an error. Nothing could have been more charming than the youthful grace and enthusiasm (exploited through very facile fingers) of the "Spinning Wheel" and the "Music Box," while Bach, just as positively a writer for children as for every age and condition, was beautiful as translated at this time.

Miss Stanek has unusually fleet fingers and a very nice sense of musicianship.

Miss Fletcher makes good tone and is accurate. Undoubtedly she understands the proper use of the damper pedal, but she forgot on Tuesday evening to use her knowledge in that one respect. C. E. W.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION AND DRAMATIC ART

The Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art, under direction of Letitia V. Barnum, gave an intensely interesting program at the Fine Arts Building last Friday evening.

It was a very hot night, but the audience remained en masse till the final fall of the curtain at 11:25.

Frances Mason, Gladys Geissler and Dorothy Coleman appeared before the arrival of this writer, much to his regret, the first reading "Skinner's Dress Suit," the second, "The Lover's Catechism," and the third, "Why She Liked Him Not."

Mrs. Marcia Markland followed with that slight verse, "The Beetle's Party," which, although distinctly a children's number, was well done by her.

Mrs. Markland, like every one on the program, had evidently been trained specifically with reference to the space to be filled by the voice, and every word was heard distinctly on the back seat.

Celia Thorn was presented in that tragic ten minutes of Oscar Wilde—"Guido"—and gave a splendid impersonation of the lovers, showing the quick play of emotions of the woman who, when her lover refused to "kiss across the thin stream of blood" created by her murder of her husband specifically because of her love for Guido, calls her guards and has the latter arrested as the murderer.

"Mother's Man," an exceedingly fine bit of writing, was done clearly and well by Eleanor McCarthy, and as much may be said for the work of Mrs. Harry Spade, who gave a true to life impersonation of a society woman.

The sketch itself, "Helping Win the War," left a bad taste in the mouth and one felt impatient and disgusted that such a woman as the one typified could live and have her being in Chicago or any other American city at the present time.

For her love of "helping" was all a pretense and the glamour of the necessary costumes and the publicity from being on committees, etc., made a much more hearty appeal to her than the fact of any real good she might do.

Bessie Markland was splendid in "Advertising for a Servant," and assumed the various nationalities of the applicants with skill and success.

Particularly funny were the speeches put into the mouth of Mrs. Jones by the author of the sketch.

This lady, who was willing "to assist" some woman do her own housework, brought her little boy along when she came to apply, and announcing that she had three which she expected to "keep by her," uttered the hope that the woman who wanted a servant had no children of her own because "it is hard to mix two kinds of children, you know."

One of the breeziest bits of the program was "The Coming Out of Miss Cummings," presented with much style and effect by Beatrice Hudson.

In this sketch the nervousness of the unwilling debutante was shown to perfection and the audience found much to laugh about in the lines, especially funny being the statement of Miss Cummings that she felt "just like the Fourth of July."

Without any disparagement of any one else on the program, it must be said that, beyond question, the very best reader of all was Palys Chevrier, who gave some marvelously good verses embodying the feeling and the dialect of the French-Canadian.

In days far agone, Fanny Davenport used to thrill her audiences with the "big speech" of Lady Gay Spanker in Boucicault's "London Assurance," and every reader of that time tried her luck with the description of an English hunt embodied therein.

It was revived on Friday evening by Marie Veatch and its effect was, as of yore, electric.

Booth Tarkington in his "Penrod" sketches has furnished material for many a "reading," and, truth to tell, some of his longer chapters have at times been a bore.

Not so, even remotely, however, in the case of "The Fall of Georgie Bassett," in which besides the "Sissy" Georgie and Penrod there figure a young Jew and a little Negro.

All the characters and dialects were admirably taken by Mrs. Hazel Hollingsworth and the reading was a pronounced success.

Besides this varied and very interesting assortment of readings there were three short plays, two being distinctly of poetic trend (both by Mary Moncure Parker), and the last and longest being a society play by the gabby but very skillful J. Hartley Manners.

In the last named, very excellent work was done by Marigold Langworthy, H. J. Sherkerjian, Cecilia Thorn and Dorothy Coleman.

The resources of the School and the fine training of the students were shown to immense advantage in this elaborate half hour and each one connected with it may feel proud of results.

The two Parker bits were called "Killing Time" and "Princess Innocence."

In the first "The Poet" (Marie Veatch) has a lot of charming verse to recite, and it was done excellently at this time. Phyllis (Mrs. Hazel Hollingswörth) has to look very pretty, and then display versatility and good judgment by a quick change to entirely different mood. This was skillfully done. Father Time, the remaining character, very difficult to make plausible, was done acceptably by Gladys Geissler.

In "Princess Innocence," Lydia Begole played charmingly the part of the Princess, who, brought up in ignorance of the world, breaks out of her father's garden one day

"Sorrow" and "Old Age" were beautifully layed, as well as the "Attendant" (Mrs. Elizabeth Forster), and their various moods nd stories make a strong impression on the Princess. "Youth" (well done by Gladys Geissler) tempts her in vain, but "Love," layed most seriously and with a true poetic ouch by Frances Mason, awakens her to Life nd with him she goes away, sending her "Attendant" back sorrowfully to break the ews to the father.

Without going into more detail it will be een at once that this was an elaborate as well as thoroughly interesting program, and hat its skillful, suave and successful presentaion by the Summer pupils at the Barnum School is a tribute to the teachers of the institution such as may well make them proud nd reassure the public that this is a school which is able to develop talent in many and varied ways. ### CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE

The last of the Summer Morning Musicales at the Chicago Musical College was given on Saturday morning to a fine attendance.

As usual, there were advanced pupils of the piano, voice and violin departments on the program, and also as usual the arrangement was skillful, the presentation tasteful and the musical values big ones.

Anna Mistrofsky, Esther Sopkin, Kathryn Whitfield and Helen Prindiville represented the piano department, the first named being a pupil of C. Gordon Wedertz, the next two of Alexander Raab and the last studying with Rudolph Reuter.

Miss Mistrofsky gave a brilliant and effective reading to the Concert Etude of MacDowell. Miss Sopkin was good in a Barcarolle (Liadow) and exhibited unusually fine staccato and semi-staccato in the Tambourin (Rameau-Godowsky). Miss Whitfield showed that she understands the Russian feeling in "Melodie" (Rachmaninoff) and "Bigarre" (Arensky), disclosing a remarkably fine melody in both, and Miss Prindiville proved that she can manipulate the glistening generalities of the Liszt "Au Bord d'une Source," as well as the A Major Concerto of the same composer, which she played so exceptionally well at the commencement concert at the Auditorium.

Alice Pihl, an advanced pupil of Herbert Witherspoon and the possessor of a very attractive voice, sang "Voi Che Sapete" (Mozart), and Naomi Brown Hamilton gave a skillful and facile performance of "Ah fors e lui" ("Traviata.")

Ethel Elkins of Peoria played very acceptably the Spanish Dance No. 8 for Violin (Sarasate), and Gilbert Ross, a talented boy from Madison, Wis., made a profound impression with his work in the "Gypsy Airs" of the same composer. C. E. W.

ZANESVILLE, OHIO

The graduating program of the Zanesville School of Music follows:

WARRINGTON THEATER

After two weeks' frolic in farce and comedy, the Walton Pyre Players, now playing a stock engagement in Oak Park, turned their attention to the dramatic mystery play, Bayard Veiller's "The Thirteenth Chair."

It was this play that the author concocted for his wife, Margaret Wycherly, after the managers to whom he sold his super-success, "Within the Law," chose first Emily Stevens and then Jane Cowl to create the memorable role of Mary Turner.

And it was this same play that brought Annie Russell out of retirement to enact the Wycherly role in the Chicago production.

The script calls for an augmented cast and Director Pyre chose his characters with careful consideration for their aptitude to the roles. The story is frankly mystery. It concerns Mme. Rosalie La Grange, a medium who has been engaged by Edward Wales to give a seance at the home of the wealthy Crosbys in the hope that witchcraft will unearth the murderer of his friend, who has been stabbed in the back mysteriously. It may be good to add that Mr. Wales suspects a woman—the woman, in fact, that young Crosby is engaged to and about whom nothing is known, save that her name is Helen O'Neil and who was the last known person seen with the slain man.

After madame arrives there are a few preliminary exposures of "table lifting" and "spirit knocking" that go to show that 98 per cent of the witchery depends upon fake and dependable wit. In the throes of this demonstration Helen and her fiance enter, and at once madame recognizes Helen as her daughter and, under pretense of reading her palm, she talks with her and promises to leave so as not to "humiliate her before all her grand friends."

About this time the party warm up to madame and press her to give a seance in the dark, so in a circle they sit (thirteen of them), joining hands, after both the windows and the doors have been securely fastened.

Under the cover of darkness (madame is securely tied) they commune with the departed spirits. First one and then another, till finally the spirit of the dead man talks through "Laughing Eyes," and excitedly Wales asks the fatal question, "Who killed you?" and while he is waiting for the answer he receives a death blow in the back mysteriously as his friend did. Lights are flashed on and the light fails to reveal the murderer or his weapon of death.

Thirteen scared people eye each other, trying to fathom which is the murderer of Edward Wales.

The police are notified and a quiet investigation ensues. Suspicion rests on Helen O'Neil, for it was she who sat next to the slain man and it was her hand that he held in death's grasp.

It develops, further, that Wales and Madame LaGrange hatched this seance, wrote and rehearsed it, to trap the murderer and madame failed to carry out her part of the bargain in mentioning the name of "Helen" (whom Wales suspected) to shield her daughter.

All this the police know and they promptly arrest the girl as the alleged murderess. But they reckon without Rosalie. She puts up a heroic fight, and step by step she turns the evidence toward one Philip Mason, the other hand partner of the victim. In the darkness of the scene of the crime madame, knowing well that her powers of seeress are nil, calls on the Supreme One to help her, and he guides her eyes to the ceiling, where the culprit threw the knife after the deed.

Then she calls them into the room and demands the guilty person confess. Mason, thinking she knows of his guilt, blurts out his confession, and the play ends.

Mrs. Pyre assumed the part of the aged medium and put her best in the role. Mr. Pyre was the murderer and Mr. Clarenden was the victim. Both men were splendid. Mr. Lytton made the part of the police inspector a natural one, while Mr. Wade and Miss Read did the lovers admirably. Mr. Castle, however, should be more familiar with his lines, for in this excellent company his "winging" is quite perceptible. The balance of the cast conducted themselves excellently.

This week Pyre's Popular Players are showing Beulah Poynter's "Lena Rivers."

What C. E. W. said about the small orchestra last week is heartily endorsed by this writer.

ALLEN YORK.

WILSON AVENUE THEATER

Out north, in the heart of "Little Paree," there is a stock company that weekly changes its bill of latest Broadway releases.

This last week they took a journey up state o' Maine way when they produced the rural "Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm."

This quaint, appealing play was the means of introducing the dainty Edith Talliaferro (sister of the famous Mabel) as a featured player both in America and abroad. And the possibilities of the character of Rebecca have not only tested the juvenile qualifications of numerous "talkie" actresses, but "Our Mary" (Pickford) cinema-ed it in the "movies."

It is a long jump from Sheldon's "Romance" (the last piece this writer saw the players do) to "Rebecca," but the players did it with agility, and while pastoral dramas do not appeal to the Wilson avenue clientele so well as the rollicking farces, musical comedies and drama, the people concerned "put over" the Wiggins work with good effect. It is the most difficult thing in the world to know just which piece to pick to please the weekly attendance, and therefore the "Rebecca" blunder will soon be forgotten in "The Gypsy Trail," Robert Houseman's new play, that had a Cort theater run last winter, and "Here Comes the Bride," the screaming Colonial theater success.

Olive Templeton, who created a newspaper furor as "Cavellini" in "Romance," did remarkably well as Rebecca; her assumption of juvenile deportment and talk was carefully thought out, but her really best work was in the last act as the full grown "Swan," instead of the three acts of "The Ugly Duckling." Douglas Dumbrille was Mr. Aladdin, and an excellent foil for Miss Templeton. Allan Ramsey made the old stage driver an appealing figure, while Arthur Holman (The Director), gave a good account of the rascally Abner Simpson. His wife (Kathryn Givney) was excellently portrayed. Helen Empton and Louis Bartels played the country lovers, and Adah Sherman made the village gossip a realistic one.

The last time we saw the piece, Anne Kenyon did the "soft hearted" Aunt Jane, but now she has been promoted to "She of the Iron Heart," and made the most of the promotion. Aside from a most unlovable makeup and a hideous wrapper, Paula Verne carried the part of Aunt Jane successfully. The Riverboro children were in good hands.

ALLEN YORK.

AT THE MAJESTIC

At the Majestic Theater on last Monday night there was a big, sullen grand piano on the stage more often than any one other factor.

The program stated that this was a Steinway, but it might just as well have been a Kimball, or anything else, so far as the tone was concerned.

To begin with, it was but little better than the cheapest sort of an old upright, and at the close it resembled nothing on earth (in tone) so much as a cracked dish pan.

It was played (or pounded) by three pianists during the evening, and the last, being the worst, finished it up in good shape.

Never has there been worse piano playing at the Majestic than at this time—and that is saying something.

There were two good acts on the bill, one top-notcher, several of medium grade (including, probably, the performing animals—four legged—and the "pictures," which were not seen by this writer), and two very bad, indeed.

The Majestic, once upon a time, announced with flourish of trumpets that it was dedicated to the very highest grade of vaudeville and that nothing immoral or unchaste would ever be permitted on its stage.

During its first years, under the management of the late Lyman Glover, it pretty nearly came up to that promise.

At present (this week, at least) it exploits some acts which would make the Kedzie Theater blush for shame, and, as for vulgarity, that is a factor which has become so common as to pass without remark.

The worst offender in this line on Monday was Jack Rose, who was announced as a "specialist for the blues." He is—he would give anybody the blues. He is associated with Mike Bernard, a "recognized peer of pianists," according to the bill.

He is, distinctly, the peer of Khartum, a pianist who appeared earlier in the program and whose playing constituted the one worst act of the bill.

Khartum is announced as the "famous Persian pianist" and appeared in like costume.

He played the "Famous Octave March," which turned out to be the Racozky March of Liszt, his manipulation being so atrocious as regards tonal quality and pedaling as to make him notable, indeed, and his exploitation of the Leschetizky arrangement "for left hand alone" of the "Lucia" Sextet was at a point of insecurity and false notes which has not been excelled in any pupils' concert in Chicago in years, and that is saying much, inasmuch as "Lucia" has served on countless hundreds of programs in that length of time.

For "encore" (save the mark) he played some of the most trashy popular music yet perpetrated, and did it, not on a wager, but probably for purely commercial reasons, as the name of one of the trashiest of trashy music publishers was noted on the music propped up on the racks of the musicians of the orchestra—parenthetically, a good orchestra, if not allowed to play at full forte all the time (which it was on Monday).

To take up the medium grade acts:

The most elaborate and possibly the best was Lucille Cavanagh, who had fine scenery and dressing to bolster up her slight talents. She announced, preliminarily, that she could not sing, and afterwards proved it to the entire satisfaction of every member of the audience. She might truthfully have said that Mr. Doner and Mr. Sexton, two attractive boys who assisted her, could not sing either. One of them (Sexton, I think) has a good natural voice and definite method, but his tone is still too weak for public use. The other one is impossible.

Miss Cavanagh and these young men did some elaborately staged and costumed dancing—rather rough and tumble than aesthetic, but good enough, probably, as such dancing goes.

Eddie Foyer, announced as "the man of a thousand poems," read two, and prefaced these with some droll talk, interspersed with great wit. For instance, he imitated a restaurant waiter calling his orders to the cook: "Garden in the rain—make it 'run'" was the translation for "Vegetable soup in a hurry," and "a bunch of violets—pin on a rose" was the interpretation for a Limburger cheese sandwich with a piece of onion "on the side."

The audience, having laughed itself into hysterics over these choice titbits, was then regaled with a wild west reading, in which Mr. Foyer yelled himself hoarse, with appropriate posture and gesture. Also, he wore the correct costume and had such regard for verisimilitude that he even remembered to have his arm tatooed in deference to the Woolly Miner Man he was depicting.

He forgot, however, to leave off his fine gold watch chain, and the hand with which he caressed his (supposedly) empty stomach sported a large and obviously costly diamond.

By request he gave, as encore, the famous "Laska," and in this was distinctly tragic.

"Here," said he, with a wink to the drummer in the orchestra, "here is where we make 'em weep." As a matter of fact, there was not a wet eye in the house when he had finished.

The Three Kitaro Brothers (Japanese) were really skillful in their tumbling act, though it is not customary, in a first class house, to witness a "fall down" such as occurred in one moment of the act.

A really bright spot, swift and interesting was the playlet, "A Regular Business Man," in which Tom Martin proved himself talented and clever, and proved also that he knows how to choose proper associates.

The sketch itself is as bright a bit as has been seen on the dull vaudeville stage for many weeks.

And this leads us, by natural and logical degrees, to the one best number—the real reason why anyone may be sure of some entertainment at the Majestic this week. This one reason is Llora Hoffman. Known in Chicago as Llora Withers, this soprano also has the reputation of being one of the best singers who have lived here during the past decade. She sang here in the best churches and in many fine concerts.

For two or three years she has been a resident of New York and for several months has been fulfilling engagements in the biggest vaudeville houses as far west as California, with the greatest of success.

In my opinion she is vastly too good for vaudeville as it is conducted today, but she likes it. The audiences, tired of so much tommy-rot as they are compelled to swallow, like her artistry for a change, and therefore everybody is happy.

Miss Hoffman is the most strikingly beautiful woman who ever sung in vaudeville to my knowledge, and this is not forgetting Fritzi Scheff or Emma Calve.

Also, Miss Hoffman has come to vaudeville in the very heyday of her powers and not as a singer who has worn herself out in other lines.

A perfect symphony of beauty and grace she appeared on Monday. She understands posturing, costuming and graciousness of manners.

And, she can sing.

This writer does not agree with her repertoire, nor always with her accompanist. They might be worse, however.

No coloratura can make a more vivid impression with "Ah, fors e lui" ("Traviata") than did she on Monday, for it was clear, cold and brilliant, just as it should be.

And it had great volume and fine shading.

In contrast, "Mighty Lak' a Rose" (Nevin) was done at a point of tenderness and musical beauty which has not been excelled.

The rest of the numbers used are unworthy of Miss Hoffman. But, if vaudeville could have a few more such real artists, if such singing as that done by this soprano could be heard often enough to become standard on that stage, or if the majority of the women were of the intelligence, refinement, beauty and style which belong to Miss Hoffman, then indeed could one go to vaudeville with constant pleasure.

POWERS THEATER

That sterling character actress, May Robson, is enjoying an extended summer engagement of her latest vehicle, "A Little Bit Old Fashioned" at the Powers Theater.

She terms her play a melodramatic farce, and, like her former plays, it enables her to enjoy some rare comedy situations.

However, too, it abounds with pathos.

After the flood of "dear old lady" parts this last few seasons, the public has been dubious that the playwright could go on forever writing entertaining pastime on that subject; therefore, Miss Robson's season started off negatively; but when the glad news spread that she was offering an equal to her meritorious "Aunt Mary," her admirers turned out, and the Powers is enjoying a regular winter season in midsummer.

The basic idea of a husband attaining success through the untiring efforts of his wife only to find that in the arrival at the top of the ladder he has outgrown her has been done to death, but somehow the situation of this proves a little different, and while she is dreadfully old-fashioned, he does not exactly dislike her, but is negligent and thoughtless. He (in this case, is a lawyer, the best in the country) is called upon to fathom the mysterious disappearance of a gem of great value, after every one else has failed. The gem disappeared while being worn by a society matron in her own home. J. Gordon Smith ("he found the Gordon when he came to the city") hires a female detective to pose as his wife and to go to the mansion to unearth the thief. In order that the lady may dress at his home and thus avoid suspicion, he plans to send Mary (that's his old-fashioned wife) to the country; but she misses the train, and when first the invitation, then a number of boxes come, and lastly the woman, she thinks it is about time she looked into the affair. The lady, mistaking Mary for a servant, demands she untie her (Mary mistook her for a burglar and locks her in a closet) and on finding who she is she relocks the door, dons the elegant evening wrap over her severe black dress, and departs for the mansion to face her husband who little dreams she is not on her way to the country.

On arriving, the butler seeing her black dress and white apron, thinks she is the new maid and (he is the crook) taken in by her elusive answers, imagines her to be in cahoots with his gang. Anyway the lights suddenly go out and a pearl necklace disappears. He slips it to her, and she into her black cloak, and when they line up the servants to search them the butler slips the missing gem in a glass of wine that Mary forgot to deliver. When Smith recognizes his wife among the servants arranged against the wall he chides her and sends her home. But Poor Mary! The excitement is too much, and she swoons, only to have her husband place the wine glass to her lips and she almost swallows the gem. Instead, she walks majestically out, a necklace and a priceless bauble to the good.

It develops that the lady detective is a partner of the thieving butler, and Mary shines again in smoothing out that wrinkle in the play, and when the curtain descends we find Smith willing to acknowledge his wife the best ever and the audience willing to swear that they nearly killed themselves laughing for the exciting moments were sprinkled with ludicrous situations.

Of course, the star is foremost in the cast. She makes you love the character she has drawn, and she sways the audience to laughter and tears at will. See the piece and we are sure you will agree that it is a play unhackneyed and well worth while, and above all there is not a suggestive line in the whole evening.

THE PROBLEM OF MUSIC IN THE RURAL COMMUNITY AFTER THE WAR

The war is having an effect, and a salutary one, on all phases of human activity in the United States, and it will no doubt have a positive influence on the so-called rural life problem in the south. It is only to be expected that as a result of the broader conception and wider outlook of life that the young men from the open country are gaining in the training camps, they will demand a richer life on the farm when they return home. I, therefore, venture to predict that the close of the war will witness a demand for more and for better music in the smaller centers of population. Music educators should, therefore, give some thought to a problem that is bound to arise in this connection, namely, by what means and through what agency this demand shall be met. Let us remember here that more than 85 per cent of the people of the south are on the farm; that the sole opportunity they have for hearing music is an occasional doleful hymn at the church or singing school; that secular songs, folk songs and national songs are practically unknown; that country people are the greatest and most genuine lovers of music anywhere to be found; and that the educational institutions of the south, particularly the normal schools and state universities, are as yet giving the matter but very little attention.

The writer recently attended a conference on rural life problems organized by the United States Bureau of Education. The meetings were held in one of the largest normal schools in the south. For three days men of prominence discussed every phase of country life, the home, the school, the church, etc. The predominant note in all the discussions was the oportunity and the duty of the rural school teacher to promote the welfare of the community. The head of the music department of this school did not attend a single session of the conference. Why should he do so? For a very cogent reason. This school exists primarily to prepare teachers and leaders for country communities, and the music department of the school has a hand in the making of these teachers and leaders. It must be clear to anyone at all familiar with the situation that the country school teacher is the only hope, and I say "only" advisedly, to the solution of the problem of music in the village and small country town, and that so long as this person is unable to carry music to the country home, church and school conditions will remain practically as they now are. It must furthermore be evident that if the country school teacher is unprepared to inaugurate and to carry on this propaganda, the fault lies with the music departments of the schools where the teacher received his or her training.

What type of musical activities should the teacher in the rural school be able to introduce, and what kind of preparation should he or she receive? I have gathered from various sources a number of instances of what some country school teachers have done and are doing for music in their districts, and one may deduce an answer from these cases.

A teacher in a county high school writes:

JAMES GODDARD SINGING BEFORE A MONSTER AUDIENCE AT SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

After a long post-opera concert season throughout the country Mr. Goddard went to his home in the South for a vacation, and has now returned to Chicago and will, throughout the summer, sing for "the boys" in many camps.

"Our community singing is coming along first rate. We have had three meetings thus far, and the interest is increasing. I am very much pleased with the interest the folks are taking in it. As to the musical selections, we are using some of our national songs, such as "America," "Star Spangled Banner," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," etc. We also use some sacred songs, some old ones, and some new ones. I find that this community has an abundance of musical talent if given a chance to use it. I hope that by the close of the year we can have a most excellent musical organization."

Another teacher writes:

"Realizing the lack of interest taken in music by the general public, especially our school boards, when I took charge of music in the County High School I determined to do all in my power to improve conditions and to awaken an interest in school music. In my high school work I found boys and girls hungry for music, and who had never heard anything better than the stuff taught by the country singing school teacher, who insists on using shaped notes and who thinks "Onward, Christian Soldiers" too difficult and classical to sing. I have seen these boys and girls learn to love the best choral pieces, opera, Chopin, Schumann and Beethoven. I have taken them to concerts and have seen their eyes brighten with that glorious light that good music alone can bring."

This same teacher recently conducted a memory contest in music appreciation in her school. Fifteen records were played and the pupils were required to write the names of the compositions, composer of each, and the artist's name. Among the fifteen records were the following, in a rural school:

"Surprise Symphony," "Hungarian Dance, No. 5," "Fourth Symphony" (Tschaikovsky), "Erl King" (Schubert), etc. One hundred pupils took part in the contest and sixteen received grades above 90 per cent.

A girl teaching a one-room school writes:

"About four years ago I began to teach some music in my school. This gradually grew into 'home' singing one night every week and we began to give musical entertainments. But we had no piano and we decided to get one. We put it into the church, which was right across from the schoolhouse, because this made the instrument more accessible to all and we could also use it for church service. We are paying for the piano with money raised from entertainments of various kinds, and suppers. The instrument made it possible for us to start a choir in the church and church attendance has improved remarkably."

I do not for a moment fail to appreciate or to realize the great amount of good that various musical organizations and other similar agencies are doing or might do for music in the small centers of population. But all such efforts are but occasional and infrequent. Permanent results are only possible through the continued efforts of a person constantly in touch and in sympathetic understanding with the people, and the sole person thus qualified is the rural school teacher.

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD TEACHERS BRING PUPILS FROM JOLIET, AURORA, QUINCY, ILL., FOR A MUSIC TEST

The Effa Ellis Perfield Music School has had four very interesting "Music Tests" within the last three weeks. These were given for the benefit of the teachers attending Summer School in order that they might see what pupils have accomplished under the tuition of teachers who use the Perfield pedagogy and be able to return to their studios and conduct similar tests. Another reason for these tests is to give Mrs. Perfield the opportunity of giving constructive criticisms on the teachers' work.

These tests are real lessons. Pupils are not coached for them. Mrs. Perfield believes the pupil's development should be measured by his self-expression, spontaneity and correlation of his three educational senses. Some of these tests were conducted by Mrs. Perfield, but the last tests were by the teachers under whose tuition the pupils had been developed.

Miss Lucy Thacher of Chicago presented a most interesting class, the personnel of which was as follows:

Isette Davis, 9 years.
Edith Routliff, 11 years.
Charles Nebel, 11 years.
Elizabeth Reiner, 11 years.
William Gardner, 11 years.
Irene Hahn, 12 years.
Hazel Rahn, 13 years.

LUCY THACHER AND CLASS

They opened the test with an original class yell—

Boom! Rah, rah, rah!
Boom! Rah, rah, rah!
Are we in it?
Well we guess!
We've the Perfield System,
Yes! Yes! Yes!

Miss Thacher's manner in handling her class was very pleasing. She had poise and self-control and her pupils demonstrated each of the seven subjects with inner-feeling and assurance of understanding. They were alert and responsive in their drills.

Miss Lucy Spencer of Columbia Conservatory, Aurora, Ill., presented five students:

Mary Shults, age 6 years.
Jane Kelley, 7 years.
Harrison Condon, 10 years.
William Willette, 10 years.
Margaret Mighell, 12 years.

The work of the 6 and 7 year old pupils was especially interesting and proved that Miss Spencer has developed herself as well as her pupils into a "naturalness" that should be the goal of every true teacher. The tests given covered reading, rhythm, harmony, sight singing, improvising and dictation. The original compositions were very good. One small boy called his piece "The End of a Perfect Day" because it was so much fun fitting the bass to the melody.

MINNIE SHAW AND CLASS

Miss Minnie Shaw of Joliet, Ill., presented six students, who with one selected for the leader went through their various subjects in a way that would do credit to a well schooled Perfield teacher.

Mary Barr, the class president, called for the different subjects according to inner-feeling, reasoning and drills. Caroline Stun, Mary Weeks and Frances Wood developed the staff from the nature tone, through the neumes fly track notation, Gregorian staff, etc., to the grand staff. In turn each played an original melody and wrote the rhythms on the blackboard. Grace Thalberg presented the chord test, and Mary Louise Schuster played some chord sentences. The last part of their test consisted of original compositions and the analysis of them. The first group, an "Indian War Dance" and a "Waltz," by Mary Schuster, the rhythm of which was written on the blackboard by

LUCY SPENCER CLASS

Grace Thalberg. Second group, two very good chorals, was played by the composer, Lydia Langford.

Miss Maude Emmick presented two students. One little girl spelled eighty-four chords in one minute and a half. Although this was a shorter time than the little boy spelled them in last week, she did not spell them without having to correct herself, which was proof that her concentration and poise and self-control were not as perfect. However, both students demonstrated a well balanced development which must finally result in musicianship.

ENGLISH OPERA COMIQUE FOR NEW YORK

Eight Weeks of Popular Opera Comique to Be Launched in Fall by Society of American Singers

The first whisper of opera for next season has just been heard. The Society of American Singers has definitely completed arrangements to offer opera comique in English.

On September 30 the society will begin a season of not less than eight weeks of their repertoire at the Park Theater. William Wade Hinshaw, president of the society of American Singers, has signed arrangements for the most ambitious attempt to carry on American music.

"We believe that the public is eager to have an opera company of all Americans and only Americans," said Mr. Hinshaw, as he was leaving for his farm at DeRuyter, N. Y., where he will spend the summer before the season. "There are more big American singers of artistic worth than any foreign nation can boast. Why not use them? The Metropolitan uses them—why not only them?

"But that is not the point at issue. We believe the American public wants a season of opera comique—the great midway stop between grand opera and musical comedy. Thousands in the city are longing to hear the operas included in our repertoire. Their lovely melodies and rollicking rhythms are glorious to ears which once heard them, and to ears which have been hoping to.

"We believe that the public wants the productions staged not lavishly, but in finest taste. They want great artists, a good theater—and while they don't want to pay $6 a seat, are perfectly willing to pay regular theatrical prices.

"Believing these things to be, we are taking this important step. It remains for the American public to show whether as worthy an institution will have big support."

The Society of American Singers is in its second year. It is entirely co-operative. The artists give their services; there are guarantors for the initial expenses. The singers will not be paid unless the expenses have been covered, and the profits will be divided among the artists. The roster of members of the society scarcely overlooks a prominent American singer. It includes Paul Althouse, Elizabeth Althouse, David Bispham, Walter L. Bogert, Ernest T. Carter, Mrs. S. Hoxie Clark, Vera Curtis, Rafaelo Diaz, Geraldine Farrar, Lucy Gates, Mabel Garrison, Julia Heinrich, George Hamlin, William Wade Hinshaw, Louise Homer, Kathleen Howard, Percy Hemus, Karl Jern, Otto H. Kahn, Margaret Keyes, Willard V. King, Florence Macbeth, Francis Maclennan, Marie Mattfield, Edith B. Mason, Arthur Middleton, Heinrich Meyn, Albert Reiss, Lila P. Robeson, Marie Rappold, Graham Reed, George C. Riggs, Kate D. Riggs, May Scheider, Marie Sundelius, James Speyer, Maggie Teyte, Charles Triller, Herbert Witherspoon, Reinald Werrenrath, Clarence Whitehill.

The fall repertoire at the Park Theater numbers the following: "Fra Diavolo" by Auber, "A Daughter of the Regiment" by Donizetti, "Mignon" by Thomas, "Seraglio" by Mozart, "Impresario" by Mozart, "Tales of Hoffman" by Offenbach, "Mr. Bruschine" by Rossini, "Romeo and Juliette" by Gounod, "Bianca" (Hinshaw prize opera) by Hadley, "Chimes of Normandy" by Planquette, "L'Enfant Prodigue" by Debussy, "Juggler of Notre Dame" by Massenet, "Phocbus and Pan" by Bach, "Les Precieuse Ridicules" by Goetzl, "Philemon and Baucis" by Gounod, "Christina a la Camerra" and "Paul and Virginia" by Masse.

Last year the society produced some artistic operas of an ancient day. The "Maid Mistress," by Pergolesi, was very successful, but the people at large hadn't the quickening of interest which they must feel in knowing that at last they will have these beautiful light operas for reasonable rates —and in English, to be understood. No foreign tongue; no tongue which cannot make clear its words.

Everything points to a success that is unprecedented, due to the larger place music is taking in every day city life. It is anticipated that a large part of the house will be subscribed for, from 50 cents to the $2.50 seats. The officers of the Society of American Singers are: William Wade Hinshaw, president and general manager; David Bispham, first vice president; Charles Triller, second vice president; Herbert Witherspoon, secretary and treasurer; George Hamlin, assistant manager; Charles D. Isaacson is known as the "people's representative" and represents the seat holders at the board meetings.

Just as Paris has had its Opera Comique Theater, so eventually will New York, with a patriotic company of singers furthermore.

MR. CASALS' OPINIONS

The source of an artist's inspiration is a question of ever fresh interest. Inspiration is as indispensable a part of the equipment of an artist as temperament, for it is around these two intangibles that the layman builds up the atmosphere of romance and mystery with which he surrounds the artistic character.

Pablo Casals, when speaking of the greatest source of his inspiration, answered without hesitation:

"That which colors one's whole life and influences it more than anything else are the strong impressions of childhood. It is then that the traditions of one's race, told in simple stories and songs by the mother or nurse, take strong roots that are never effaced, no matter what the conditions or circumstances of life may be. It is not only that we remember those moments but, because of their peace and beauty, they bind us to the past of our people and make of us a link between it and the future. It is thus that the spirit of a country is forever alive and renewed.

"And what can be more expressive of the spirit of a people than their folk music? That untrammeled form of music which has grown out of the spontaneous expression of their emotional life and which reflects their very soul is the greatest national heritage for a musician. On this depends his power to move other men. None of the schools, no perfection of technic can give him that power, for it is something that cannot be acquired.

"If he has drunk deep out of that music, if it has become part of the very fibre of his being, there is a communion between him and a whole people, something unconscious, stronger than reason or understanding, creating a subtle bond with other men that makes of them vibrant instruments to his touch."

———♯♯♯———

Amsbury—Theo M. Amsbury has recently played in four towns near Chicago in Red Cross benefit concerts, which were very successful, both musically and financially. Others who performed were William P. Carleton, New York, baritone, and Mrs. Green, Chicago soprano, the latter being a pupil of Agnes Leist Beebe. The locales of the concerts were Crystal Lake, Carson City, Ithaca and Alma.

Belmar, N. J.

It is a habit now. It is no longer the fashion to spend the summer overseas. The newspapers fill no more columns with news that Mr. X and Mme. Y "went to the

AUGUSTE BOUILLIEZ
Belgian Baritone

Riviera or Nice for the summer," so city business people, musicians, artists and all who can afford to spend a dollar for a recuperation in the country, go to the Jersey shore and the neighboring summer resorts, Maine, Long Island, Connecticut and the mountains. And, if in the opinion of a few, these summer resorts do not compare with the European ones, they nevertheless are beautiful spots and an easy way to avoid the torrid heat. In my brief journey around the watering places, I have noted the absence of music; perhaps no one cares to hear it in this time of the year; others are eager, but they will wait patiently until the bells ring again in the fall. Belmar is a cozy little place, and many musicians enjoy their vacations here. While promenading among the bungalows, cottages and simple houses, you are liable to hear some strains of music emanating either from the human organ or some instrument. It was inevitable, therefore, in my daily walks that I should hear the great Max Gegna playing on the cello, and extracting beautiful music out of the instrument on which he excels. He is hard at work on violin transcriptions for his cello, and next season we shall hear him. From a distance I heard the superb tenor voice of the Russian, Leone Zinovieff. He has gained in power, so he said. Perhaps Belmar did it. Our colleague from the Musical Courier, Mr. Harry Osgood, also finds inspiration in this summer resort. Oscar Spirescu left the Strand baton for two weeks, and here he is considering what new pieces ought to be played at his New York movie house. Roger De Bruyn, tenor, is resorting here. Eugene Bernstein coaches here and has many future singing birds in his class who will some day take flights in the operatic or concert field. Mr. Carpi of the Metropolitan comes to Belmar from Spring Lake (15 minutes) to pay friendly tributes to local admirers. Alexander Kahn, the new Campanini secretary, is sojourning here, not minding the next fall's opera season. There is no complaint about seeing your old friends here; on the contrary, close ties are the results of sojourning in the country town, away from tempestuous New York, and every one is glad to be away for a while from the eternal noise of the metropolis. Days go by without event. War is unknown here; only the service flags remind of some one who departed for overseas. Those wishing to hear real music may easily reach Ocean Grove by a 10 minute ride. Isn't it ideal? And are we not as happy over here as when spending the summers on the Old Continent? And while writing the present lines, the siren of the engine informs us of new arrivals. From the Overlook House (our quarters), those departing and those coming can be easily seen; few go; many come to stay for the summer. Automobiles creep in with new guests, and again we must add to our list a few Belmar arrivals of artists. There comes the beautiful, winsome, majestic figure of the charming Anna Fitziu, reminding irresistibly of "La Tosca," and after a while the monocled De Segurola of the Metropolitan, and finally the good, healthy looking tenor, Leonid Samoloff. Inevitably one meets these song birds, who once migrated to Enghein, Aix Les Bains, Spa, etc. This is what the war has done, and surely this makes for prosperity in America.

"Hearts of the World"—A Movie Production

Nothing hinders the movie fan from flocking to his favorite amusement place; the heat is no obstacle to his desires; the thermometer climbs, but the movie fan continues to gaze on the screen. If the amusement seeker would be as eager for music, literature and drama, the percentage of them would help the higher arts; but the populace understands not the value of refined entertainments, and the movie producers have no difficulty in filling their halls; movies have hindered the progress of the professional theater, though the latter at its present stage can boast little of being an educational channel. D. W. Griffith, a lover of costly, huge, bombastic productions, went to the red battlefields of Europe, collected souvenirs, photographed actions, employed his eyes in seeing things, and then returned to our shores, where he is now showing "Hearts of the World." You will find immense variety in this film: Romance in plenty for those who still believe in it, in spite of our ultra-materialistic days; adventures for those who find life rather a monotonous affair; war, to stimulate our belief in freedom for all. Some critics decried the film as being a bit exaggerated and far from truth. There may be some exaggeration, but "Hearts of the World" will never surpass the realities perpetrated by a boasting race of bloody "kultur." Those who were stirred by "My Four Years in Germany" will again have a sob in the heart, will find their pulsations increased and their anger multiplied by "Hearts of the World." The pacifists whose motto can be characterized as being the perpetrators of continual wars should take a few quarters out of their pockets and see "Hearts of the World." The production is huge, costly, magnificent, stirring, emotional. The photography is a masterpiece, and for once, perfectly clear to the eyes. As said above, nothing hinders the movie fan. The film attracts large audiences at the Forty-fourth street theater.

Belgium Feted at the Stadium

After the Fourth of July and the Bastille celebrations, the little valiant nation came in for a share of honors and festivities by our American public. On Sunday, July 21, New York celebrated with Belgium officially, while in the evening a large audience assembled at the Stadium to participate in a musical program with purely Belgian artists. Seven thousand people or more listened to the musical program of the orchestra, conducted by Arnold Volpe and soloists; Alice Verlet, formerly of the Paris Opera; Auguste Bouilliez, baritone, formerly of the Theatre Monnaie of Brussels; Octave Duo, tenor, of the Chicago Opera; Carlo Liten, the famous Belgian actor, and Julia Skolnik, first violinist of the Stadium Orchestra. On this occasion Mr. Bouilliez sang the "Albert First" aria from his own pen and for the first time in America. Several speeches were tendered, and great enthusiasm prevailed.

The Rivoli and the Rialto

The week ending July 28 the audience was as large as ever, and this in spite of the tropical heat. Selections from "Trovatore" were conducted by Rappe. Mlle. D'Espinay and Mr. Bettini sang the prison scene from the same opera. Greek Evans, baritone, sang "My Angel of the Flaming Cross," by Byron Gay. The organist, Mr. Swinnen, played "Marche Solonnelle," by Alphonse Mailly. As a popular offering, Emmerich Kalman's "Sari" was played by the orchestra. The Rialto for the same week played the overture from "Fra Diavolo," by Auber, and conducted by Mr. Risenfeld. De Koven's "O Paradise," from "L'Africaine," by Meyerbeer, soprano. Carlos Mejia, tenor, sang "O, Paradise," from "L'Africiane," by Meyerbeer. The orchestra also played the waltz from "Eugen Anegin," by Tschaikowsky. Mr. Depew was at the organ.

Max Rosen Delights Vacationists at Ocean Grove, New Jersey

From a nest of violinists on Lake George, the youthful Max crossed the state line for Ocean Grove, where vacationists numbering three thousand awaited him on the evening of July 25. With the exception of the great Salt Lake Tabernacle and the Chicago Coliseum, the Ocean Grove Auditorium is perhaps the largest hall in the country, with a seating capacity of not less than ten thousand. Even in the country your foe, the "heat," pursues you; perhaps not with the same force as in New York, but lucky on this occasion the weather was clement and therefore the concert the more enjoyable. Some people get sunburned, including the artists. Max had the same healthy-colored cheeks, and the same brilliant complexion as when he played at Carnegie hall; perhaps he spent only a few hours at the Lake George beach, while the balance of the day was spent in practicing. Vacationists from Long Branch, Belmar, and the neighboring resorts came to listen to him. Many perhaps heard him for the first time. Others were old admirers. But the ovation tendered to him after each number was proof of delight, and in our circles we call this a brilliant success. He opened the evening with a rendition of the "Chaconne" by Vitali, followed by the first movement from Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," and finally, compelled by the applause, played the "Ave Marie" (Schubert). Other pieces in his program were "Idyl" (Cecil Burleigh), "Slavonic Dance" (Dvorak-Kreisler), and "Caprice Basque" (Sarasate). He gave many encores. It is desirable to eliminate all encores, which are forced by the audiences. The latter should "Hooverize" lights and avoid any prolongation of a concert. The artist also should be more thrifty. We hope that curtailments of useless minutes will be beneficial to everybody. Mr. Rosen's technic was again a point of admiration, approaching perfection; his tone was equally clear, pure and large, in spite of the hall's size; Devoid of nervousness, calm and poised, Rosen handled his bow with a greater degree of surety than in the past, for with more appearances the control of the instrument is attaining perfection. He was given cordial applause and he well deserved it. Lucy Gates, another soloist, again pleased with her lovely voice, and Mr. George Barere, the flutist, gave us cause for having enjoyed his masterful handling of the instrument.

MAX ROSEN

Caruso-Carolina White at Ocean Grove

This concert was attended by the writer on the evening of July 27, and nearly nine thousand people were present. Of the Metropolitan tenor I have often written. Carolina White seems to have declined a bit in vocal powers since her appearances in light opera. It is said that she is to appear with the Chicago Opera forces, and perhaps at that time we will be able to note a change for the better; meanwhile we may think of her once famous interpretation of Maliella in the "Jewels of Madonna."

The San Carlo Opera

The four weeks' season of Mr. Gallo's company will be opened in New York on Sept. 2. Maestro Gaetorno Merola, formerly of the Manhattan Opera Company, will be at the baton.

Rossetter G. Cole at the Columbia University

The invitation to Mr. Cole's lecture reached me one day after the event. I am, therefore, not in position to give a full account. The program is hereby reprinted and hope some other lecture will be extensively reviewed. On July 24, at 4:30 p. m., Mr. Cole gave a lecture on "The Melodrama as a Modern Music Form," illustrated by his musical settings to "King Robert of Sicily," "Hiawatha's Wooing" and "Pierrot Wounded." The event took place at Horace Mann auditorium of the Columbia University. Mrs. Cole was at the piano.

AMERICAN ARTISTS' CONVENTION

An announcement just received from Lockport, N. Y., lists the following people for appearance at the American Artists', Composers' and Managers' Festival at Lockport, N. Y., the first week of September:

American Festival Chorus, Alfred Jury, Conductor.
Apollo Male Quartet of Boston.
Special Children's Chorus.
American Student Symphony Orchestra, Lynn B. Dana, Conductor.
Chicago Ensemble Trio.
The Artists' Ensemble Trio of Pittsburgh.

Organ Accompaniment in the Church Service

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE MINNESOTA STATE MUSIC TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

By G. A. THORNTON

In undertaking to deal with such a weighty subject as "Musical Accompaniment," I know that I am incurring the risk of having the accusation thrown at me, "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." In spite of all this risk, I have decided to give you in a short and, I hope, lucid manner, the result of some twenty-five years' practical experience in the field as a church organist. The views expressed are, in the main, my own personal opinions, and you are at liberty either to agree with what I say or to dissent from it.

The subject of "Musical Accompaniment" is one of great interest to the thoughtful musician, especially if he also happen to be an organist. Necessarily, it may be regarded from more than one point of view—the historical, the orchestral, the standpoint of musical composition. All these deserve and will repay consideration, but perhaps, naturally, the organist, having regard to his daily task, will focus his interest upon the practical aspect of the subject, and consider its bearing upon his more immediate work—the work which engages his efforts and thoughts week by week and day by day.

This practical consideration largely regains in value, if a glance be taken at the past. It will serve to give a right perspective and provide a logical basis on which to pursue the study. As we know, the preharmonic period of music was essentially vocal and, though there are ample references in the Scripture records to "instruments of music," it is improbable that these served more than a rhythmical purpose, or to afford varieties in tone color. At a latter period, however, it is an ascertained fact that ancient Greek poets rhapsodized in a haphazard way often to the accompaniment of a lyre or a flute "improvisatori" and the troubadors of southern France. But this was long before the time of written music. The "cold chain of silence" has long hung over this oldtime music and we can only conjecture as to its scope and nature. But passing down the centuries we find no attempt at musical accompaniment, or, more strictly speaking, independent accompaniment, until the sixteenth century. Slightly prior to this we find writers of Madrigals "apt for voices of viols," and though presumably they were more often sung than played by viols, it is quite possible that in course of time they were performed by voices and instruments simultaneously. But, of course, this was only an accompaniment to the extent of merely doubling the parts.

The earliest examples of English church music are after this model and they undoubtedly paved the way for the first attempts at independent accompaniments, which are to be found in the works of Tallis (1529), Gibbons (1583), etc. These are the earliest instances of what may be termed "obbligato" accompaniments as distinct from the earlier "ad Libitum" accompaniments and which, as we have already seen, were mere doublings.

The titles of some of these early works are very suggestive—"Tallis in D, organ part varied," "Te Deum, William Tallis, with variations for the organ," and so forth. These instrumental parts consist of a running commentary, as it were, of the voice part—running in more senses than one, for they contain trills, runs and sundry embellishments which are by no means easy to play, and which to modern ears sound quite grotesque. There can be little doubt that they were not intended at first as accompaniments at all, but as adaptations or "transcriptions" like those of the present day, and it is interesting to note that they served the purpose of organ voluntaries, and, indeed, may be said to be the beginning of that well worn and much abused art form. One of the earliest specimens of this "obligato" organ accompaniment is that in the opening of Gibbons' Te Deum in D minor, but it is unnecessary to pursue this aspect of the question further.

I am sorry that I am unable to place before you some examples of the works I have quoted, but an examination of any of those mentioned will prove of interest.

Most of us are acquainted with the style of Henry Purcell's (1658) organ accompaniments, which mark a great advance on those of the writers of the previous century. His experience in orchestral writing undoubtedly influenced his church works, and his "Te Deum and Jubilate," as far as their accompaniment is concerned, would be regarded in his day pretty much as Wagner's scores are at the present time. To what extent Purcell and the English church composers who came immediately after him were influenced by orchestral development it is unnecessary to inquire—but their accompaniments, though still interlarded with curious ornaments and trills, show the steady progress toward independence which may be traced through the works of Battishill (1738); Attwood, and on through to W. Almisley, Elvey, Goss, S. S. Wesley, Ouseley, Stainer and others to the present day. Having very briefly traced the historical development of musical accompaniments, we may now consider the manner in which orchestral writing has been reflected, not only in accompanying writing for the organ, but also in accompaniment or accompanying playing on the instrument. So long as what we may term the Handel Orchestra had its vogue (1685-1759) there was a corresponding treatment of the organ. Without endorsing those superior people whose delight is to disparage Handel, one must admit that his long and powerful influence on the English speaking people was not without its disadvantages. Not only did contemporary and succeeding composers adopt his style to excess, but Handel worship became a kind of fetich. The gray monotony of his instrumentation induced by his excessive use of oboes and bassoons had its influence on the church writers of his day, and the small scale diapasons, unduly bright mixtures and coarse reeds in the Eighteenth Century organs were the concomitants of the prevailing scheme of orchestral color.

A workman is proverbially at the mercy of his tools, and the interludes and accompaniments of the anthems and service music of the period reveal the type of instrument for which they were written. Later, when the orchestra of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven appeared with its wonderful capacity for expressing beautiful ideas with limited means, we see a corresponding advance in the technic of organ writing, so far as accompaniments are concerned.

It is very interesting to observe the difference in effect between the instrumentation of the "Messiah" as Handel wrote it and the additions made by Mozart. Without justifying or discussing the artistic morality of one man altering or modifying another man's work, one cannot fail to note the increased warmth and more subtle expression as the result of Mozart's additions.

In like manner we cannot fail to notice the distinct advance in the style and material of such an anthem (I speak of the organ accompaniment) as Boyce's (1710-79) "I Have Surely Built Thee an House" and Attwood's (1767-1838) "I Was Glad." The latter was for some time a pupil of Mozart, and this will account in no small measure for his advance on his predecessors. I heard a well known authority once say that the man who had the most influence in affecting contemporary musical expressions and technical style was the great violinist, Spohr (1784-1859). I wonder if anyone ever thought of Spohr otherwise than as an exceptionally gifted violinist, who was exceedingly well equipped in other branches of the art. It would be idle to assume that he was in the front rank of composers or that his music was epoch-making, but I think his "ultra chromaticism"—call it mannerism, if you will—very largely increased the scope of this musical expression of which I have made mention, and I doubt whether such a work of genius as Samuel Sebastian Wesley's (1810-1876) anthem, "The Wilderness," would ever have been written had it not been that one Ludwig Spohr had lived and written some years previously. In this anthem surely accompaniment writing had swung to the other end of the pendulum from that of the early seventeenth century writers; indeed, it has been well said that the section, "Say Unto Them," is an organ solo with bass voice accompaniment.

My object has been to sketch in rough outline the progress of accompaniment writing, and to show the dependence of this, so far as the organ is concerned, with orchestral music. I am aware that the organ and the orchestra are two different and distinct titles, and I call to mind Berlioz' well known simile that they are both Kings, or, rather, one is Emperor and the other Pope, and I venture to say (this is my own opinion only) that the modern tendency to regard or treat the organ as a mere imitation of the orchestra is illogical and bound to fail. As has been well said, "The organ's basic principle rests upon the presence of the diapasons, whereas the orchestra's foundation is formed by the violin family—with their warm, nervous glow. The glory of the organ must always be its distinctive character and its own characteristic features as a complete work of art.

The consideration naturally leads us to that part of our subject which is, perhaps, of more strictly personal interest to us, namely, its practical aspect. The advance which has been made both in organ construction and the enlarged power of musical expression (I use the term in its largest sense) are not without danger, so far as the performer is concerned. I may say that I have no intention of dilating upon the evils of excessive word-painting and the producing of realistic effects, such as thunder, bird whistles, etc., neither shall I labor the well known chestnut about the organist who could illustrate the verse in the Psalms, "They grin like a dog and go about the city."

I believe the hooting of a steamer siren has lately been added to the list of the fearsome effects some mountebank organists affect, but I feel sure that all those to whom I am speaking will, with me, regard with contempt such vagaries. We have long ago put away childish things and we are not likely to play down to the gallery for a little cheap applause.

In passing, I must tell you of an experience I once had on the other side. I was one of a crowd of choirmasters who attended a series of choir lectures given by Dr. Naylor. At this lecture Dr. Naylor spoke of pictorial accompaniments—he was scathing in his remarks concerning the practice—said that no man of any semblance of refined taste would be guilty of such things. The lecture over, we ad-

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people.

This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

Clarence Whitehill Attacked

The attack launched upon Clarence Whitehill in the columns of Musical America is the sort of thing that we had hoped all the trade papers had foresworn. It has been a notorious fact that during the past year, when the unprejudiced newspapers have praised Mr. Whitehill, the columns of the trade paper in question have roasted him. Apparently Mr. Whitehill was not advertising sufficiently to please the champion of American musicians.—Musical Monitor.

Pauperizing Organizations

It has become common practice in recent years for requests to be made to public speakers to give lectures before prominent bodies of men without charge. The reason ascribed has been that "the good of the cause" warranted the donation of the speaker's services, and the publicity resultant on the event would recompense him for his effort. In quite a number of cases these requests have been acceded to, but the beneficial publicity has been strikingly absent.

The men who comprise these organizations are all men of wide experience. They ought to be well enough informed to know that "something for nothing" is an impossibility from a business standpoint, and that the fact that they ask for something for nothing puts them at once in the class of the pauper.

Lecturers should beware of lending their support to organizations of this kind. It is a fundamental of life that men who believe in fair dealing believe in giving value for what they receive. If an organization exists for the purpose of promoting fair dealing it will not seek something for nothing. It is a safe premise that if an organization is formed for the purpose of treating its members fairly, it will have fair dealing as its motto, and will not expect lecturers to give of their time and talents without recompense. If, on the other hand, an organization does not expect more than it pays for, a lecturer is accomplishing no good purpose in helping to consummate its desires.

Organizations will do well to remember, too, that the lecturer who is willing to give "something for nothing" is the type of lecturer to be avoided. He must get his recompense somewhere, and his only way to do this is to "put something over," in other words to sell them something they don't want. If he donates his time and talents he has a perfect right to use them as he pleases—to promote his own interests or the interests of his friends. If he sells his time and talents he obligates himself to use them to promote the interests of the buyer, and to give them real service.—The Platform.

Like Going Shopping in City of London

In this case you do not "go shopping" literally; the shop comes to you; steams up to you, if you are in one of the many fighting ships of the grand fleet that are keeping the German men-o'-war bottled up behind their land fortifications. This floating ship is the old-fashioned bumboat on a fine, modern scale.

The manager of one of the great London stores realized that there are tens of thousands of men in the grand fleet who, because of the fleet's ceaseless vigilance, have no opportunity to buy many articles, trifling, perhaps, but which go to make life more pleasant. So the manager fitted up an old tramp steamer as a shop, stocked it well, and with the admiralty's permission sent it to the otherwise forbidden waters of the North Sea.

This floating ship proceeds from ship to ship and lies alongside each for a few hours. It has been suggested, with memories of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore" in mind, that the shop be called "Little Buttercup," who had "ribbons and laces to set off the faces of pretty young sweethearts and wives." On this boat an officer or sailor of the grand fleet has soap and shaving utensils, a frame for his young woman's photograph and notepaper upon which to write to her, a sixpenny novel for the dog watches, or a deck hockey stick if he is among the number—some 90 per cent—of officers who indulge in this furious exercise. There is cocoa for the night watches and potted meat for tea. The pickle and canned delicacy department does a strong trade among the men, for, though rations are good and plentiful, they are not noted for their variety.

The barber shop in this seagoing emporium is working at high pressure all day long and the waiting list generally shows about thirty names.

—Chicago Daily News.

The Chicago Sales Managers' Club Refuses to Be Pauperized

We wish to place in the hall of fame one group of business men in the United States who do not ask something for nothing. It has become the custom for men who never give goods away to ask chautauqua, lyceum and theatrical people to give free service for a luncheon or dinner to men who are perfectly able to pay.

The Chicago Sales Managers' Association, made up of the executives of many of Chicago's leading industrial institutions, sets this matter in a different light.

Every speech is taken by stenographers and becomes a part of the permanent property of the club. Not a line of the speech is allowed to go to press without the speaker's consent. If he wants the speech for publication it is given him in typewritten form, and to secure accuracy three stenographers are used and notes compared.

On Monday night, June 17, when Mr. Edward Amherst Ott addressed the club, his invitation closed with this statement:

"At a meeting of this kind it is to be expected that you receive your usual fee, including expense of coming in."

We see no reason why business organizations, composed of practical, substantial and successful men, should pauperize themselves. The Moline Club, at Moline, Ill., pays its speakers regular fees and demands the right to discuss the speeches, and expects the man to answer questions and to defend any statements he may make before the club. The entire procedure in these two organizations is on the supposition that they are buying something and have a right to expect it to be delivered.—The Platform.

"Whose God Is the Belly"

In his letter to the Church of Philippi, the apostle Paul refers to certain persons "whose god is the belly." We fear the members of this cult are still alive and that some of them are among us today. We are in the midst of a great struggle for our dearly bought liberties, the issue of which depends upon the endurance and self sacrifice not only of our soldiers at the front, but of every man and woman in the nation. We have been assured by competent men who have made an expert study of the question that we are threatened with a world famine by reason of the great number of men in the belligerent countries who have been withdrawn from production since the beginning of the war, and that unless we practice the strictest economy, especially in the use of certain food products, such as wheat, meat, and sugar, there is grave danger that our soldiers may not receive a sufficient supply to keep up their strength.

And yet in the face of this peril and the sacrifices being made for them by our brave boys at the front, there are those among us who are apparently unwilling to deny themselves any luxury in the food line which they once enjoyed. The deprivation involved in a meatless or a wheatless meal or in giving up rich cake for a while, to conserve the supply of sugar, is so paltry in comparison to the sacrifices and sufferings of the men at the front that it brings the blush of shame to be compelled to acknowledge that there are any among us bearing the name which has come into such world-wide honor who are not willing to deny themselves even to this small extent. Our boys lying out in the trenches in the cold and mud and rain, enduring the unspeakable horrors of shell and poison gas and liquid fire, in hourly peril of their lives, may go hungry, but these devotees of the belly-god must have their meat and wheat bread and cake as usual.—The Canadian Bulletin.

As to Ravinia

To those who have the "Ravinia habit," the complete and elaborate stage settings and scenery come as a constant source of surprise. The stage itself is small, but the scenery is always cleverly contrived to make it appear much larger than it really is. Especially was this true of the "Aida" performance, and the Nile scene vied in beauty with much more pretentious productions, making a picture which drew much applause. Credit for this is due Arthur M. Lowrie, executive manager, who is a Scotchman with artistic ideas and who was one of the first to realize that Ravinia could be made one of the show places of the country. He has watched it grow to its present amazing proportions. Louis Eckstein has made all this possible, and to him must go the credit of bringing the high-class Metropolitan stars to Ravinia. It is said that next season the stage will be enlarged and improved, so that the more elaborate operas may be given in their entirety. With the special trains on both "L" and Northwestern Railway, it is a most delightful trip.—Musical Leader.

Richard Czerwonky—An Appreciation of His Service as Concert Master

The resignation of Richard Czerwonky as concert master of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra after eight years of most efficient and honored service, is a memorable event in the history of our city's music. For he was the first to bring and maintain here the highest practice and traditions of the world's greatest violinist in the grand person of Joachim. Mastery over the king of instruments was not an end in itself, but only the servant to the modest and unobtrusive interpretation of the great violin classics. Thus it was most fitting that Mr. Czerwonky should open his solo career here with the orchestra in his master Joachim's own sterling concerto. His two renditions of the mighty Beethoven concerto were beautiful marks of the true disciple's devotion to the loftiest heights of all music.

Our city owes a special laurel wreath of honor to Mr. Czerwonky for his introduction here in January, 1913, of the tremendous Brahms violin concerto, also for his violin part in the Brahms Double Concerto for violin and cello and in Mozart's Symphony Concertant for violin and viola. In his love for chamber music and fidelity to it amid his regular duties and against indifference and material loss, our late concert master also showed the highest ideals in musical art. His introduction of high class novelties like Debussy's quartet, the Brahms Opus 11 string quintet and his production of the famous Beethoven Sextet will long be held in honor by all enthusiasts for the most refined form of music.

As a composer Mr. Czerwonky has already won a place of distinction by his facile, graceful and individual violin and piano works and songs. His piano quintet, exuberant with the romance of his own marriage, is a splendid successor to the rare knightly spirit of Schumann. To gain more leisure for his own composition work is the main motive for Mr. Czerwonky's leaving orchestra work. As he leaves us next week for a summer on the Atlantic coast near Boston, he will immediately throw himself into renewed composition. His own sterling interpretations of violin literature will fortunately be preserved by his phonograph records, which he will also increase in New York during the summer. In the fall he will take the directorship of the violin department of the Bush Conservatory in Chicago. But this directing-teaching activity will fortunately not prevent his being heard in his classical repertory in recitals and orchestra solo engagements in Boston, New York, Chicago and elsewhere. Minneapolis can well be proud and thankful for having had the beautiful reproductive art of Mr. Czerwonky for these past eight years, and it certainly will follow his career with heartfelt interest and gratitude.—Harlow Gale, in Minneapolis Daily News.

Noted Opera Singer as Greek Fete Star

The singing of several selections by Constantine Nicolay of the Chicago Grand Opera Company will be one of the features of the program at the Greek fete tomorrow evening at Parnassus, the home of Mr and Mrs. D. Jannopoulo at Webster Groves.

Nicolai will be remembered for his effective portrayal of the king in "Aida" at the Municipal theater last summer. He is a Greek and received his training in grand opera in Italy.

He agreed to come to St. Louis to sing for the Greek fete because he appreciates the necessity for raising as large a fund in St. Louis as possible to relieve the distress of the Greeks in Asia Minor.

Orrick Johns will read a prologue especially written for the occasion, and a short talk on the Greek nation will be given by Dr. George Reeves Throop formerly professor of Greek at Washington University —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Noted Musicians Give Much Cheer to Comrades

Camp Cody has a wonderful singer in the person of Chauncey R. Parsons, of the 109th sanitary train, formerly of Boulder, who by competitive contest was declared the best tenor in Colorado, the prize consisting of a trip to New York to sing for the Columbia Graphophone Company, and also to sing in Pittsburgh and Boston.

Another musician of note is G. Davis Brilhart, for the past three years instructor in piano and theoretical branches in the Colorado state normal. He is an honor graduate of the Indianapolis Conservatory of Music, and studied under the master musicians of the country, touring for a time with America's famous singers. He is also a composer of considerable note.

Both the great artists are charming audiences in and out of camp.—El Paso (Tex.) Herald.

BAND CONCERT AT WINTERSET

Well Rendered Numbers and Songs by Carl Craven Please Audience

The many people who gathered in the court yard Thursday evening were well entertained with the first concert of the Winterset band. Prof. W. L. Parker, bandmaster, in two or three rehearsals, achieved good results. Noisy, heavy playing was lacking, the various numbers on the program being given with pleasing tone quality and good rhythm. Their next concert will no doubt find a large and appreciative audience present. The band already has an engagement at Perry next week.

A delightful surprise was the singing of Carl Craven of Chicago, a former Peru boy, who drove over from Truro with his brother, Capt. Lawrence L. Craven of the medical staff of Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Mich. The latter being on five days' leave, only a few hours could be spent in Winterset, and Mr. Craven's talents were displayed to the fortunate ones who attended the band concert. His tenor voice evidenced careful training. Perfect diction and real skill stamped him as an artist. He has been in the musical profession for several years as teacher, and in concert work. The two brothers sang together at the close of the program. Mr. Craven expects to enter Y. M. C. A. work overseas very soon. Both gentlemen lived in Winterset some years ago, attending the local high school and making many friends.—Winterset (Ia.) Madisonian.

ST. PAUL, MINN.

Committees and clubs are unceasingly engaged in providing entertainment for the boys at Fort Snelling, the Overland Aviation School, and the different training stations. Committees appointed in many of the churches have arranged to have their cars call for the boys at the camps Sunday mornings, take them to the church services, and entertain them in their homes for the day. The quartet choir of the First Methodist Church has been singing no less than three times a week at the camps. Franklyn Krieger, organist of the church, has been granted leave of absence for a year to carry on work as musical director for the Y. M. C. A. at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

Jane Holland Cameron, contralto, with Myrtle Weed, accompanist, was soloist at the University Y. M. C. A. religious service Wednesday evening, July 17. She sang three numbers from the "Messiah," "O Come Unto Him," "O Rest in the Lord," and "He Was Despised."

Alfred Greenfield, talented pupil of George H. Fairclough, and soloist of St. John's Episcopal Church, is engaged in Y. M. C. A. work as accompanist for the musical director at Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga. He is doing wonderful work for so young a lad, memorizing all programs which he plays, and transposing and adapting scores, playing for outside soloists, as well. He is kept busy from 6 to 11 each day, and on Sunday plays for five services for the Y. M. C. A. Aug. 30 he is to go to South Carolina to a conference of musical directors.

Charlotte Burlington, another talented pianist and former pupil of George H. Fairclough, has been studying the past year at the Boston Conservatory. She has won the Carl Baerman scholarship over a number of talented students, which entitles the winner to free tuition at the school for one year. George M. Chadwick, director of the conservatory, predicts for her a fine future.

Aurelia Wharry, soprano, left June 30 for New York, where she will coach for three months, and later will visit in New Hampshire.

As the curtains swung back, the pupils, grouped in the center of the stage as a chorus, presented an attractive spectacle; the central group of three girls, gowned each in red, white and blue tulle, emphasized the thought of patriotism, and gave a stirring rendition of "America."

Diano Olkon's singing of "L'Heure Exquise" was an example of what the right kind of training can do for one, and she sang with an admirable degree of control.

"My Laddie," sung by Helen Bork, was effective.

The "Magic Flute" aria was sung by Gertrude Engel with dainty grace and limpid beauty.

Violet Berg's winsome personality more than pleased the large audience. She has a voice of good quality, and sang with unaffected grace.

Harry Grey gave a smooth interpretation of the Massenet "Elegy."

The two duets by Marie Luedke and Dora Luedke were delightfully sung. Both were most attractive in their quaintness; their voices blended beautifully.

Marie Gruber gave a successful performance of the aria from "La Gioconda."

The "Wake Up," by Phillips, was a well chosen number which suited the piquant charm of Margaretmary Cunningham to perfection. Her singing called forth much applause.

Ethel Doyle has a very sweet voice of quality that appeals, and of good carrying power. She was successful in her singing of the "Mme. Butterfly" aria, as was Luella French Nyhus in the lovely French song by Hue.

Dr. Harry Clayton has a voice of good quality, and sang the Duparc song with clearness of enunciation.

Honors surely go to Vera Cardoza, who, for her first appearance, sang the aria from the "Pearl of Brazil" so beautifully. Her fine work was little short of marvelous, and the wonderful flexibility of her voice added much to the charm of her singing. The flute obligato was lovely in combination.

Alice O'Reilly, in the Saint-Saens aria, and Mary Mullen in the Eckert song, appeared to good advantage.

Dudley Buck's "Sunset" was well interpreted by Katheryn O'Connell.

Richard Kennedy Murray, in the prologue from "Pagliacci," both vocally and dramatically, is entitled to high praise.

Alice Levy has a big voice of rich contralto quality. The Habanera was given a distinct dramatic quality, and her singing as a whole has developed remarkably the last year.

Hazel Ahlgren sang wonderfully. She far exceeded the success of her singing the preceding year. Most skillfully was the florid music of the "Bell Song" executed. Flexible is her voice, and her tones are of crystalline beauty.

Marie McGuiggan's deep contralto and experienced singing gave the "Pilgrim's Song" a most satisfactory interpretation.

Marie Luedke delighted a second time in the Arditi "Waltz Song," rhythmically and vocally.

Alice Dailey sang exceptionally well, winning marked appreciation in the two arias from "The Huguenots" and "Othello." Her singing is distinguished by much beauty of tone.

Constance Purtell, pianist and assisting soloist, scored a personal success for her splendid attainments. Chaminade's "Autumn" is a number she has made distinctly her own, and the charming individuality of her interpretation is always delightful. The Rachmaninoff Prelude was played with commanding style.

Great credit goes to Mrs. Cameron for the success of the program. The profusion of beautiful flowers presented to many of the pupils, as well as the gorgeous basket from the pupils to their teacher, attest the enthusiastic personal following of this well known teacher and beautiful singer.

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENT IN THE CHURCH SERVICE

journed to the service and there evidently the lecturer forgot himself, for at the words in the Psalms, "He sent hot thunder-bolts among them," he gave us the finest representation imaginable. I suppose that he wanted to prove that he could do it if he desired to. I believe that there is a legitimate place in accompanying for an organist to introduce special treatment suggested by the words he is accompanying. At such words as "Praise him in the sound of the trumpet," an organist is legitimately entitled to orchestrate the music set before him. Whether an organist at such words as "Far, far away, like bells at evening pealing" is justified in switching on the carillon stop, I leave you to argue out for yourselves. I haven't such a stop, maybe I am jealous.

Let us consider for a moment the material, the means, which the organist has at his command, with which either to play as an artist or to descend to the level of the charlatan. He has a more or less complete instrument, comprising all shades of organ tone—diapasons, flutes, stops of string-like quality, reeds, etc. These are of great importance, they are his tools; but of still more importance is the judgment and experience of the individual who has to make use of them. Those who are members of the Episcopal Church would do well to use frequently the collect for Whitsunday, which is "a petition for a right judgment in all things."

I shall not presume to give you a lesson on the art of organ accompaniment, but without doing this I may offer a few suggestions which are the result of much thought on this very important and interesting subject. First, as regards the quantity of organ in the accompaniment of hymns. I think you will agree with me that monotony ought to be avoided, whether it be the monotony that is of long continued forte tone or that of too much restraint. In short, an artist—and even the accompanying of a hymn can reveal the individual—will follow closely the sentiment of the words and, as far as possible, enforce and illustrate their meaning. A stately hymn, like "O, Worship the King," to such a tune as "Hanover" (in my opinion an extremely fine combination, a model of what the words and music of a hymn ought to be), offers great scope to an organist who is also an artist. Were he to accompany it in a tame, monotonous manner, whether with too much or too little organ, he would miss a fine opportunity; on the other hand, its reference to elemental forces—air, water, thunder, etc.—should not tempt him to portray that which should only be suggested.

In other words, the spirit, not merely the letter, should be the underlying guide and should prompt one to forego any meretricious effects of display and invest the accompaniment with the dignity such noble words should suggest; on the other hand, a hymn of quite a different character—take, for instance, the well known "Jesus, Lover of My Soul"—demands, I need scarcely say, totally different treatment, because of its more prayerful character.

I have cited these two well known, standard hymns, not only because they exemplify the contrasted styles I wished for, but also because they offer an opportunity of discussing a point upon which there is difference of opinion.

Should the value of notes at the end of the lines be observed strictly? I have no wish to be dogmatic, but I venture to think they should. I have heard the last note of the third line of "O, Worship the King" held on considerably longer than its proper value, entirely dislocating the rhythm. This is only one instance among many similar ones, and the accompanist is not entirely blameless in the matter.

A still more flagrant point is the habit some players have of enforcing the punctuation. For instance, should a comma occur in the line—I do not refer to one at the end of the line—an organist will take his hands from the keys and make a corresponding break. Again, I do not wish to dogmatize, but surely this is an artistic blunder. These are things which, in my humble opinion, an organist should never do, but there is another which I think we do too much—I refer to the constant and uninterrupted use of the pedals. Is not an occasional rest for a verse a wonderful relief? Indeed, I have known of a telling effect being produced by allowing the congregation to sing a verse without any organ accompaniment. In the well known "O, God, Our Help in Ages Past" (No. 418), which I cannot imagine sung to any other tune than St. Anne's, a splendid effect may be produced by allowing the verse "time like an ever-rolling stream" to be sung by choir and congregation alone—no organ—and I do not know which is the more thrilling effect—that of the "eloquent silence" of the organ in the unaccompanied verse or the majestic entry of the organ in the following verse. This is a broad, but quite legitimate effect; but what about the various points of more detail, but still points of vital importance? Possibly, and I hope probably, we shall differ here, but I may with all deference give a few of my "confessions of faith." I think an organist, when playing over or giving out the tune should play the voice parts exactly as written with no filling up and with a perfectly "legato" touch. It is not necessary to repeat every note or chord in hymn tunes. A hymn is not an organ piece.

If a chord be repeated in the music it may be necessary to tie one note mostly in an inner part—merely to steady the organ tone. In the melody this repetition of the note should never be omitted. As a general rule the tune should be played over on a fairly soft organ, with or without pedals. After the playing over, the choir and organ should begin the music together promptly on the first note and without any hesitation. The habit of making a long pause after the hymn has been played over, while the organist is collecting his wits or his stops, is inexcusable. In order to secure a good start a preliminary note is sometimes sounded to remind the voices, but this is quite unnecessary and the more one humors a choir, the more one may.

Another rather common trick is that of arpeggiating the first chord. This will, in all probability, produce a ragged beginning, and can never, under any circumstances, sound crisp and satisfactory. I beg to stand opposed, absolutely, to the opinion of such an authority as Dudley Buck, who commends this "combing" of the chord. Sudden contrasts of loud and soft in a line should be avoided in spite of the indications inserted in some hymns. In one book I know I have seen in the last line of "Abide with Me" such dynamic changes: "In Life" (f.), "In Death" (pp.), O Lord, Abide with Me" (mf.). Surely this is expression run mad. I cannot imagine any organist worthy of the name allowing himself to descend to such banalities. You'll have some of your choir tell you as I've had, that these marks are in the book. All I can say is, so much the worse for the book. A very much neglected but perfectly legitimate means of adding variety to the average hymn is the occasional unison verse. This, of course, demands a reharmonizing of the melody. With some, this is a natural gift, and comes easily; with others, it entails some previous preparation, with all it necessitates a good knowledge of harmony. The great danger is that one is tempted to use harmony that is too far-fetched. I know of nothing more impressive than the singing of, say, "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," first and last verses in unison. Unison singing is best fitted, of course, to hymns or verses of a strong, manly type. In reharmonizing of such verses it is a wise thing to have the first chord of such a distinctive character as to command attention and warn all concerned that unisonal singing is desired. To those who desire to see the possibilities of varied accompaniments, I would recommend a book by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, published by Stanley Lucas & Co., London. A sample of this varied accompaniment may be seen in Hopkins' setting of the 32d hymn in our Episcopal hymn book. Many are the troubles the organist has to contend with, and one of the worst is the singing out of tune of his choir. Sharpening is generally caused by singing too loudly and forcing the voice. Be convinced right away that adding to the power of your organ won't bring the voices down to the proper level.

Reduce your organ and try 8 and 16-foot flute tone on the manuals. If this doesn't have the desired effect, then drop the organ entirely for a few measures; this will as a rule bring the choir to its senses. I think of all troubles, sharp singing is the most trying.

We all have to contend from time to time with singing flat; generally, I notice the tendency to fail in this direction is at the end of a service. Then it is perhaps caused by tiredness; when it comes early in the services many causes are given for it. The weather, or the lack of proper ventilation. The moment it is noticed, I think, the only thing to do is to start in at once and brighten up the tone by the addition of a few 4-foot stops. I have found that giving prominence to the melody and keeping the other parts subordinate has a very beneficial effect in remedying this most prevalent defect. Am I not right in saying that too much attention is given to equipping ourselves to do solo work on the organ at the expense, I am afraid, of the far more important and artistic branch of accompaniment? I might go on to enlarge on these and similar points, but it is not necessary.

To assume the role of a teacher is what I should shrink from. I have simply offered you with all diffidence a few suggestions, concerning this very interesting subject of musical accompaniment, and I sincerely hope that they may prove acceptable and at all events provide some little "food for reflection and thought."

FURTHER DATA CONCERNING PETERBOROUGH PLANS FOR CONVALESCENT WAR SUFFERERS

(Provided by Mrs. MacDowell)

The Government has been most kind and interested in our plan to house convalescent war sufferers, but we face a great difficulty. Nurses and doctors are so few for even the large hospitals that the Government will not be able for the present to undertake any place where less than a thousand men may be cared for, though they say that later on there will be great need of such places.

In the meantime, already realizing our possible usefulness on a smaller scale, we have moved our colony into small quarters and are equipping the large buildings and the studios near by for the invalided men who are no longer technically soldiers. They may be Y. M. C. A. or ambulance men, perhaps not wounded, but ill and broken down.

We will arrange the place for twenty-five and risk starting it with the small sum I have gathered, feeling sure the moment we have people there the funds will come in.

Some Government men have been quite frank in saying in this way there will be little risk to our buildings, but they fear great damage being done, should no choice be possible as to the men coming in, as would be the case in a Government camp. With a smaller number we would try to have those coming to us either from the artist or professional classes. They would be the ones to more fully appreciate the place, and indeed this officer I am quoting doubted whether the ordinary soldier would want to come to us.

We ourselves are having a desperate struggle to keep up the colony work and the general care of the place. We hope to make it possible this season, but it is only because the colony has become a really co-operative affair. Every member helps on the farm or in some other useful way.

WESLEY M. E. CHURCH

At Wesley M. E. Church last Sunday morning, in the absence of the regular quartet, a solo was heard from Louise Watt, mezzo.

Miss Watt, a pupil of Mrs. W. S. Bracken, has a voice of good quality, which she uses with much good taste and back of which is a goodly equipment of musicianship.

Her number on Sunday was Gounod's "There Is a Green Hill," which she sang with fine effect.

The organist of the church for the Summer is Fanny Mapes, a pupil of Emory Gallup. The organ at Wesley is a good sounding one, without much variety of effects, however, and Miss Mapes not only played good and musicianly accompaniments, but also was heard to advantage (for offertory) in the well known and equally well liked "Berceuse " of Clarence Dickinson.

AMERICAN QUARTET

The American Quartet, composed of male voices, McElroy Johnston and John Craig, tenors, and Dr. Carver Williams and William Beard, bassos, has been engaged by the Coit-Alber Chautauqua Company for the month of August. The singers will give afternoon concerts and evening performances of "Faust" throughout Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa and Missouri. Their engagements include such towns as Charleston, Ill., Rockville, Ill., and Bay View and Ludington, Mich.

The "Faust" version which they give (in costume) is an exceedingly interesting one. The ordinary opera-goer would hardly believe that it could be so arranged for male voices as to make a very clear and connected story. But anyone attending the dress rehearsals, held last Saturday evening at the Cosmopolitan School of Music, would have seen that this was successfully accomplished. Mr. Beard, in announcing the program, told the story of the opera in the same way in which he would tell it to a Chautauqua audience, who would be, for the most part, unenlightened. Mr. Johnston appeared in the role of Faust, Dr. Williams as Mephistopheles and Mr. Beard as Valentine, while Mr. Craig furnished a steady and reliable accompaniment.

The first act, between Faust and Mephistopheles, was given complete. Mr. Johnston, who is a Minneapolis singer and teacher, possesses a voice of sterling quality, very enjoyable in solo parts and rich in ensemble work. In the opening scene he showed that he was not only a good singer, but possessed of definite dramatic poise and ability. The fact that he seemed (behind the scenes) to have a little trouble in divesting himself of the hoary beard and reverend cloak (or was he loath to part with them?) did not in the least degree lessen the impressiveness of his reappearance as the handsome Faust, nor affect the artistic climax which he reached in the closing duet.

Modesty prevents this writer from sounding the praises of Mephisto.

In the second act Mr. Beard brought out very cleverly in voice and action the heroic character of Valentine. His voice, often heard in Chicago and well known for its mellow quality and keen interpretative power, showed up to great advantage in the dispute with Mephisto.

The Garden scene was given, then the Cavatina, which was done by Mr. Johnston with remarkable fervor, especially considering the fact that the objects of his arduous passion were entirely lacking, both house and maid. In spite of this he took the high C with as much vocal ease and spiritual enthusiasm as if it were immediately intended for Marguerite's eager ears.

From this the score is cut to the Serenade (Act IV), the performance ending with the death of Valentine. This brings the story to a divergent but perfectly satisfactory conclusion. Mephisto quite outdid himself in the serenade, Valentine died nobly and the final trio was unusually impressive by reason of its position.

The quartet is excellently chosen and should score great success on the road this summer. MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

PASSING COMMENT

A great many Chicago musicians have gone into war service of one sort or another and they are still going.

During the week past Music News has had notification of the departure from the local musical field of three prominent figures—M. J. Brines, George Nelson Holt and Carl E. Craven.

Comment on the coming war work of Mr. Brines, a very popular man and fine singer, was made in our columns last week, and we shall have more to tell of him later.

Mr. Craven, also a tenor and one who recently has been fulfilling a great many important engagements, is leaving very soon for Y. M. C. A. work overseas.

Mr. Holt, one of the standard vocal teachers of the city and a man whose personal friends number legion, is going to do special Red Cross work.

A letter from Edward Eilert, a popular young Chicago baritone, tells of his work at Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

He is engaged by the Y. M. C. A. and has charge of the music and entertainments at the Big Ravine.

The chorus of jackies there often numbers between seven and ten thousand, and Mr. Eilert says "it is a great pleasure to sing to them and lead them in the songs they like to sing."

Clarence Loomis, a brilliant young composer-pianist, who has lately joined the ranks of benedicts, has been called to war service from his position on the faculty of the American Conservatory. And this emphasizes anew the long list of young teachers who have gone from that institution.

This list includes Harris Vail, pianist and organist; Leo Sowerby, composer-pianist; Frederick Persson, pianist; Dean Remmick, William Hauser and Noble Cain, all young teachers of piano, and John R. Hattstaedt, son of President Hattstaedt, and himself manager of the conservatory.

The following letter from Edna Macdonald tells of musical activities at Great Lakes:

"It is a great satisfaction to find how willing our Chicago musicians are to give their services for the benefit of the jackies. During the Summer the two musical clubs of Evanston have had charge of furnishing entertainments at Great Lakes every Friday evening, and you will be interested to know some of those who have responded to our request for their services.

"On June 21 Vida Llewellyn, concert pianist of La Grange; her sister, Ruth Llewellyn, soprano; Ruth Tyler, soprano, and Miriam Lewis, reader, gave a fine program.

"June 28, John B. Miller of the First Congregational Church Choir of Evanston, a member of the faculty of the Chicago Musical College, and Rollin Pease, baritone, also of the Congregational Church Choir and a member of the faculty of Northwestern University School of Music, appeared. John Doane, formerly head of the organ department of Northwestern University, now a member of the Fifteenth Detachment Band at Great Lakes, accompanied them.

"July 5, Veronica Murphy, pianist; Franz Listemann, cellist of the New York Symphony Orchestra, son of the violinist Listemann, who used to be in Chicago; Julia Morse, soprano, pupil of Mary Peck Thompson, and Mary Synon, reader, were heard.

"July 12, Belle Macfarland of Park Ridge, formerly violin teacher in the Columbia School of Music; Mary Porter Pratt, organist of the Winnetka Congregational Church; Mrs. Merle Eshbaugh, reader, and Mrs. H. F. Dickinson, pianist of Highland Park, gave the program.

"July 19, Mrs. Harvey Brewer, violinist, president of the MacDowell Club of Winnetka; Ruth Hypes, soprano, formerly of the choir of the Second Presbyterian Church of Evanston, and Mary Porter Pratt appeared.

"July 26, Margaret Fabian, soprano, of the faculty of Northwestern University, accompanied by her sister, Mary Fabian, and Mrs. George B. Macdonald, reader, gave a program, and on August 2 Rollin Pease again was heard in some solos and duets, with Mrs. Myrtle Hatswell Bowman, soprano, of the faculty of Northwestern University.

"The programs for the rest of August and for September look just as good as those we have had."

¶ The man who is worthy of being a leader of men will never complain of the stupidity of his helpers, of the ingratitude of mankind, or of the inappreciation of the public. These things are all a part of the great game of life, and to meet them and not go down before them in discouragement and defeat, is the final proof of power.

—Elbert Hubbard.

A NON-CONDUCTOR

At an amusement park last Sunday afternoon a musician from the ranks was conducting in place of the regular leader, who was ill. In the middle of the program came up the furious storm of wind, thunder and lightning, which last struck here and there in dangerous proximity to the pavilion.

After the storm one of the musicians asked the question: "Why, do you suppose, was our pavilion not hit?" "That's easy," replied another; "we had a non-conductor at the bat-on."

Dunning—Carrie Louise Dunning is now in Chicago, holding a Summer class at All Souls' Church, 65th street and Woodlawn avenue.

GABRIEL

Ethel Wakefield Gabriel, mezzo-soprano, who has lived for the past year at River Forest and who has already become a very prominent factor in the musical life of that community, spent the two years previous in Minneapolis, where she was prominent musically and where she taught with much success at the Northwestern Conservatory of Music.

In River Forest she has been director of music at the First Presbyterian Church, and besides appearing frequently as soloist has developed already a fine class of vocal students.

She sang last Winter with much success in the series of concerts at Community Hall, Oak Park, one of the features of her program being a number of songs from the pen of her husband, Charles H. Gabriel Jr., a well-known song writer.

Mr. Gabriel has devoted much time to writing and has recently finished a new patriotic song which will, unquestionably, have a big sale.

Last week Mr. Gabriel was called to the colors and is now in war service.

During the Winter Mrs. Gabriel was the first to sing in public a song by Charles H. Gabriel Sr., which has since had a distinct success. This song is very much apropos of the times and is called "Should the Stars in Your Service Flag Turn to Gold."

HARRY T. POLK

Harry T. Polk of Valparaiso, Ind., has been playing a series of vesper organ recitals at the First Presbyterian Church that have attracted capacity audiences and the most flattering press comment. Mr. Polk has played six years in this church and is completing his fourth consecutive year at the Schelling Theater, where his brilliant playing has been a feature since the house was opened. Eric De Lamarter is coaching Mr. Polk in these recitals.

The program played July 28 follows:

Persian Suite ..... Stoughton
The Courts of Jamshyd
The Garden of Iran
Saki

JOSEPH DE VALDOR

Music News shows on its cover page today a likeness of Joseph De Valdor, its New York Correspondent as well as Foreign Representative.

In the early days of his connection with the paper Mr. De Valdor prepared music news notes from every foreign country, for he speaks, reads and writes fluently French, Italian, Spanish, English and Roumanian—even including, until the war was under way, German.

The past eighteen months have witnessed an almost entire cessation of the receipt in this country of foreign music papers of correspondence, and therefore this phase of Mr. De Valdor's work has been (temporarily) abandoned.

But, during that time he has been installed as our New York Correspondent and has had, for the past season, entire charge of that important part of our field.

Mr. De Valdor is a Frenchman and was educated in journalism and music at Lausanne, Switzerland.

He has been connected with both branches of endeavor ever since he was seventeen years of age.

In New York he has made a host of friends and has been responsible for the fact that Music News has greatly widened its acquaintance and sphere in that city.

He is regarded as a most wide-awake as well as a thoroughly fearless critic and his letters have been comprehensive as well as thoroughly interesting.

He is, naturally, and entirely as he should be, very loyal, both to America and to France, and has been outspoken in his denunciation of everything German in the New York music field.

This has led to considerable friction and one faction of German-dominated singers attempted to drive him from the New York field.

One singer in particular was much incensed, because of his strictures and threatened a law suit against him, afterward making a bluff at taking the matter up even in Chicago. All this has ended in mere smoke and the patriotism of Mr. De Valdor has been amply justified and proven.

The coming season in New York bids fair to be a thoroughly fine one, in spite of the war conditions, and Mr. De Valdor promises to give even more careful and sympathetic attention than last year, and as a result it is safe for Music News to guarantee that the freshest as well as the most complete comment and review of the New York situation will be found in our columns every week.

Holinger—At the All-American Day celebration of the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense (Illinois Division) at the La Salle Hotel, on July 30, there was an interesting group of Songs of the Republics, including "The Oldest" (Switzerland), "The Youngest" (China), "The Nearest" (France) and "The Dearest" (America). Miss Elsa Holinger, soprano, representing Switzerland, sang a very old Swiss song in Swiss costume, and the applause greeting her effort constituted one of the big demonstrations of the afternoon.

ATTRACTIVE PROGRAM AT THE GREAT LAKES

On last Wednesday at the Great Lakes two special programs were given by Eleanor Eastlake and Kathryn Keirnan, duet singers, and Helen Campbell, pianist.

The Misses Eastlake and Keirnan appeared recently at Ravinia as well as in several other localities, and have on each appearance met with a success which presages for them a splendid career in their chosen novelty, the duet program.

At Great Lakes they sang both at Camp Paul Jones and at the detention camp, and were royally received at both places.

Miss Campbell, a fine solo pianist as well as a most intelligent and sympathetic accompanist, was also a distinct feature of the programs and was included in the fine reception accorded.

Bingham—A large audience warmly welcomed Mrs. Helena Bingham Burton when she appeared on the chautauqua platform last Thursday evening in Salida, Colo., with Miss Myrtle Thornburgh, the operatic soprano. Miss Thornburgh gave with splendid dash and enthusiasm Miss Bingham's "Song of the Open Road." She has added this fine song and also the "Rock Him to Sleep" to her programs for the rest of the season. Several of Miss Bingham's fine scriptural songs will find use with her in her winter season in New York, where she has choir work of the highest order. Miss Thornburgh's co-artiste in the chautauqua season is Miss Gladys Brainard, a pianiste of splendid attainment.

STUDIO RECITALS GIVEN BY MRS. MANN

Mrs. Ellen Kinsman Mann is having a thoroughly successful Summer session throughout August, with an unprecedented attendance of young singers, the special object of most of whom is to prepare for lyceum work a branch of the teaching profession, in which Mrs. Mann is expert.

There are scores of her pupils in public work at this moment and many more have made successful tours in the past, while a great many are now either under future contracts or rapidly approaching the place where they will be ready for the stage.

To illustrate the work being done this Summer, Mrs. Mann has instituted a series of 4 o'clock Saturday Afternoon Musicales, when, with the expert and resourceful assistance of Beulah Taylor Porter at the piano, she will present many of her best pupils.

On last Saturday the two young artists heard were Blanche E. Snider, soprano, and Helen Volckmann, contralto.

Miss Snider has been heard repeatedly during the past year and has proven herself expert in a most satisfactory degree in all the artistry which goes to make up impressive singing and she has shown also that she has a style and a finish of interpretation which place her very much in advance of the average of young singers. Her voice is of beautiful quality and her musicianship undoubtedly fine.

On Saturday she displayed remarkable breath control (and consequent legato singing) in Handel's "Come, Beloved," while her reading of "When the Boys Come Home" was strikingly bravura.

In "Good Morning, Mr. Sunshine" (Lehmann), she again disclosed that intimate touch in which she is so adept and so pleasing, and sang also with good effect "Chanson Provencale" (Dell'Acqua), in all these excelling signally in her enunciation of text.

Miss Volckmann, the possesor of a rich, vibrant contralto, was at her best in the Mendelssohn (St. Paul) "But the Lord Is Mindful," showing great advancement and good concert style also in the Aria from "Nadeshda," so much used by contraltos, i. e., "My Heart Is Weary."

Grant Schaefer's "The Sea" was sung with good emphasis and enough force. MacDermid's "Sacrament" was charming, and Wetherly's tearful "Danny Boy" made its usual good impression.

Next Saturday, August 10, the program will be given by Martha Stelzl, soprano.

EMILY E. BERGER

Emily E. Berger, a popular Oak Park contralto, has been re-engaged for the quartet in the First Baptist Church in that suburb.

Miss Berger appeared recently in recital before the students of the Lake Forest National Summer School and also at Gary, Ind.

Miss Berger has studied with several of the leading vocalists of Chicago and has a fine repertoire, as well as polished concert style.

L. EARL ABEL

L. Earl Abel, a young Chicago composer, who has made a thorough study of organ playing under John Norton, has been serving for two Sundays as substitute organist at St. James' Episcopal Church, Chicago.

For more than a year Mr. Abel was the very successful organist and choirmaster at the Church of the Good Shepherd, although even now he is only nineteen years of age.

He has just accepted the position of organist at the handsome Luna Theater in Lafayette, Ind., where a part of the equipment is a good organ.

Movie Music in Milwaukee

Probably no city of its size can boast the high standard in the music of its motion picture theaters that Milwaukee can. The Butterfly, Alhambra, Strand and Merrill all have orchestras that occasion astonishment among visitors.

When Madame Petrova was here in behalf of the War stamps, she became greatly interested in the Butterfly orchestra. The Polish actress is a musician of great ability and the composer of several pieces herself. She remarked that it was the best orchestra she had heard outside of New York City, and she had visited eighteen cities.

She also complimented George Lipschultz, the director, on his playing, and he played a solo especially for her, upon which Petrova presented him with her photograph autographed with the following phrase, "To the violinist and the leader of the best orchestra I have heard since leaving New York. With every kind wish and in appreciation."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Silvio Scionti in Chicago Recital

Silvio Scionti, pianist at the Cort theater, was ready with his second group when I entered, and the choice was a flattering one for the talents of this local artist.

The Intermezzo in E major and E minor, and the Capriccio in B minor by Brahms are all exquisite music. They were played with lovely tone and sentiment by Mr. Scionti, causing me to regret not being able to hear more of the program.—Herman Devries in Chicago American.

Silvio Scionti intrusted his annual piano recital to the capable managerial hands of F. Wight Neumann, and due to that fact and his own popularity the delightful Cort theater was filled with an enthusiastic audience.

Scionti, in spite of his duties as a successful pedagogue, has not forgotten that he is also a very good pianist, and he again ably demonstrated that fact at this recital.

He is temperamental to a satisfying degree; has a warm, rich tone, and the technical equipment that enables him to deliver with ease the musical message as he feels it.

His program was drawn from Beethoven, Brahms, Schumann and Chopin.—Henriette Weber in Chicago Examiner.

Choir Boys Few and Worse

Not only the shortage of choir boys, but a distinct deterioration in the product itself, is noted in England, and may soon be an added war horror in this country. The editor of the Organist and Choirmaster of London, who shows his understanding of and fondness for choir boys by referring to them as "these curious creatures," sets forth some most lamentable facts in the following:

In addition to the depletion of church choirs caused by the withdrawal of men for military service, one hears that there is in all quarters an extraordinary difficulty about choir boys. These curious creatures used at one time to consider it an honor to belong to church choirs, but apparently at present they regard it rather as a favor to those concerned. With their fathers absent on the service of their country and their mothers perhaps occupied in war work, it is not surprising that they are now generally scarce, and when obtained, uncontrollable; and in metropolitan districts, at any rate, choir boys are at a premium.

From the church point of view it has to be admitted that there is an enormous degeneration in choir boys, in comparison with, say, ten years ago. For one thing, they can obtain more pay for an hour of out-of-school-time work than for the exacting demands of the church, time for time. Such difficulties increase the work and responsibility of the parish church organist and choirmaster, but we know of few, if any cases where his salary has been increased on a war-time basis.

When the period of reconstruction comes there will have to be a regeneration of the choir boys, it seems. It is to be hoped that it will not stop with mere restoration of the status quo ante bellum, but will make him something so good that it will be far beyond anything history so far has recorded.—The Diapason.

Unmitigated Gall

It takes a German to display gall of a kind that would make any other mortal blush with shame. The New York Review of recent date states that agents of the Department of Justice have been investigating an attempt to start a German opera company in New York.

"Otto Goritz, German basso, dropped from the Metropolitan Opera Company last season, encouraged in the experiment of attempting to sing the repertory discontinued at the Metropolitan by his cordial reception in German comic opera at the Irving Place theater last spring, has petitioned the Federal authorities to permit him to install German grand opera at Terrace Garden.

"Goritz proposes to open the season on or about Aug. 15 with a repertory including Lohengrin, Tannhauser and other German operas. Many of the singers dismissed by the Metropolitan, it is said, have been refused permission to return to Germany, and the argument is being advanced that they should be given an opportunity to earn a living by means of the proposed season in German opera.

"Of course, the thing will not be done. The authorities would not permit it even if public opinion would, because such an enterprise would be a hotbed of enemy propaganda. The astonishing fact is that Goritz could display such unmitigated gall as to propose such an undertaking. The plain truth is that the government has been too lenient with such rabid, impertinent and dangerous foes within our gates as Goritz and his like. Every one of his ilk should be in an internment camp."—Musical Advance.

Charles Gounod

The centenary of Gounod was observed in London and Paris. His talent was again discussed in print. Mr. Louis Delune, for example, wrote a long article about him for the June number of the Nineteenth Century.

What is to be said of Gounod today? What will be said of him fifty years hence? M. Saint-Saens, who delights in paradoxical statements, calmly asserts that Gounod will be remembered by his oratorios, not by his operas. We even find Mr. Delune characterizing "The Redemption" and "Mors et Vita" as "admirable," works "of which the science, lucidity and nobility of expression cannot be too much praised." Gounod himself towards the end of his life said that "Polyeucte" was his greatest opera. Thus does a parent sometimes favor a stupid or misshapen child. To the public of today Gounod is the composer of "Faust," "Romeo and Juliet," the Bach meditation, the Serenade, the Sanctus from the St. Cecilia mass, and an air or two and a chorus from "The Redemption." Few of his songs are on the recital programs. "Mors et Vita" is practically unknown, as is the really fine "De Profundis." "There is a Green Hill" may yet be heard in a church service; "Nazareth" may be trotted out for a Christmas festival. Two airs from "The Queen of Sheba" are war horses with a few singers. When all is said, Gounod is the composer of "Faust." There's no denying the fascination exerted by this opera.

It is true that Boito's "Mefistofele" is nearer to Goethe's poem and is therefore the less firmly knit opera. Boito's is a string of episodes. There is nothing so dramatically intense in Gounod's "Faust" as the prison scene in "Mefistofele" with Marguerite's haunting air and the frenzied maniacal cadenza. There is nothing in "Faust" so naively charming in its originality and naturalness as the final hide-and-seek quartet of Boito's garden scene. The Mephistopheles of Boito, also of Berlioz, is more like Goethe's fiend than the bon diable of Gounod, a good fellow gone wrong, as Mr. Delune justly says, in spite of Mr. Marcoux' and Mr. Baklanoff's efforts to make him demoniacally cynical and sinister. Gounod's Marguerite is more or less of a glove-box beauty. On the other hand, there are truly dramatic pages in the first scene; the Kermis is well invented, and the church scene is admirable throughout. Add the death of Valentin. The audience, however, accepts the opera "in bulk" as Victor Hugo accepted Shakespeare. It almost always craves a repetition of the Soldiers' chorus, and is excited over the final trio.—The New Music Review.

Promising Outlook for Milwaukee Season

The Pabst Theater Concert Course at Milwaukee, opening October 24, will include an attractive group of recitals and concerts. The Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet, in company with the Little Symphony, will open the course, to be followed on October 28 by Eddy Brown, violinist, November 25; Leo Ornstein, pianist, and the Flonzaley Quartet on December 2. Riccardo Stracciari, one of the world's elect in baritones, will sing January 6. Harold Bauer will give one of his monumental programs February 10, and Lucy Gates appears March 6. Arthur Shattuck and Olive Nevin, mezzo-soprano, are also scheduled for appearances, but their dates have not yet been arranged.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra season includes ten concerts, beginning November 4. Announced as soloists are Mabel Garrison, Mischa Levitzki, Charles Brueckner, cellist; Harry Weisbach, Alfred Barthel, oboe, and Alfred Quensel, flute.—Musical Leader.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD"

For nineteen weeks the D. W. Griffith super-picture of the war, "Hearts of the World," has been on exhibition in Chicago, and a much longer run is curtailed because the controlling interests of the Colonial are anxious to put that playhouse in readiness for a Fall opening; so the cinema drama will unreel itself nightly at theaters outside of Chicago.

Much has been said about the realistic genius of Griffith, whose rise from the unknown obscurity of an extra man in a stock company to the peer of movie concocters has been almost miraculous.

His keen insight into human nature is liberally demonstrated in the striking contrasts he indulged in pictures from his earliest days and particularly in his present success. First we see the gentle French countryside, its cattle grazing peacefully and its people under the thrall of the music of her moonlight, the perfume of her blossoms and the charms of the streets and pathways and the streams; while, on the other hand, we see the same countryside in the clutch of war, its stone houses crumbling from the shock of the shell and its people wounded and dying in the roadways they so oft traversed in times of peace.

It would be hard to surmise just how much of this feature was taken in France, yet statistics prove that Griffith slipped away to the shell-torn scene of European strife, traveling on the steamer that carried over our first contribution of men to the Allies. With him he took the Gish girls (Dorothy and Lillian), Bobby Harron, George Seigmann and others, and while under bombardment many times laid the foundation of the magnificent old-fashioned play with a new-fashioned theme.

It is a straightforward narrative; the scenario opens in a small French village in time of peace, where live the two American families whose heads of the house have crossed the water to the quaint village in quest of fame and fortune. Marie (Lillian Gish) is the daughter of one painter, and Douglas (Robert Harron) is the eldest son of the other. And they live next door to each other, so it is a natural event—the love of these two. Marie and her lover are in the midst of great preparations for their coming wedding when the great war breaks out; and though Douglas is an American citizen, he joins the little village men in its first call, for, as he reasons, "if a country is good enough to live in it is good enough to fight for."

So off he goes to the outskirts of the village to stem the onslaught of the Hun, while Marie sadly closes the cedar chest in the room where she dreamed sweet dreams of what was to be and where she puts her sweetest one away. And the loved ones at home go about their work, little realizing the impending danger that threatens them till the first enemy shell bursts in their midst and the victims fall torn and wounded all around. Then begins the awful toll of war. Houses are leveled and everywhere the refugees are urged on by the poilus to leave their broken little world.

Marie is separated from her mother and her aged grandfather, both of whom are victims of the first shell, while the father of Douglas is blown to atoms by the shell that destroys their home. Later, in the dingy cellar (where hysterical humanity seeks shelter) the girl comes upon her dying mother, who expires in her arms, and the girl, frail and beautiful, completely loses her reason and wanders toward the scene of the battle as the bells jangle sweetly out of tune. She comes upon the wounded form of her lover, and, thinking him dead, wends her way back to the village, where the enemy has made his headquarters at the inn kept by a woman agent of the Wilhelmstrasse. The town, under martial law, is subject to compulsory labor, and women, young and old, are set to work in the fields until they are exhausted either from the taxing work or the lash of the whip which the brutal overseer exercises freely.

Meantime the boy recovers in a base hospital, returns to his company and is sent on a dangerous mission into the enemy lines disguised in the gray uniform of the Hun. Under cover of a driving storm he gains the enemy line and secures the desired information, and while he easily hoodoos the men, the officers are not so gullible. After a hand-to-hand battle he bests two husky boches and creeps across No Man's Land to a shell hole, lying there in the slime and mud for two days till the appointed time to give the signal, and makes his way back by way of the inn, where he accidentally meets Marie. Worn and exhausted, he bears up until he reaches her little room and succumbs to the fatigue that possesses him. After the girl stabs an orderly who has discovered her lover they flee to the unused upper room, where their escape is made impossible by a constant bombardment by snipers on one side and the threatening presence of Von Strohm (George Seigmann) and his men on the other. When all seems lost and only a question of seconds seems to stand between the lovers and death, "the little disturber," who has figured prominently thruout, hurls a bomb that finishes Von Strohm, and the myriad of soldiers who have driven the enemy into retreat save the day.

As an epilogue we see the boy and his brothers, the girl, the "little disturber," M. Cuckoo, and the village carpenter all on a furlough in Paris, and our hearts proudly thump as we see through their eyes our own brave khaki-clad boys swing under the windows of the hotel up the street to join the Allies to bring victory home.

The cast was chosen with uncanny fitness for their roles. Lillian Gish sounded the depths of dramatic action, and her facial expressions in the heavier moments were examples of rare art. After figuring prominently in "Battle of the Sexes," "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" she has reached the very pinnacle of panto-acting with her contribution in the biggest Griffith effort of all, and fans the country over will eagerly await the showing of her latest war play, "The Great Love."

While Robert Harron was ideal as the boy, in the writer's private opinion Griffith could do better with someone else.

Dorothy Gish found in "the little disturber" a part that will make her famous, for, like Constance Talmadge, the "mountain girl" of "Intolerance," this star is already tasting the fruits of her endeavor as the star of her own producing company.

Ben Alexander created a furore as the baby brother of the boy. Josephine Crowell laid aside her gorgeous court robes of Catherine di Medici ("Intolerance") for the simple house dress of the girl's mother, and her part in the photoplay was excellently projected.

The death and burial of Kate Bruce (the boy's mother) in the dingy cellar by the three wee sons was a masterstroke of genius, in spite of what the Tribune scribe quoted in his review. Miss Bruce's acting was at all times natural and normal. Robert Anderson is the latest Griffith find and will prove popular should he continue his excellent work as shown in the part of M. Cuckoo. George Fawcett made the small part of the village carpenter count for something, while George Seigmann lent his accustomed artistic presence to the disagreeable role of the German arch spy.

We do not in any way wish to be disparaging to the value of the picture, but fully one-half of its success depends on the music motifs introduced. Carli Elinor must be complimented for the skillful way he intermingled the right melody for the right occasion. A striking example was the weird intermingling of the strains of the Wedding March and Chopin's Funeral March, the effect of which synchronized perfectly with the movements on the screen, and throughout the battle scenes (the most realistic so far) one's nerves were keyed up by the constant boom of the cannon and the incidental noises.

WARRINGTON THEATER

Each summer the stock companies the country over announce a series of revivals of plays that have had their day. Last year the tearful "Camille" and her sob-sister, "East Lynne," were the reigning favorites, while this year favor seems to point to romances of the Sunny South. And the Pyre Players, at the Warrington Theater in Oak Park, announced last week the erstwhile favorite of yesteryear, "Lena Rivers."

Many ambitious young authors have tried their hand at writing a "different" version to the Mary J. Holmes work, some of which still live, but the best and the most universally known is the one that Beulah Poynter concocted for her own use and played by that dainty star throughout hinterland. It took a great many years before she was finally awarded sole rights to this work, for, like Grace Hayward's "Graustark" and Vaughn Glaser's "St. Elmo," the popular dramatizations were usurped by inferior imitators, and court procedure was necessary to determine the rightful authors.

The story of "Lena Rivers" has a strong appeal that has weathered the storm of shifting public interest, whose entertainment now revolves around frank sex discussion and bold crook plays; and while some of the speeches are declamatory and the situations antiquated, the Pyre Players did their best to bolster up the weak points and emphasize the strong ones, consequently sparing it another year's life from the storehouse (the play's last resting place).

While the audience at the Warrington wept at Granny Nichols' story of the betrayed mother of Lena and resented the hateful treatment of her by her cousin, Caroline, on the other hand they laughed and enjoyed the grotesque funmaking of Joel Slocum, the country bumpkin, and cheered Anna's vigorous defense of the friendless heroine.

After seeing and working in the piece for at least a dozen times, it was quite revolting to see our hero attired in one suit throughout the progress of the play, extending over a period of five years, and looking like an undertaker when in reality the part calls for white flannels. And while we have our blue pencil in hand we might as well mention that the unsuitable raiment and makeup of Harry Graham (Louis Lytton) was not in keeping with the rest of the company. No doubt Mary J. intended that he should dress that way in the book, but in the stage version he was always up to date along with the rest of the characters, and not an imitation of a photo in the old family album.

Mrs. Pyre did the name part as it has always been done. She was properly the sweet, lovable child in Act 1 and the womanly Lena in the balance of the play. Her appearance, and makeup,too, reminded one most strikingly of the supreme Oak Park favorite, Grace Hayward. This actress is versatile to the last degree, possessing all the tricks of her trade, and yet she is modern in the way she sends her personality across.

Madlyn Kent and Olive Morris played their disagreeable roles to perfection, and little Mildred Mayer was rewarded with frequent bursts of applause, due to her earnest work. Jean Cooper did Granny Nichols well enough, and Mr. Castle was this week familiar with his lines. Jack Goodwyn was funny, but overdid Joel Slocum, while Leonard Golan (last week it was Jean Clarendon) played intelligently the part of John Livingston.

Ramon Girvin and his orchestra provided excellent incidental music for the "sob moments."

This week the players are doing that English comedy success "Our Boys."

BERTHA BEEMAN

This (Friday) evening at Lake Forest some prominent people are putting on "She Stoops to Conquer" as an Italian benefit performance and have been so fortunate as to secure Bertha Beeman, contralto, to sing groups of songs between the acts.

On Sunday night Miss Beeman will sing for John W. Norton at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, and the same evening she starts for Iowa, where she will give six recitals within two weeks.

This allows but nine days' vacation in Chicago previous to her appearances at the All-American Festival at Lockport, where not only will she sing a complete program but is also appearing in a group of Carrie Jacobs Bond's songs on the program given by that popular composer and is, further, singing a group of songs by Harry Gilbert on Composers' Day.

JENNETTE LOUDON STUDIOS

The rehearsal class conducted by Hans Hess at the Jennette Loudon Studios, 614 Fine Arts Building, will begin the fall term on September 13. This class is open to all advanced pianists and affords pianists who wish to be soloists later with orchestra or accompanists of a high order, the unusual opportunity for study in all the classic and modern literature for cello alone and for cello, violin and piano.

Mr. Hess is a valuable director of this work, and both he and Miss Loudon believe that the rehearsal class is the only way in which to get the broader knowledge so indispensable for fine interpretation. Miss Loudon has always believed in the importance of this branch of work and is happy to open her studio for a meeting place of those who are interested enough to go the "long road." Visitors are always welcome to this Friday morning work.

COLUMBIAN CONSERVATORY'S BASIC WORK IS EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD TEACHING SYSTEM

The Columbian Conservatory of Aurora, Ill., under the direction of Harry R. Detweiler, has made its foundational work so vital that its influence on all its students is recognized and felt throughout the community. Six teachers in the conservatory are representatives of the Effa Ellis Perfield Pedagogical Course, and many graduates of Mr. Detweiler in different parts of the United States are enthusiastic and successful teachers of the Effa Ellis Perfield System.

Miss Lucy Spencer is the normal teacher for the work and is the head of the children's department.

Mrs. Rhoda Miller, Miss Ellen Munson, Miss Irene Wroughton, Mr. John Neitz and Miss Madge Geiss teach the work to older students.

Miss Spencer has given several "tests" and has shown how very young pupils do constructive thinking in rhythm, melody and harmony, and finally develop into creative work. The little folks are awakened to a keen interest in all the subjects of music, and for this reason learn rapidly and take great pleasure in demonstrating their development.

It was a delight to see Miss Spencer's class at the Perfield Summer School in Chicago go through their "tests" in reading, rhythm, scales, chords, dictation, etc., before the large class of teachers. One might expect them to be nervous and anxious, but if the audience had been invisible, only the atmosphere of the private studio, the well-poised teacher, the freedom and naturalness of the students would have been felt. Miss Spencer is a pianist and a careful student of the voice; this, added to her love of children and her work, explains why she has been so successful in bringing her department to a point of efficiency that is the pride of Mr. Detweiler.

The original compositions of these pupils were very interesting and proved that children of very young age have something to say and can express it through music. Jane Kelley, age 7 years, played her own music to the story of "Baa, Baa, Black Sheep"; she also played two other compositions. She was not in the class picture, but was certainly in evidence in the "test."

HARRISON CONDON, WILLIAM WILLETTE, MARY SHULTS, MARGARET MIGHELL
Pupils of Miss Spencer who demonstrated in Chicago

MISS LUCY SPENCER
Director of the Elementary Department

Mrs. Perfield was so pleased with the work of these students that she gave each a "Music Credit" button saying that as it now seemed the right thing to decorate soldiers for great deeds, she thought such splendid efforts should be rewarded and stamped with recognition, hence the green and red credit button was placed on the proud breast of each child. The green signified the "growing" quality and the red the "ripe." It is evident that these pupils are growing, and certainly they are "ripe" in a few things. We close with a poem written jointly by a "Perfield" class after a Music Test."

Arriving in Mehlins at 9:45,
All feeling proud and much alive;
Ready to do our work with good will,

Macbeth—On Saturday evening the audience at the Stadium (New York) concert, where Florence Macbeth was soloist, demanded so many encores that Miss Macbeth's music "ran out," and after responding to the heavy applause with many bows, Mme. Margaret Namara of the Chicago Opera Company, who happened to be seated in the front row of the audience, saw the dilemma her colleague was in and rushed up to her and kindly offered her assistance and played from memory "Comin' Through the Rye." It made everybody happy. Mme. Namara showed her skill as an accompanist as well as a rare spirit of unselfishness in assisting in the success of her fellow artist.

A PUBLICITY MONTH

Last year Music News inaugurated the plan of a Publicity Month instead of having, as had been its custom, an Anniversary Number.

Such was the success of this venture that we have decided to retain it as a permanent policy of the paper and therefore announce that of the current year will be our

SECOND PUBLICITY MONTH

It is desirable—in fact, necessary—that a special announcement of plans should be made in the Fall, and every artist and teacher—following the vacation time—should have a little extra PUBLICITY, calling attention to his plans and purposes of the coming year.

A Publicity Month is more sensible than a single Special Number, for it divides attention, thus preventing the presentation of so great a mass of material at one time as to be indigestible, and, also, it provides a more extended announcement.

AND IT IS CHEAPER

We can afford, through the wholesaling of space, to offer a special reduction on advertisements taken for two or more issues of the PUBLICITY MONTH.

In this respect our plan will be the same as last year, and we therefore offer our advertising columns in the Publicity Month issues not only at regular card rates for one insertion but, further, we will give a reduction of ten per cent on two display ads used during the month, or fifteen per cent on the four issues.

TO ILLUSTRATE: A quarter-page display ad is listed at $15 in any issue. The price remains the same in any of the four October issues and, in addition, on two insertions of the advertisement during that month we will give a reduction of ten per cent, or on four issues a reduction of fifteen per cent—thus the advertisement would cost $27 for two times or $51 for four.

We will sell no pictures nor any reading notices for these issues, both these being contrary to U. S. Postal law, but we want every artist in the country, and especially every Chicago artist, to buy display advertisement space and we will back up every advertisement by giving the issues a very wide circulation and will, in every way, endeavor to make them thoroughly attractive from a news standpoint.

Reserve space early. Come in and talk it over with us, or write for further particulars.

If you intend to place a standing card in Music News, even if no more than a Directory Card, you should place it before October, in order to have the special benefit of the Publicity Month Issues.

WICHITA, KAN.

Plans already announced for Fall include several fine feature concerts for Wichita. The present season is one of absolute quiet, save the weekly band (local) concerts at the park. Many arrangements of past regular courses are for the present discontinued, not particularly because of war circumstances, but by reason of the outlined municipal course of next season, which precludes any profitable possibility to local managers of competitive courses. This situation was expected. The city administration, however, is giving Wichita an excellent course of highest grade artists at cheap prices. The course was announced in a previous letter.

The plans for the annual Fall Exposition and Wheat Show include a series of band concerts by Innes and his band. The new $200,000 additional building, an elegant permanent building of brick and concrete to match the Forum proper, will be dedicated this Fall, and particularly the included concert hall. This auditorium will seat 1,500. Hipolito Lazaro, Spanish tenor, and Sophie Braslau, soprano, are the attractions in the dedication concert, and Innes' band will also officiate. Seats sell for $2 and $1.50, reserved. This new concert hall is expected to overcome the acoustic features the forum proper offers to soloists. The forum seats 5,500.

Edna Armitage, for Merle Armitage, who is in service, has announced, so far, only one attraction, Maude Powell. So the Forum All-Star Series will probably not be continued on as large a scale as in past seasons.

The Wichita Chorus Course will present an all-star quartet, October 14, consisting of Martinelli, tenor; Mme. Frances Alda, soprano; Mme. Lazzari, contralto, and De Lucca, baritone, at the Forum, which may be followed by other concerts, but no prearranged course is to be offered in series form. Likewise, the Armitage management is expected to follow a similar plan without offering a series at series prices.

During these hot months a few studios are open, but many local musicians are away. Andrey Sandford, clarinetist, is solo clarinetist with the Colorado Midland Band at Manitou and Colorado Springs again this summer. Mr. anu Mrs. Ralph Brokaw have taken a cabin at Spar City camp, near Crede, Colo., and are fishing for trout. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Lindburg are at Colorado Springs. Otto Fischer is in New York state. Jetta Campbell Stanley is studying at Schroon Lake with Seagle. And, no doubt, many others unnoticed have slipped away for August to escape the hot month.

The city papers are running the annual music page of announcements, and all schools and studios will be open by the end of the first week of September.

The Wichita College of Music announces a new head for the vocal department—Harry Murrison, with Mable Murrison, pianist, in the ranks of piano teachers on their roster. This school also announces the Fall opening concert for September 12.

Terry Ferrell, violinist, pupil of Ralph Brokaw, has accompanied the Brokaws to Crede, Colo. Professor Haberkorn, violinist and director of a music school at Hutchinson, Kan., will also be at Crede.

Harry Evans of the Evans Studios and Frank Power of Fairmount Conservatory have been doing fine work in municipal chorus work this summer in Wichita at the various theaters and outdoor war meetings.

No other news until September, and what promises to be an interesting season will be ushered in at the dedicatory concert at the Fall Exposition, Sept. 30 (above referred to), with Lazaro and Braslau. R. B.

A STATEMENT

Although the Society of American Singers, which opens September 30 at the Park Theater, New York, in a series of light operas in English, and the Commonwealth Opera Company are working along the most friendly lines, there is no affiliation between the two organizations.

While many of the singers are allied with both organizations, the Commonwealth Opera Company will have no active participation in the performance at the Park Theater.

Both are working for the same end, and when the Commonwealth is ready to enter the field there will be plenty of room for it.

Music at RAVINIA PARK

Tuesday Evening

On Tuesday occurred a repetition of "Faust," with the same cast as before: Muzio, Braslau, Harrold, Rothier, Marr and Latham; Richard Hageman, conducting.

Although the previous performance received very high commendation from the pen of this writer, it is no exaggeration to state that the second performance was superior to the first, both as to vocal and dramatic results. Muzio was vocally at her best, as she has been in almost every performance this summer. One never quite expects these biggest of grand opera singers to sing through a season thus far without an "off" night or two, but so far Miss Muzio has never been reported as being anything but "in her best voice." Though critics who are more versed in the essentials of histrionic technic have criticized her dramatic interpretation of Marguerite, this writer has not seen the full justice of the accusation that her interpretation of the part is too sophisticated. Of course the ideal conception of Marguerite as Goethe probably conceived her is that of a small country girl hardly more than fifteen. So that with physique such as Miss Muzio possesses it is naturally difficult to preserve the intended illusion of childish simplicity and innocence.

Braslau was supreme in her part. Her singing and acting always show, besides the innate qualities of the artist, the carefully thought out and discriminating interpretation of the student. Harrold sang Faust in his usual style. Rothier makes a good practical type of devil, though we wish that he would not consider it a part of his role to garble his words beyond all recognition. This conclusion has been reached after second hearing, because this seems to be the only part he takes in which his enunciation is not perfectly clear.

Graham Marr makes a splendid Valentine. In the death scene both he and Muzio reach a climactic pitch which is remarkable. Cordelia Latham showed a great improvement as Martha, being far more at her ease.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Friday Afternoon

The Student-Artist Concerts are continuing up to the high standard set by the earlier performances. Last Friday Miss Irma C. Brady and Mark Wessel, both students at Northwestern University, were soloists. Miss Brady, who will enter her junior year in the Fall, is a pupil of Mr. Grant-Schaeffer. She possesses a pleasing contralto voice of the lighter quality, which would perhaps be displayed to better advantage in a smaller hall, as the softer tones and words scarcely carried to the extreme rear of the pavilion. She sang, however, with great sincerity and genuine artistic enthusiasm, which denote her as a young singer from whom the future will expect great things. She sang the following numbers:

SOPHIE BRASLAU

The Cry of Rachel.....Mary Turner Salter
Danny Boy (Old Irish Air).....Weatherly
Blackbird Song.....Cyril Scott
Big Lady Moon.....S. Coleridge-Taylor

Mr. Wessel has recently received the degree of bachelor of music at Northwestern University, for which degree he wrote as a thesis an original sonata for piano. Mr. Wessel is a pupil of Arne Oldberg and has made many appearances in recital. Owing to the fact that he is soon to enter the army, Mr. Wessel is forced to defer entering upon a professional career until after the war, but he is certainly admirably fitted to be a concert pianist. His interpretation of the C sharp minor Scherzo (Chopin) was very artistic, and from the dexterity of his technic one would never have guessed that it was an uncomfortably cool day to play.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Saturday

Ravinia is of Chicago, but it belongs to the north shore. The ordinary Chicagoan can only get a transient peep at it unless he is ready to make the visits a job. When he gets there he is so happy he begins to rail at conditions and wonder why the place is not made more accessible. But at once his judgment tells him that it is its very exclusiveness which creates the charm. There is always a crowd—never a mob—a crowd which values the natural and cultivated beauty and does not destroy it. Once the great "general public" invades it, there will be short shrift for its many attractions.

Saturday proved a bad day for a man looking for music. The afternoon was given over to athletics, which consisted of a mild game of baseball and some crack riding by the cavalrymen from Fort Sheridan. It was full of fun and diversion for the many jackies. And one honored those splendid ladies who are untiring in their endeavors to make the lads away from home feel that good women are interested in them. Ladies whose names and gowns form the stock in trade of the Dowager and Cinderella, along with men whose word and money spell authority, were everywhere wholeheartedly trying to be something definitely friendly to the lovable chaps. If there was no orchestra music there was the exquisite music of human voices touched with the greatest thing in the world—love for one another.

A delightful diversion for me was to be picked up by a young friend, living in Ravinia, put into a car with three lovely babies and driven about that delightful section and then to a happy dinner party in a pretty home.

Afterward we went to hear the first big act of Montemezzi's "Love of Three Kings." At once I recognized the great advance in the grade of this company. The orchestra was under superb control. Papi is a magnetic, forceful conductor, with a sense for opulent color, which made the score dazzlingly brilliant. Rothier is a power to be reckoned with; a notably rich organ and a schooled musician and actor. Kingston was monumentally good; a passionate intensity new to me was in his tones, and the loveliness of its quality as winning and appealing as ever.

Claudia Muzio has, apparently, all the things which will carry her to fame and fortune. The voice is so cool and liquid that it gives a poise to her dramatic intent, carrying a reserve which doubles the opulence of the power and richness when the climax arrives. It was stimulating to hear her, and the universal popularity was easily understood. Graham Marr sang capitally, and is so routined and serviceable that his personations have a distinction not always found in the score.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

Sunday Night

It is out of the question, quite, to give all of "Rigoletto" in a Ravinia night, but the choice of acts two, three and four is delicitous and the setting for the first of these was especially good.

Gilda's garden was a bower of real bushes and trees brought in from the adjacent woods, and the effect was particularly agreeable.

Also in this act there was quite a large chorus of men, something unique this summer, and the various numbers assigned them in this and the succeeding scene were well done.

The smaller parts of the opera were splendid throughout, D'Angelo excelling signally in "Monterone," and Rothier, who had the important part of "Sparafucile," disclosed some unusually fine tones and good acting ability in his scenes.

The four who comprised the famous quartet were good, with the exception of Orville Harrold, who, in his usual style, was good and bad by turns.

Some of his solo bits disclosed beautiful tone, but in his second-act duet with Lucy Gates (Gilda), he sang so violently out of time as to embarrass her seriously.

Millo Picco had his biggest opportunity of the season in the part of "Rigoletto"—the one which vocally suits him admirably and which in action he made at least reasonable.

Lucy Gates as "Gilda" seems a little too mature and much too sedate for the part, but her voice proved to be very beautiful. She had been heard previously in some small Chicago engagements, in which she failed to score, and at Ann Arbor, where, at the Festival of last year, she substituted for Galli-Curci and scored a very great success.

In "Rigoletto" she is much at home vocally and gave the "Caro Nome" with remarkable facility and a very beautiful tonal quality.

The duets with Harrold were, as stated before, very unfortunate for her, and she did not do herself any too much credit in the duets with Picco (perhaps due to him); but the big quartet of the last act went much better.

The Maddalena in this was Sophie Braslau and again did she prove not only her ability to assume any part with entire conviction, but also to handle the vocal score in a way at once intelligent and artistic.

Papi conducted with much feeling for the Verdi score, and the orchestra, while not so refined as in "La Boheme," which was a genuine triumph, was thoroughly good.

C. E. W.

Other Bills

On Monday evening of this week the usual Symphony Concert, under the direction of the extremely popular Richard Hageman, was given.

On Tuesday evening there was a repetition of "Manon," and on Wednesday "Romeo and Juliet" was given for the first time.

On Thursday there was a Children's Concert, as usual, and in the evening "Cavalleria Rusticana" was again sung.

Today (Friday), at the Artist-Students' Concert in the afternoon, there will be numbers by Lillian Dyer, soprano, and Ellen Ekholm, pianist; and this evening there will be another Symphony Orchestra Concert.

On Saturday afternoon a concert; in the evening, "Mme. Butterfly," with Muzio, and on Sunday evening the first performance this year of "Martha."

AT ORCHESTRA HALL

Douglas Fairbanks, like Mary Pickford, is a "habit" with those who make a study of films, and therefore his presence in the picture at Orchestra Hall this week insures big audiences in spite of torrid weather conditions.

His present vehicle is "Bound in Morocco," and it is only necessary to say that he plays the part of "The Boy" to give an inkling of his agreeableness.

Douglas Fairbanks is alike in all that he does, but he is always agreeable.

The orchestra plays this week the Overture to "Stradella" and does it well. The accompanying music for the picture is not particularly good. That furnished by the organ during the moments that instrument is in evidence is much better.

The war pictures are particularly fine and very exhilarating, the travel picture is delightful, and, having lots of water in it, is particularly apropos of the weather.

A harp solo is played by A. Salve and is both novel and fine.

C. E. W.

MICHAELIS AT GREAT LAKES

Ralph Michaelis and the Chicago Ladies' Quartet shared the program given in two "huts" of the Y. M. C. A. at Great Lakes on Monday evening. It was a hot night, and the "doing" of this "bit" was no mild undertaking. The music, by every indication, gave great pleasure, the boys gave the musicians, collectively and individually, any number of "rockets" and rousing "come agains." As the car drove away there were cries, "We want some more violin music," by which token Mr. Michaelis can be sure he scored heavily with the boys.

How to Obtain a Scholarship—

THE Educational Aid Society has relations with more than one thousand of the leading Colleges and Private Schools of every kind throughout the United States and, in return for services rendered, receives a limited number of full scholarships or Credit Certificates for students enrolling through the Society.

These Scholarships in the best institutions of every kind are sold to parents and students at lower rates and on more favorable terms than those charged by inferior institutions.

On a course in a Business College, the usual saving is from $10.00 to $25.00; in a Medical or Law School, $15.00 to $50.00; Music or Expression, $25.00 to $100.00; in Military or Boys' Boarding or Girls' Boarding Schools, $50.00 to $200.00. It is the agreement with each school not to sell its scholarships to students who have previously attended that school; otherwise there are no restrictions, excepting that the student must be qualified to enter the school selected.

The student paying his fees with a scholarship is considered by the school to have paid the school's regular rates even though he may have purchased the scholarship at one-half its value. In case of a sharp reduction, of as much as one-third or one-half of the regular rate, the student is expected to perform some service in bringing the work of the Society to the attention of his friends and acquaintances. Students who will be able to repay the Society at a definite future time or who can furnish a responsible guarantor can arrange with the Society for a scholarship.

To obtain a scholarship, either call or write, stating the kind of school desired, the location preferred, and you will be informed what rates of discount are obtainable in the school which will most nearly meet your requirements. A copy of our COLLEGE AND PRIVATE SCHOOL DIRECTORY, 480 pages, containing complete lists of all colleges and private schools in the United States with some facts about each and much information about many of them, will be sent to any address upon receipt of 25 cents.

ALBERT SPALDING IN ROME

The following is taken from the New York Globe:

"The strains of a violin drifted on the air and melted away with the breath of the wind in the trees. Golden sunlight glinted through the leaves and dripped in patches on the lawn. Above the sun burned with Roman intensity and the splash of a fountain was full of cool solace. This was the park where a hundred years ago Pauline Bonaparte had lived and loved. These trees cast their shade on the brilliant throng she gathered around her, the same trees that shelter a crowd hardly less brilliant today. A century has passed, but something of the spirit has lingered. For this is the home of the British ambassador. Lady Rodd, his wife, is an indefatigable worker for war charities, and today 'all Rome,' as the newspapers fondly announce, has assembled to hear the concert she has arranged in aid of war funds.

"Certainly many well known figures are there. Italian statesmen and allied diplomats mingle with Roman aristocracy and soldiers of many nations. The magic of the music holds them spellbound—and my eyes turn toward the platform where a figure in khaki stands out from the background of the musicians in the orchestra. He looks very young—this soldier who is playing with such passion. His eyes are gazing intently into space as he holds the violin lovingly under his chin and draws forth the sobbing strains of Wieniawski's Polonaise in A minor.

"'He belongs to you, doesn't he?' I heard a British Tommy ask of a burly American aviator.

"'He sure does,' answered the other with pride, 'and he's some crackerjack.'

"The violinist was Albert Spalding, once a favorite of the American public, now adjutant in the aviation section of the United States army.

"'I practiced just half an hour for this concert,' he said after the audience had been finally satisfied. 'There is no time for music. I can't do two things at once, and at this moment there is only one thing that matters. We must win the war and establish peace, and a just peace. That's all there is to it.'

"'You were at the Foggia Aviation Camp when you first came over, were you not?' I asked.

"'Yes, I was there for some time—but I never received my pilot's brevet—I couldn't pass the physical tests, although I have made many flights as passenger. Now I help Captain La Guardia in the Rome office; but, of course, I want to get to the front. We all want to do field work as soon as we get into uniform.'

"'But how well you speak Italian!' I exclaimed, as he exchanged a few rapid words with the leader of the orchestra, who was urging him to play yet another time.

"'Oh, I have been in Italy a great deal and did some of my studies here. I have played here before, too.' I knew he had played at the Augusteo ten years ago and I knew, too, the furore that the 'boy violinist' had created.

"'And I am glad to be back among Italians again, for there's not a finer race for sensitive understanding and imaginative courage. I was at the front a few weeks ago and I thought the spirit of the men superb.'

"I asked him what he thought of America's attitude.

"'I felt all along it was going to be our war. President Wilson was only waiting till he felt the people solid behind him. It's a people's war this time right enough. With the domination of Prussianism, everything that we had ever stood for would have been destroyed. As an artist I knew that pure art would have been crushed out of existence under such a hegemony. I am glad that our country, which is so often erroneously supposed to be interested exclusively in commercial aims, has shown the world that it will fight to the death for an ideal.'

"'Then you have no sympathy with German art?' I asked. Albert Spalding's eyes suddenly blazed:

"'Art does not exist in Germany. That country has debased art to material ends making it serve purposes of state and thereby using it as a tool. Her great artists have become agents of espionage and German propaganda, and the country values their reputation and influence abroad, not for their artistic worth, but for the returns they can make to her secret service. A nation that drives its poet Heine into exile; that imprisons its great hero, Liebknecht; that will turn from Goethe to praise the writings of Frederick the Great, has no claim to art.'

"At the outbreak of the European war Mr. Spalding canceled his South American tour and began to put his affairs in order. 'I felt I must get ready,' he said. He has cousins fighting in France.

"'You are a warlike family,' I suggested.

"'No, we are not. We are a peaceful family, and that's why we are fighting today.'

"'And your violin?' I asked.

"'I never play now. That is a closed door. It will remain locked until peace shall come and unlock it again.'"

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MUSIC

"How fleet her fingers move" was the remark which came to the ears of this writer from someone in the audience at Northwestern Music Hall last Monday evening. And for a non-professional bit of criticism it was appropriately said of Miss Harriet Kisch, who gave a very enjoyable piano recital. The program was neither too long nor too heavy, which was fortunate, as the night was unbearably hot. While not chosen particularly to make a display of technic, the selections were varied both in style and national type.

The program follows:

Concerto (in the Italian style) ..... J. S. Bach
Allegro animato; andante molto expressivo
Etudes—C sharp minor, C minor ..... Chopin
Reverie ..... Debussy
Arabesque No. 2 ..... Debussy
Isle of Dreams ..... Torjussen
Northern Lights ..... Torjussen
Voices of the Woods ..... Hugo Kanst
Irish Tune from County Derry ..... Grainger
Danse Negre ..... Cyril Scott
Ballade in A flat major ..... Chopin

Miss Kisch's technic was clear and accurate and her hands at the keyboard were noticeably graceful. She played the Bach numbers with precision and a good sense of rhythm. Throughout the program a refinement of expression and close attention to detail were evident.

In the C sharp minor Etude she brought out the left hand melody very clearly, although the left hand work in the C minor was a trifle too light. The Debussy Reverie was not sufficiently impressionistic, but the agility in the Arabesque was charming. The Torjussen group was well done. "Isle of Dreams" is not a very inspired composition, though "Northern Lights" is fantastically original. She played the "Irish Tune" (Grainger) very well indeed. It is a composition which is not so easy to play as it sounds. The much used A flat Ballade (Chopin) was also given a good interpretation.

Miss Kisch, who is a member of the class of 1918, is to be complimented upon her artistic work. MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Ruth Lucille Martin

The following is an excerpt from the Watseka Daily Republican concerning the program:

"Each pupil acquitted herself so cleverly according to her age and advancement in the art of music, that it was difficult to make any distinction as to especial merit. The work of each pupil reflects great credit on the instructor, Miss Clark, and distinguishes her as a teacher of music of marked ability."

Especial mention, however, was made of the work of Ruth Lucille Martin, who received on this occasion a certificate of proficiency awarded by the Sherwood School for the satisfactory completion of the Intermediate Conservatory course.

This is only one of a number of successful recitals given by pupils of Miss Clark within the last two years. Miss Clark herself is a pupil of Hugh H. Kelso, Jr., and Miss Julia Lois Caruthers. She is at present affiliated with the Sherwood School of Music and is director of the branch schools in Watseka and Milford, Ill. She has also had large classes in Danville and Joliet, Ill. Miss Clark's Chicago classes, however, are building up to such an extent that she is planning to spend more time in the city than she has done previously and will teach at her studios on the South Side.

Miss Clark has been well known for many years in Chicago and elsewhere as a most successful teacher of children's classes.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

BY HERBERT J. WRIGHTSON

BOOKS

Music and Religion; a survey, by Rev. W. W. Langford, D. D., M. A. (Oxon.). Cloth, 1s 6d. (London: Kegan Paul, French, Trubner & Co., Ltd.)

The difficulties involved in a subject covered by the foregoing title are recognized by the author in his Foreword. He says, "To attempt to satisfy the theologian and the musician with the same morsel is a task requiring no little contrivance." The object of the volume is not "a discursive account of the actual connection of religion and music throughout the whole world," but rather a discussion of the influence of religion on the growth and development of music in its earlier days, and the general bearing of that influence upon the present. The work is carried out in a learned manner and with great thoroughness within the field under consideration. The history of the beginnings of music is worthy of note, aside from its connection with religion, and in fact the same independent value of the researches applies at all stages of the treatise, through the Middle Ages, the Renaissance, the Reformation. In the final chapter a very apposite reference is made to the association (and later estrangement) between Wagner and Nietsche—Wagner the convert to religion as expressed by "Parsifal," and Nietsche the implacable rebel against all ecclesiastical authority, the so-called atheist who worshiped God under another name and whose finite reason was overthrown by its efforts to encompass the infinite. This reference makes a very fitting conclusion, in bringing music and religion up to date—almost. For the rest the author adds: "Nietsche, of course, is not alone in his revolt. But on the side of philosophy he is an outstanding example of modernist tendencies. . . . Cubism, for instance, is a form of madness not unparalleled in other directions." A few rather obscure generalities end an extended essay of marked ability.

King's Book of Chanties, by Stanton H. King, official government chanty-man. Price 15 cents. (Oliver Ditson Company.)

The dictionary says a Chantey (with an e) is "a chant or song sung by sailors at their work." The little book before us is an apparently very complete collection of these melodies, with their texts, which are frequently quite long, picturesque and atmospheric. In most cases a one-line solo is answered by a one-line chorus throughout the reminiscences and other fancies inspiring the jolly tars at their toil. A new set of words to "Roll the Cotton Down" is added to suit the times, "Roll the Kaiser Down." Besides the "Long Drag," "Short Drag," "Capstan" and "Pumping" chanties there are a few Old Sea Songs, rather more lengthy in character.

Practical Transposition, for clarinet, flute, cornet, saxophone, violin, and all players using the treble clef, by Gustave Langenus. Price $1 net. (New York: Langenus Clarinet School.)

A treatise on transposition by the first clarinetist of the New York Symphony Orchestra will naturally offer much practical assistance to players of orchestral instruments. The matter is approached in a carefully analytical manner, transposition being first considered a whole step higher, then a whole step lower, and later at other intervals. It is pointed out just where the attention must be centered in playing a passage in some other key; that is, what notes will be changed from flats to sharps and what will remain flats, and so on. This apparently simple detail is a very important one, and its understanding will be a great help to the player. There are first mental exercises in each transposition and then exercises to be played, from easy to difficult. There is, unfortunately, a discrepancy in the reference to other pages, in several places the author having apparently called his "contents" page 1, whereas the printer has made it page 5. Thus most of the page references should have 4 added.

In a section treating of the various clefs we are glad to see that the nondescript C clef, on the third space, so much used by certain American publishers, is not recognized. Among "Concluding Remarks" are some notes on the relation of transposing and non-transposing instruments to each other. In speaking of the viola, and treating it "as an instrument in D, reading the notes as if in the treble clef," there should have been added "but an octave lower." The work is of distinct value to all interested in the study of transposing, even for piano or organ.

WHITNEY TEW

A new little circular sent out by the Whitney Tew Studios is a very multum in parvo—for, besides price lists and other personal matter, it contains the following very general information:

"Whitney Tew guarantees to equip every pupil with an understanding of the art of vocal emission which insures: (1) a natural, unforced compass of from three octaves upwards of pure, beautiful, flexible and powerful tone; (2) the capacity for perfect pronunciation; (3) a process of emission which eliminates every technical difficulty, renders fatigue in singing impossible, and which gives to every singer an equal facility with heavy dramatic declamation and the most delicate agility; (4) an art which enables every voice to do with the same ease and effectiveness either high or low songs; (5) an art which deals easily with any exactions of vocal composition or musicianship."

Still More About Free Singing

The Stadium concerts continue to draw larger crowds than expected. The seventh week of the new enterprise did not diminish in attendance and it is evident that if the season has not been curtailed, it is due to the fact that the concerts are now self-supporting. We have already complained about the disgusting practice of presenting soloists on "begging" terms. The management of the concerts seems to be successful in acquiring new forces. Without the payment of a single cent, the management collects week after week a handsome sum of money, while the soloists have to expend from their own pockets in order to make a clean appearance before the audiences. It is known that the only tribute which will be paid to them is a "shallow" letter of thanks. But if musical agents clean all they can the respective representatives of the artists are also responsible for turning over their assets to their colleagues. It looks as though there must be in existence a certain understanding between the agents to help themselves where the signal is given. A genuine artist would not abide by the wishes of the representative, to sing free, unless there is some substantial reason. Many prominent artists and minor ones gave their best in the support of the war, but the writer asks them, why have they submitted to sing for no money at the Stadium concerts, which are backed by wealthy people like Mrs. Charles Guggenheimer and Le Roy Williams? Are the artists' talents underrated by the possessors of the voices? Are they in need of popularity? Some of the soloists are prominent figures in musical life and some of them appeared even three times during the season. And the guarantors ought to consider that a singing voice is a means of livelihood to the possessor. In England the artists are paid even when they appear in war charities. Over here, with our great resources, we do not pay a cent to those who offer their services.

Anna Case Charms a Large Audience at Ocean Grove, New Jersey

We were disappointed, last season, when the charming Anna Case was prevented by illness from appearing at Carnegie Hall. With patience and great expectations we awaited her recital at Ocean Grove. Those who love her came to listen to her in huge numbers and the applause tendered to her was proof of her popularity. The great auditorium not only sheltered music lovers by the thousand, but prominent personalities like Governor Edge of New Jersey were also guests of honor.

Pianists and artists as well as singers came in legions to listen to the exquisite voice of a singer "made in America." In the audience I noted Fernando Carpi, the sympathetic tenor of the Metropolitan, Giuseppe De Luca; Mischa Levitzki, the genial Russian pianist; the excellent basso of the Metropolitan, Jose Mardones; Rafael Diaz, the re-engaged tenor of the Metropolitan; Eva and Adamo Didur, and others. Not since her notable concert at St. Nicholas Rink, last summer, has Anna Case been in such marvelous vocal trim as on this occasion. Her voice is one of the most beautiful of any American singer and thrilled every listener. Anna Case is one of the very few artists whose knowledge of interpretation is an artistic feature, whether in the rendition of French songs or Scandinavian. The volume of the voice was capable of carrying to all parts of the immense auditorium.

To dwell on each and every song programmed would be unnecessary; sufficient to remind our readers that her selections are ever tasty and pleasurable. She thrilled the audience in the nearly perfect interpretation of the typical Parisian air, "Depuis le jour," from Charpentier's masterpicce, "Louise." The arias from "Lucia" disclosed not a little of the coloratura. Other songs were from English and Scandinavian composers. I did not count the encores, but they were many. Frank La Forge assisted at the piano.

Florence Macbeth the Bright Star at the Stadium's Celebration of British-Canadian Day

The sixth week of the Stadium concerts, under the leadership of Arnold Volpe, was notable by the appearance of Florence Macbeth for the second time since the inception of the season. On August 1st, whether as a tribute to our loyal Allies, the British and Canadians, or for purely musical reasons, the audience was large. Besides the Stadium orchestra, the newly organized Police Band of New York also contributed to the program. Florence Macbeth sang and thrilled again. The open air concerned her little. She was in fine mood and her voice rang to the farthest point of the City College. Our nightingale grows in popularity with each appearance, and the ovation accorded to her was a well deserved tribute. She is to sing again with the Chicago Opera Association, and this is also welcome news.

Tenor Harrison Brooksbank was another

Lenora Sparkes Recovering from Automobile Injuries

The excellent soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who met with an automobile accident, is luckily recovering from the injuries sustained on Long Island and is expected to leave the Bellevue Hospital of New York shortly. A miracle only saved the beautiful English soprano from fatal results, but we all rejoice that Providence was kind to her, and her reappearance at the Metropolitan will be the more enjoyed.

Fernando Carpi at Carnegie Hall

After his tour with the Chicago Opera Association, the brilliant tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company will return to

FERNANDO CARPI

New York to join the forces of the Metropolitan Opera Company. On November 16, to be exact, on a Saturday evening, he will enter the Carnegie stage for his song recital. Besides the operatic arias, the tenor will interpret songs of the classics, modern and contemporary compositions from the pens of French, Italian, English and American composers, to be sung in the original language. This recital promises to be one of the notable factors of the coming season.

A TRIBUTE TO GODOWSKY

The pupils of the Los Angeles master class, conducted by Leopold Godowsky at the close of the school in that city, passed the resolution reproduced below. Many of the students from this class have gone to San Francisco for further study with the great master. The master class has been a decided success financially, artistically and educationally, and it has put an impetus to the music life of the Pacific Coast that will prove invaluable:

"We, the students of Mr. Godowsky's Master School, assembled in Los Angeles July, 1918, wish to express our gratitude and appreciation to him before his departure from this city. We are proud to have been members of the first class of this kind ever conducted in America. We realize that there are many others as deserving as ourselves, or more so, who have been greatly disappointed in being unable to attend these sessions. This unique privilege has been ours: to hear the greatest master of the art of piano playing enunciate the principles of his art and to see and hear these principles demonstrated. We have heard interpretations of many great masterpieces of piano literature—more than most of us could learn in several years of study. We have been greatly impressed with Mr. Godowsky's desire to exact the most that each player is capable of achieving.

"Let us hope that we may keep Mr. Godowsky in America, even after the termination of the war. But if that may not be our good fortune, that at least we may have another chance for such a Summer school, when we may prove how much we have profited by his unselfish devotion to the highest ideals."

The resolution was signed by the following:

WHAT DANIEL MAYER'S ARTISTS ARE DOING

Walter Greene is under the management of Daniel Mayer.

Rose and Ottilie Sutro have just returned from an extensive trip in the South.

Joseph Breil, composer, has written a one-act opera for Constance Balfour.

Lenora Sparkes of the Metropolitan Opera Company is recovering rapidly from injuries received in an automobile accident recently.

Carlo Liten, the famous Belgian tragedian, who has already created a sensation, will tour with the Cincinnati Orchestra.

Emma Roberts is to sing an all-American program at Worcester Festival.

Modest Altschuler, conductor of the Russian Symphony Orchestra, is summering in Rangley, Me.

Oliver Denton is devoting his entire time during his vacation to the study of American composers.

LOCKPORT BECOMES FAMOUS AS MEETING PLACE

American Artists, Young and Old, Are Heard in American Compositions and With an American Audience to Judge of Their Work—One Hundred and Sixty American Composers' Works Featured on Programs

The National American Music Festival held annually at Lockport, N. Y., will open on September 2 this year with a fuller week's program than ever before. Already scores of artists from all over the country are scheduled to take part, as well as a large number of musical organizations. Most of the 160 American composers represented on the seven-day program will also be present to hear their works interpreted.

The purpose of the festivals has been from the beginning to secure just recognition for American musicians and American music. This aim has received an added stimulus from the war.

Mutual Help the Watchword

It is the belief of the directors of the festival that its object can be achieved only through co-operation and mutual helpfulness of those who would personally benefit from such a national advancement throughout their professional field. Therefore, they are bringing together at the Lockport rendezvous American musicians, critics, managers, composers and educators. The managers are given a unique opportunity to hear the artists and give them engagements. The singers hear the composers' works and judge them. The composers become acquainted with the artists and learn their needs, possibilities and limitations. And among all these people there is established a feeling of camaraderie and a better understanding. Thus the aim of the festivals loses none of its altruism and patriotic value, while yet being materially advanced toward practical realization.

The event is one of great importance, for here, on common ground and with a most democratic working basis, American artists, young and old, are heard in American compositions and with an American audience to judge of their work.

Lockport itself is an ideal spot in which to hold such a convention, and the management of the event last year was at such a point of efficiency as well as sympathetic outlook upon the American musical situation as to give guarantee that this year also will be well worthy of attention.

Business Men Co-operate with Artistic World

In becoming host to these National Music Festivals, Lockport has unconsciously followed many examples from the old world, where small and comparatively unknown cities have sometimes acquired great fame through presentation there of certain plays or musical events annually. Intelligent self-interest has prompted the Lockport business men and they openly avow this motive; but American musicians are none the less grateful to them for the opportunity to hold the festival.

CHARLES M. COURBOIN

Charles M. Courboin, the noted concert organist, has just been booked for a recital on November 5 in Oberlin Conservatory, Oberlin, Ohio, where he will play the magnificent organ available at the college. He will also give a recital December 13 before the St. Cecilia Club in Grand Rapids, Mich., where he played last Winter. So delighted were the members of the club with his playing that there was an insistent demand that he be engaged for a return date this season.

Mr. Courboin will appear on October 26 in Aeolian Hall, New York, in a joint recital with Alfred Megerlin, the concertmaster of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and a personal friend of Mr. Courboin of many years' standing. The two were students together many years ago in Brussels and never meet without indulging in reminiscences of their playing there with Eugen Ysaye, the famous violinist, now leader of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

Stein—Mr. and Mrs. Karl Buren Stein closed their year's work Saturday, Aug. 3, and left on Monday for a month in the Rocky Mountains, stopping at Denver, Colorado Springs and Manitou. The Auditorium Conservatory, of which Dr. Stein is president, will open its fall term the week of September 3.

RAYMOND WILSON

Raymond Wilson, the pianist, is spending his summer at Oxford, Pa., where he is hard at work on his program for his second appearance in Aeolian Hall, October 31. Metropolitan critics were greatly impressed last fall by his robust musicianship, his sincerity and individualty, a fine round tone, and marked poise and sense of proportion. His second appearance will, without question, attract much attention from New York music-goers.

Mr. Wilson played recently in Walton, N. Y., for a Red Cross benefit and was praised highly by the local press for his artistic renditions. One writer notes that, while he never exceeded the possibilities of his instrument, he "never lacked in power or climax," his phrasing, shading and expression were remarkably good, and his was "a performance to be remembered and treasured." His Chopin playing was also specially commended and his interpretation of one modern number, Ravel's "Jeaux d'Eau," was noted as indeed a "frolic of the waters."

There is every indication that Mr. Wilson will have a very busy season this Fall and Winter, and that many cities will have an opportunity to enjoy his artistic playing.

Vol. 10 Chicago, August 16, 1918 No. 33

American Musicians Awake

Whatever strictures could possibly be made anent the apathy of American musicians when the war first began must be completely discounted now, for Americanism has awakened in full power throughout the musical world and today there is nothing but enthusiasm for the cause we, as a country, are espousing and utter detestation of the opposite thought.

The idea that there was something sacred in German music or any form of German culture is long since dead.

The two following items are indicative of the general spirit and they are concrete examples of the feeling of American musicians.

In Rome, Albert Spalding played at a Military function and in an interview given the press afterward stated some wholesome truths. Among other things he said:

"Art does not exist in Germany. That country has debased art to material ends, making it serve purposes of state and thereby using it as a tool. Her great artists have become agents of espionage and German propaganda, and the country values their reputation and influence abroad, not for their artistic worth, but for the returns they can make to her secret service. A nation that drives its poet Heine into exile; that imprisons its great hero, Liebknecht; that will turn from Goethe to praise the writings of Frederick the Great, has no claim to art."

Music News is in receipt of a letter from an American woman singer, one who has studied in Germany and who knows the repertoire of that country as well as of all others. We quote as follows:

"I for one shall never sing another German song. What is any Art but the expression of thought? It must be expression then of RIGHT or WRONG thought and it has been clearly demonstrated that the Hun has camouflaged his hellish deviltry in Art, Music and Song which lulled us to sleep, where we have 'snoozed' listening to his egotistical egotism and unquestioned deduction, 'Germany the only.' We trusted, believed, slept and dreamed!

"Thank God, we're awake now, though we still have those parasites in our midst clinging to our tree of Freedom, trying to suck the very life and vitality out of Americanism. They can't do it!"

And, since these two expressions are, unquestionably, the real expression of many others than the two who uttered them, let no one for a moment suppose that American musicians are longer to be fooled.

There will be no German text song in America the coming season! There will be no modern German compositions played! There will be no German opera! Let him who dares try to foist any of these on us.

Charles L. Wait

PASSING COMMENT

The big Moody Church at La Salle and Chicago avenue is still a fine old auditorium, and music sounds there to fine advantage.

About a quarter century ago the frequent appearance there of Mr. Moody himself was—always—the signal for a great outpouring of people and resultant meetings of vital significance.

This writer recalls many occasions when the big place was filled to the last seat and when, with enormous chorus and big organ, the music was a very great feature.

Today the old auditorium is more a part of the fine Moody Bible Institute than an independent church, and it is used for all sorts of functions connected with that institution.

Music News carried two weeks ago a picture of the new music building of the School of Music connected with the Moody Institute, and it was shown to be a roomy and comprehensible place for teaching and the smaller public functions of the thriving school.

But for Commencement Exercises last Thursday evening and for the fine concert of the afternoon the old Moody Church was used, and again it proved its adaptability and its appropriateness.

The School of Music of the Moody Institute is unique—and indeed such it should be, for were it to be just like all the others there would be no special significance in its maintenance.

But Moody Institute is full of people preparing themselves for a life of evangelical endeavor, and it is only meet that its Music School should lay especial emphasis on the religious aspect of music.

Music News last week printed in full the two programs which were given on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, and it may be seen at once that they are preponderantly religious in trend.

All the songs were religious or patriotic, and there were even piano transcriptions of hymns and Gospel songs—one by so fine an authority as Mason, while the songs used included as authors at least two members of the Faculty of the Moody Institute School of Music.

The organ, an inseparable concomitant of the church service, was also, of course, in evidence.

And speaking of religious music and the appropriateness of giving it to students at Moody, it must be added that the mere fact of its being religious need not prevent music from being both high grade and entertaining, and such indeed the program of last Thursday afternoon certainly was.

In music, just as in every other thing which forms a part of public life today, there must needs be point, style, celerity, color and poetic meaning. A religious song should be sung with correct tonal qualities and with good interpretable feeling.

A piano transcription of a hymn, to be effective, must have back of it clean technic and good musical feeling.

And such qualities—if this writer mistakes not—are certainly the ideals of the instructors at Moody School of Music.

And—music needs not to be lugubrious nor religiously sentimental in order to have a real spiritual meaning.

A good piano piece by Chopin certainly has as much place in a church service as anywhere else, if played well and with good musical feeling.

This also, it seems, is the idea of the Moody teachers, and the program under consideration showed a dexterous admixture of various sorts of music; and most emphatically there were technic and style back of all of them.

And—to revert to the patriotic element:

Since the war began a year ago this writer has witnessed some wonderful patriotic demonstrations in various churches. In fact, it may be given as a proven formula that wherever religion is, there also may be found true patriotism.

"America better look out. I will stand no nonsense after the war."

Hush, William!

Besides American nonsense and American dollars and cents, there is American Horse-Sense. Early in our history we used it with success in a case of Monarchitis. France, resorting to something similar in 1793, thereby reduced the blood pressure of her Kings.

And with it Russia has rid herself of Czaringitis.

—Arthur B. English.

And so, Moody School teaches patriotic songs as well as religious songs, and in the concerts of the institution both are presented in true fashion.

And the whole program—sacred music, transcriptions, good piano pieces, organ solo and patriotic song—all ended with a benediction!

To this writer, no one thing said about anyone in Germany responsible for the war is so utterly damning as the reported remark of the Crown Prince of Germany by Dr. Davis (the American dentist) in his wonderful articles in the Daily News.

"The Crown Prince," said he, "remarked to me: 'Davis, now that so many of the men are in the war, those of us who are at home ought to have a fine time with the women.'"

If anyone can think of a more contemptible thing than this, one would certainly like to know what it could be.

Analyze the remark a little. Think of the German soldiers sent out to war for the Royal Family, which never allows one of its members to be placed where there is the possibility of a scratch, being so betrayed and so utterly spit upon as in this remark of one who should, by all rights, prove himself an example of right living and fortitude!

Certainly he, as well as his egotistical and unscrupulous father, has richly earned the punishment that is so swiftly and surely coming to them!

At the Auditorium on last Wednesday evening there was a big patriotic meeting arranged for the National Dental Association, in session in the city, and again there was demonstrated the futility of using this place for any other than big mass events or speakers or singers of the greatest vocal power.

There was a bumper audience, and the night being very hot, the balconies were almost untenable.

About 500 seats were placed on the stage and these were filled with a throng of people eager to hear the announced attraction—Newell Dwight Hillis.

It is no fault of the committee in charge that he was unable to come, for the U. S. Government sent him across the water on the very day he should have started to Chicago to fulfill his promise here, but Mr. Hillis being unavailable, more care should have been taken in the providing of substitutes.

An officer from Roumania (who probably had a real message) and a half dozen others, the names of whom could not be caught, were put on for speeches, and not one word that was said by any one of them could be heard by anybody on the stage not one of them being a speaker fit for such a position.

Later the stage was abandoned by almost everyone on it for the seats left vacant in the Auditorium proper by those who kept moving out because of the heat, and from this vantage the speech of Senator Borah was heard.

This speaker knows how to enunciate, and he had a message. It was a pleasure to hear him, therefore, but one feels that all that had gone before him was an imposition on good nature, excepting only the playing of a Jackie band, which had spirit and style to recommend it, even if the numbers played were not worthy of any attention.

The daily papers continue, periodically, to call into question the loyalty of members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

This is a condition of affairs which should be remedied at once and for all time. The Orchestra should purge itself of every vestige of pro-Germanism, if there be any of that undesirable quality present.

It has been said, often, that the Chicago Orchestra was a little bit of Germany right in Chicago, and there have been accusations of such flagrant discourtesies (to put it in the mildest terms) as the playing by one member of the orchestra of "The Watch on the Rhine" (German purposely translated.—Ed.), while his fellows were playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

If this be true, the perpetrator of the outrage should be thrown out of the orchestra, root and branch, be he soloist or the most humble member of the organization.

And there should be, henceforth, no vestige of Germanism, no speaking the language—nothing whatever that could cause any suspicion as to the disloyalty of the members.

If this purging process be not applied and if it ever happens that proof positive is furnished of even remote disloyalty, then the orchestra might just as well immediately disband. We are now past the days of temporizing. It is now AMERICANISM or anti-Americanism, and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra cannot be an exception to this rule.

GOLDILOCKS

A timid figure paused outside Mr. Clark's studio. Apprehension possessed the countenance and trembled in the music roll pressed convulsively under one arm. A little hand stole forward and slowly pushed open the door. The small person peered furtively within.

Mr. Clark—the biggest of all the big musical bears—how had little Goldilocks ever dared!——

A hasty glance around the disclosed hall reassured. Surely no bear dwelt in this delightful place.

"Mr. Clark must have visited in every country in the world, I do believe! There's a coffee table from Turkey, and an old Moorish lamp—a divan from India"—she crept further in—"and an Italian chair that I'm sure must have held one of the De Medicis—and oh! what a story that little desk must know!" The door shut—"Why, there's a portrait of Mr. Paderewski—and Venus di Milo—I wonder if she ever sat on a spinnet before."

Mr. Clark appeared courteously in the doorway.

"Oh, isn't he a dear? I should love to pull his curls and see if they are real. I shan't be afraid to sing here!"

And she wasn't.

Can you guess who this Little Person was?

CHARLES LINK AND VIOLET MARTENS-LINK

Charles Link and Violet Martens-Link have just returned from a successful Chautauqua tour, covering over 3,000 miles and taking in some of the largest towns in Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.

They organized the Link Orchestra, Mr. Link playing first violin and Mrs. Link piano, and gave programs of the best repertoire in orchestra music. The special feature was Mr. Link's singing with orchestra accompaniment. His splendid tenor voice was a surprise to every audience, and they insisted upon encores in preference to going on with the orchestra program.

For the next two years Mr. and Mrs. Link will be affiliated with the Mary Wood Chase School of Musical Arts, 800 Lyon & Healy Building—Mr. Link as voice teacher and Mrs. Link as accompanist and coach.

LEO ORNSTEIN'S CELLO SONATA PLAYED

In an interview with the Detroit Free Press, Hans Kindler, the first cellist of the Philadelphia Orchestra, spoke as follows:

"Although granting that compositions for the cello are less plentiful than for the violin, I take issue with those who would say that the player of the instrument must perforce confine himself to a very small and considerably hackneyed repertoire. During last season I had the joyful honor of playing, with the composer at the piano, Leo Ornstein's recently published Sonata, which in my humble opinion is the best Sonata for cello and piano written since Brahms. Encouragement by artists in the playing of new works and by the public in showing appreciation will encourage composers to write for the cello."

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

The new illustrated catalogue of the American Conservatory is, as it always has been, a fine specimen of the printer's art, although the familiar cover is changed, owing to the scarcity of blue paper.

In spite of many difficulties arising through war conditions, such, for instance, as the loss of eight young instructors and scores of male students, all having joined the colors, the Conservatory has fully maintained its registration mark, although the previous season's record was the largest in the Conservatory's history.

The faculty numbers over ninety, including many instructors of national and international reputation. Among these might be mentioned Karleton Hackett, Adolf Weidig, William Middelschulte, Allen Spencer, Silvio Scionti, Heniot Levy, Victor Garwood, Herbert Butler, Arthur O. Andersen, O. E. Robinson, Enrico Tramonti, Ragna Linne, E. Warren K. Howe, Louise Robyn, Charles La Berge, Walton Pyre, Kurt Wanieck, Earl Blair, Herbert Hyde, Edward Moore, John T. Read, Jennie F. W. Johnson, Marie Sidenius Zendt, May Doelling, Frank Van Dusen, Louise Winter, Leo Sowerby and others of prominence.

The following have been added to the faculty:

Piano—Cleveland Bohnet, Adalbert Huguelet, Hugh Porter, Grace Welsh, Alice Weber.

Voice—Edna Wilder, Frances Burch.

Violin—Richard Broemel, George Perlman.

Harmony—Helen Dallam, Grace Welsh.

Violoncello—Adolf Hoffman.

Among the features of the Conservatory are the teachers' normal training school, the opera school, students' orchestra, the series of Saturday afternoon recitals, lecture courses, and musical bureau for concert and teaching engagements.

The school of acting and expression, under the efficient direction of Walton Pyre, has become recognized as one of the best in the country.

The outlook for the Fall season is especially promising.

ETHEL M. RICE.

Ethel M. Rice, manager of musical and dramatic artists, noting the difficulty of placing Fashion Shows in the regular theaters during war times, and knowing that every normal woman loves to see the new styles in clothes, conceived, executed and managed a Fashion Show in connection with a vaudeville performance at the Frolic Theater last Wednesday night, which was such a success as to suggest many repetitions elsewhere.

Mrs. Rice presented an operatic trio, consisting of Tracey Kingman, Mildred Rodigar and Miss Woodard, at the Chateau Theater last week.

Borowski—The Motette of Felix Borowski, announced to be sung for the first time at the Fourth Presbyterian Church on last Sunday, was postponed until September.

SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL

The Sherwood Music School had another one of their delightful little "family parties" last Wednesday evening, when an informal program and reception were given for the teachers of several of the branches who are attending the normal session now being held for them.

The program was given by Georgia Kober, assisted by two of her pupils, Miss Florence Hunt, director of the Greensboro (N. C.) branch of the school, and Mrs. Lyle Comstock Prescott of Chicago.

Miss Hunt, who has been with Miss Kober a number of seasons, has not appeared on the programs of the school as frequently as her friends would like. She has a very large class in her home town and does not have the time for practice she feels is necessary for public performance, but the work she did the other evening did not show evidence of lack of preparation. Her playing of the Mozart Sonata, with Miss Kober at the second piano, was all one could wish for, as quality of tone, facility of technic and power of expression were at her command, and she displayed sane judgment in the use of them.

Mrs. Prescott and her work are well known to the musical folk of Chicago. On this occasion she, with Miss Kober, played a group of Debussy numbers arranged by the composer for two pianos, in which her support was so sympathetic and responsive that the ensemble was almost perfect. Miss Kober, as always, was admirable. She has long been acknowledged as an authority on the classics, and it must be conceded that as an interpreter of the moderns she has few, if any, rivals.

The program as given follows:

Sonate, C minor ..... Mozart-Grie

Valse Caprice
Pierrot Lento ..... Scot
Lotus Land
Florence Hunt, Miss Kober

Au Convent (At the Convent) ..... Borodi
Arabesques (Nos. 1 and 2)

Miss Kober

Serenade for a Doll
Printemps ..... Debuss
Afternoon of a Faun
Mrs. Lyle Comstock Prescott, Miss Kober

MR. SCHAEFER IN PIANO RECITAL

Under the caption of "Twilight Pianoforte Recitals" Music News last week published a program which is to be given next Sunday evening, August 18, at Messiah Baptist Church, on the west side, by Conrad Bryant Schaefer.

Mr. Schaefer was heard in a similar program at the same place last Sunday evening.

The idea of giving an hour of piano music just previous to the Sunday evening service in any church would be a good one and offers unlimited opportunity for the display of originality as well as of suitability.

Mr. Schaefer is a man of unique ideas and believes that a piano recital should be not merely the playing of some attractive pieces, but that the program should be built up according to some preconceived and well-developed plan and that there should be both contrast and balance in what is offered.

It is impossible at this time to detail the plan or the performance in full, but to anyone interested in the subject we recommend the reading of the program as printed in our columns last week.

KNUPFER STUDIOS

After a most successful summer term Mr. and Mrs. Walter Knupfer have gone to their summer cottage at Magician Lake, Mich., where they will spend the month of August.

Mr. Knupfer is very optimistic about the coming musical season, having already received a large number of applications for time with all the teachers of the different departments of the school.

The new catalog mentions as the latest addition to the faculty the popular and extremely successful solo cellist and teacher, Hans Hess.

The vocal department has been enlarged and widened by artists like Augusta Lenska and Anna Griewisch-Kheiralla, and for the violin department Mr. Knupfer has gained important acquisitions in George Dasch and Samuel Hungerford. Mr. Dasch is equally well known as an orchestra and chamber music player and as a teacher and orchestra leader. Mr. Hungerford, a former artist pupil of Mr. Weisbach, will teach pupils in the preparatory department.

The catalog furthermore announces a limited amount of free scholarships, which will be awarded to pupils of exceptional talent. Two scholarships in piano have been donated by Richard Pick and Walter S. Gerts.

Mertens—Alice Louise Mertens, contralto, soloist at Temple Beth-El in New York and at the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church in Brooklyn, announces a MacDowell recital for the coming season, in which she will have the assistance in piano solos and accompaniments of William Stickles.

AT THE HIPPODROME

At the Hippodrome they are presenting, week after week, standard plays in almost complete form, giving each four times a day with some vaudeville acts interspersed.

The arrangement is novel and distinctly agreeable—much better than straight vaudeville, at least as formerly practiced at this house, and more intimate than moving pictures, of course, inasmuch as the spoken word adds very much to any picture.

But, that being the case, one must introduce right here a serious criticism of the work of the company of players now on view at the Hippodrome.

Since it is the spoken word which counts most of all in establishing mood and picture, then unquestionably that spoken word should be distinct.

It is not so at the Hippodrome. This writer sat through two acts of "The Marriage of Kitty" on last Friday evening at the very rear of the auditorium and he did not hear one word in each hundred that were uttered (mouthed or chewed more literally) on the stage.

During the other act he moved about half way down to the stage and from that vantage ground could hear about one word out of each three spoken by the actors.

There were two proofs in evidence that this was not the fault of the acoustics of the house nor anything else, but just plain affectation or slipshod carelessness on the part of the players.

If affectation wholly, then it is absurd to subject a whole audience to the fact of sitting through something that is unintelligible because of interjected drawl or silly mouthings, and if through lack of knowledge or carelessness, then indeed should each member of the Hippodrome Company hie himself (and especially herself) to some voice teacher who can and will correct the impedimenta.

That the fact of not being able to hear was not due to acoustics was proven in two instances: (1) A performer on the trapeze, a very clever man indeed, while seated in a most precarious position in mid-air and engaged in playing an accordeon while balancing himself on the ragged edge of nothing, kept talking to the audience continually, letting out a flow of repartee which was distinctly pleasing, and every word he said was absolutely intelligible, although he probably does not pretend to any ability of public speaking and used merely a straightforward speaking voice. The other (2) example was provided by Beulah Hayes and Carl Craven, professional vocalists, who offered a delightful twenty minutes of singing. Every word uttered by them was heard distinctly. Not alone because of this, but also through the other values of their work, this act constituted the high light of the bill; and this in spite of the fact that this writer thinks their numbers very poorly chosen.

They gave two semi-popular numbers and two old ballads, the latter being "Just a Song at Twilight" and "Bonnie Sweet Bessie."

The voices of both these singers are fine and musical; the musicianship of the ensemble was undoubted and the entire effect of the two old songs was delightful. Especially so was "Just a Song at Twilight."

CARL CRAVEN

But when two such good singers go on any bill (even vaudeville) they should insist upon doing something really high grade, and instead of the other two numbers they should have sung some such duet as Goring Thomas or George Henschel has provided, and in spite of anybody's opinion to the contrary this writer believes that the audience would like these better than the nondescript numbers offered.

Good singing by well trained voices has a fine place in vaudeville, but no one who attempts it should make the mistake of thinking that the repertoire must be altogether simple or popular.

Mr. Craven, one of our best concert singers, certainly proved himself attractive from every viewpoint, and in Miss Hayes he found a fine co-worker. The voices blended unusually well and the total impression was both pleasing and of such superfine quality as to please any connoisseur of music who might have been present besides having in it an inherent emotional quality which appealed at once to the most musically unlettered of the audience.

AT ORCHESTRA HALL

The "big picture" at Orchestra Hall this week is D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love," in which, evidently, he has utilized the left over war scenes and fag ends of story from "Hearts of the World."

Even at that, it is an interesting picture although disjointed, and has some exceedingly beautiful scenes. Particularly fine are the village scenes in England, and admirable indeed are those showing the sea.

MABLE CORLEW SMITH

Mrs. Mable C. Smith joined the Chicago Operatic Company last week and will spend ten days with them doing Chautauqua work. The Chicago Operatics is one of the leading Chautauqua attractions and is under the management of John Miller. Mrs. Smith will not be able to finish the Chautauqua season with this organization, owing to her preparation for the great American Musical Festival at Lockport, N. Y., the first week in September.

Her success at this place last year was to such an extent that she will have nine appearances at the coming convention. In addition to her recital she will be associated with the Chicago Ensemble Trio, a Chicago quartet and an orchestra.

MacDermid—Sybil Sammis MacDermid sang with much success at the City Stadium in New York on last Friday evening with the Volpe Orchestra of ninety men. She gave an aria from "Thais" and encores, and received fine notices in the New York press.

Kryl—Marie Kryl, the young Chicago pianist, is spending the summer at Seal Harbor, Me., where she is the only pupil of Harold Bauer.

CLARENCE LOOMIS

The departure of Clarence Loomis for war service has called attention anew to his gifts and attainments.

He studied extensively in Chicago and spent also considerable time abroad, after which he returned to this country and became a member of the Faculty of the American Conservatory in Chicago.

CLARENCE LOOMIS

Later he added also several days' teaching each week at Valparaiso University, and in both cities he has become a great factor in the teaching life and has also thoroughly established himself both as a concert pianist and as a composer.

In Valparaiso a number of concerts have been given devoted exclusively to his compositions, and several of them have been heard also in important events in Chicago.

In the series of concerts at Community Hall in Oak Park last Winter Mr. Loomis was one of the most pronounced successes, and his appearances at the Faculty Concerts of the American Conservatory have always been notable.

Mr. Loomis takes with him the admiration and the sincere good wishes of a large circle of friends.

Leach—Rowland Leach, teacher of violin, tells us that his pupil, J. Willard Parsons, has been appointed chief musician on the cruiser Chicago, flagship of a certain port on the Atlantic. He writes Mr. Leach that contributions of orchestra music will be gladly received, as the stock is very low. These can be sent to Mr. Leach at the Bush Conservatory.

Swarts—Mr. Jules Swarts, director of the Premier Concert Orchestra, is closing a very successful engagement at the Schlitz Palm Garden in Milwaukee. Mr. Swarts has accepted a position as musical director in one of the leading theaters in Milwaukee.

KANSAS CITY CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

A fair-sized audience braved the heat and enjoyed the work of Miss Ruth Cochran, soprano, pupil of Mrs. Mary H. Flagg, in her second recital at the Kansas City Conservatory of Music, Saturday afternoon, August 10.

Her voice, a coloratura, was most pleasing in its flexibility and bird-like quality. The famous "Shadow Song" was especially well rendered, and the whole program showed conscientious study and careful training. The flute obligato, furnished by Miss Flo Reiter, added much to the performance, and Miss Cochran was fortunate in having her accompaniments played by Mrs. Flagg in her usual splendid manner.

RUDOLPH REUTER

Rudolph Reuter, who will again head the list of piano teachers in the Chicago Musical College for the next season, according to their latest catalogue, has closed a busy Summer session and gone on his vacation. As in the last year, this is in northern Michigan, where, far from commercial activity and the smoke of metropoli, he will play tennis and walk and swim, and walk and swim and play tennis, in order to be in the best of mental and physical form for what promises to be another big season of teaching. He will motor up in his trusty old Cole-Reuter 13-50, the hyphen being in the nature of a Beethoven-Kreisler hyphen, as he explains it, to account for the many alterations and improvements in the form of cotter-pins, bolts, nuts, etc., that he has attached during the time they have been together.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION AND DRAMATIC ART

Mrs. Natalie Whitted Price has become a member of the faculty of the Chicago School of Expression and Dramatic Art and will conduct special classes in Social Efficiency. This will be an acquisition to the school's corps of able teachers, for Mrs. Price is a woman of broad culture and social experience as well as possessing specific knowledge of her subject. Her musical attainments, as well, have brought her recognition and she has many admiring friends in both professional and social circles.

MRS. MANN'S STUDIO

Two professional pupils of Mrs. Ellen Kinsman Mann appeared in an informal recital last Saturday afternoon. The studio was crowded with eager friends and listeners. The program was given by Miss Stitzel, soprano, and Mrs. Martha Stelzl, mezzo-soprano. Both artists have recently been on Lyceum tours with prominent violinists. Mrs. Stelzl has been with Josef Konecny and Miss Stitzel has been with Theobaldi. There were no printed programs, both singers announcing their own songs. Among Mrs. Stelzl's songs was "Song of Liberty" (Beach), a splendid patriotic song, which Mrs. Stelzl sang with dramatic interpretation. Her voice, of the heavier quality, is nevertheless very smooth and well developed and of great power and resonance.

One of Miss Stitzel's groups contained "One Golden Day" (Foster), "Only a Rose" (Downing), "Mighty Lak a Rose" (Nevin), and "Ah, Love, but a Day" (Mrs. Beach). Miss Stitzel's voice is one of unusual range and clear quality. While she shows herself an artist in dramatic interpretation, she is at the same time perfectly splendid in adapting herself to lighter songs and conveying their original simplicity and intent to the audience. Both these artists deserve to hold high rank in the profession. Mrs. Porter furnished very able and artistic accompaniments.

An Appreciation of Bispham

(From The Billboard)

David Bispham occupies a position quite apart from any other American artist. He has never for one moment ceased to be the first and foremost one in any movement in this country that tended to uplift and further the cause of the American composer and the development of American talent. He was born of an old aristocratic Philadelphia family, and, reflecting all the courtliness and polish of his ancestors, yet there never was a truer democrat at heart, never a friend who was as ready to do the kind and thoughtful thing at all times.

His present activities continue to be the source of wonder and gratification to his friends, not only on account of the splendid condition in which his voice remains, but also on account of the vast amount of patriotic work into which he is throwing himself with his usual enthusiasm. Mr. Bispham was one of the first to volunteer to go to France to sing for the men at the front, long before the entertainment work was as perfectly organized as it is now, and his influence has been the cause of many units going over, so that it is a disappointment to him that a pressure of engagements and the necessity of being obliged to be in New York in the early fall for the rehearsals and performances of the Society of American singers will prevent him going over at this time. Mr. Bispham is one of the founders of this society of American singers, which just now occupies an important position in our musical institutions, as its personnel is entirely American. The role assigned to Mr. Bispham this year will delight his admirers, as they will give him an opportunity to display those remarkable dramatic powers which are still so vivid a memory of his work at the Metropolitan Opera House. Among the roles assigned to him for the coming season of opera in English are: The Corporal in "The Daughter of the Regiment," and Gaspard, in "The Chimes of Normandy," an opera which has been too long absent from our stage. In "Bruschino" he will have the title role. This opera is an absolute novelty to our stage, it never having been performed in this country. It was revived with great success about a year ago in Italy for the celebrated buffo, Pini-Corsi, at whose hands much was made of the title role, which Mr. Bispham is to take in the New York production. In Dr. Geotzl's musical arrangement of Molier's "Les Precieuses Ridicules" Mr. Bispham will have the part of Mascarille, made famous in this country by Coquelin.

Not long ago Mr. Bispham was sent for officially to come to Washington, where he assisted the British Ambassador in opening the Red Cross Drive. The other evening he participated at South Norwalk in the War Savings Drive, sharing the honors of the occasion with George Wickersham, formerly Attorney-General of the United States. During the Recruiting Week he worked with the celebrated lawyer-orator, Job Hedges, and on the Fourth of July sang for the Educational Alliance, where Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the Columbia University, delivered the address.

The American Friends of Musicians in France, with which he is closely associated, have expressed their gratitude to Mr. Bispham for the vast amount of publicity he has been able to gain for them.

He was one of those who assisted Robert Underwood Johnson to raise $100,000 for American ambulances in Italy.

In addition to all of these activities he is at present giving numerous lessons each week and making translations and compiling a book of part songs, to be used for community singing and in the schools, and he is full of youthful energy as a young man of twenty-five. Mr. Bispham's only son, David Bispham Jr., was killed this year in England, where he was fast making a record for himself in aviation service.

American Opera, Sung in American by Americans to an American Audience

Des Moines is again to be visited, some time during the coming musical season, by both the Chicago and San Carlo Grand Opera Companies. Both will regale us with opera that will attempt to make clear to our limited operatic understanding something about people who never lived, and something that never happened. It goes without saying that we will all of us like it, and say so. The operas to be presented, probably "Lucia," "Faust," "Il Trovatore" or the "Barber," will be sung by foreigners, in a foreign language and before an American audience that does not understand either.

Among the personnel of both companies will be found American singers of the first rank who have learned the words, music and traditions of Italian and French opera, and sing them like natives, but to their own countrymen, in a language that to them means no more than polyglot or Digger Indian. But we are supposed to favor that sort of thing and say we like it, because it is "all the style." An American opera company with a truly great American cast, giving grand opera in the American language, the only language we have been taught to know, would neither be accepted nor patronized by any American city for the reason that opera in English is "out of style."

The question of opera in English has been discussed for many years. The stock argument against it is its "unsingableness." John McCormack, Anna Case, Alma Gluck and hundreds of others of our American singers have knocked the underpinning out of that argument. Do we hear Frenchmen say, "I do not care to hear opera in French?" Or, do we hear Italians make the same assertion? How banal, silly and unjustified has been the American attitude toward everything American! But a change is drawing near. Some day we will have American opera, sung in the American language, which shall be to Americans what Italian opera is to Italians and French opera to the French.—Des Moines Capital.

At Ravinia

"Romeo and Juliet" cuts well for the special conditions of Ravinia Park; the edition there gives the lovers in the garden, in the Friar's cell, and in the tomb, so that it is mainly a matter for tenor and soprano. That is just what Gounod's opera was for the sensational crowds at Mr. Campanini's revival, which represented, perhaps, the best ensemble performances in the American annals of the work. Ravinia's restoration of the tabloid on Wednesday night was in happy conditions; no place else within sight or sound of Lake Michigan was so cool and grateful; and the crowd was large for midweek, and eager.

Miss Lucy Gates was Juliet, for the first time in the neighborhood; and she compelled the kindly attitude by sending out word, before the curtain went up, that she never, never said she was better than Galli-Curci, and that it was her agent who said it, and that she thought such things were perfectly foolish, anyway. They are, perhaps. An enraged penman for the Evening Post of New York City, the seasoned and generally continent Mr. Finck, put her to this trouble. Anyway, Miss Gates isn't better than Galli-Curci, as yet; and she is a pleasant summer-night singer of Gounod's caressing tunes, with the insistence of her sisterhood in drawing attention to the circumstance that Gounod put them into circulation in a day when Mr. Hoover was not in austere authority over sugar.

Mr. Harrold's Romeo would, no doubt, have been better on Wednesday if he had not sung Des Grieux on Tuesday, when he was, nearly all the way, at his Ravinia best—and that is the best he has thus far provided in the neighborhood. Mr. Rothier gave the expected account of the Friar's music; his was lovely and right singing in the idiom to which he reacts with ease and exactness. He had been like that on Tuesday, too, for his brief moment as the elder Des Grieux in the San-Sulpice episode of "Manon."—Chicago Tribune.

Municipal Band in Pittsburgh

Representative Pittsburgh turned out last night 12,000 strong in Schenley Park to hear the concert of the new Municipal Band and to participate in the community singing that followed the orchestral program. This is believed to be the largest crowd which has attended the concerts since the season of the Municipal Band opened a month ago. Since that time an increasing interest has been noted on the part of music lovers as well as the public in general and hundreds of automobile parties have become more and more in the habit of stopping in the drives near the bandstand to listen to the music. Last night there were more automobiles than usual, suggesting the presence of some great musical artist. And nearly every machine was vacant; the occupants had joined the chorus.

V. D. Nirella, leader of the band, gave one of his finest programs, which had been arranged by himself, T. Carl Whitmer and the Civic Club, Mrs. E. B. Lee supervisor, under whose auspices the concerts and singing are conducted. The audience appreciated every number, from the pretty little cortege "Bacchus," by Delibes, to the heavy overture "1812," by Tschaikowsky, and the poetic symphony, "Dance Macabre," of Saint-Saens. Applause for these works was ample and spontaneous.

A brilliant number on the program was the rhapsody, "Espana," by Chabrier. This was the second on the program and the recalling of the dark-eyed Spanish maidens dancing with the click of their castanets produced a fine effect as hundreds of men, women and children sat comfortably on the grass.

As an encore after this number Mr. Nirella played his "One Hundred and Seventh Field Artillery" march, which he composed and dedicated to that body of soldiers when he was with them in 1916 on the Mexican border. This proved a favorite with the people.

The overture "1812" proved a fitting climax to the concert and a prelude to the community singing. The bells of Moscow at the end of the overture, blending with the great Russian hymn celebrating the victory over Napoleon, who sought to rule the world a century ago, impressed the throng with the spirit of the present, and the enthusiasm of the people was strong.

The sound of this great classic had scarcely died when the chorus, under the direction of Frederick L. Davies, started to sing "The Star Spangled Banner" with the spirit that marked Tschaikowsky's overture. "La Marseillaise" followed. In the band it had been heard weekly at the head of Napoleon's army struggling against the will of a world and growing silent. But in the throats of the chorus it was "La Marseillaise" of General Foch going to victory with the people. The singers understood this, unconsciously at least, and the music became inspired through the understanding given it.

Among the other works sung by the chorus were "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "The Battle Cry of Freedom" and "Abide With Me."

Vesper Organ Recital in Valparaiso

The vesper organ recital in the Presbyterian Church Sunday afternoon, given by Harry T. Polk, well-known organist of the church and the Schelling Theater, was one of the most delightful musical feasts ever offered to Valparaiso music lovers. Mr. Polk played a varied program of organ masterpieces, ranging from Stoughton's mystical Persian Suite and lyric pieces by Saint-Saens to the brilliant Toccata in D minor by G. B. Nevin and Batiste's Grand Offertoire No. 2, all played in a manner above criticism. His interpretations were characterized by exceptional skill in both manual and pedal technic and thorough knowledge of registration and style.—Valparaiso Messenger.

AMATEUR MUSICAL COMEDY BENEFIT AT MARLOWE THEATRE —AUSPICES FEDERATED WOMEN'S CLUBS

The past month has been a strenuous one for the Federated Women's Clubs of the Third Congressional District (which means the Town of Lake, "The Ridge" territory, Blue Island, Harvey, Chicago Heights, etc.), for, in spite of the wave of torridity that has engulfed us, most of the amateur and "semi-pro" talent in the district—musical, histrionic, terpsichorean—has been rehearsing thrice weekly for the welfare-benefit performance of the musical extravaganza, "Katcha-Koo," which the clubs are to produce at the Marlowe Theatre, W. 63d Street and Stewart Avenue, next Wednesday and Thursday evenings, August 21 and 22, under the stage direction of Earl C. Darfler.

The three principal vocal roles in the play are those of the titular hero, "Katcha-Koo," and the two coquettish daughters of the rich American widow, Mrs. Chattie-Gaddin, namely Prudence and Dolly. Harry L. Fellowes of Auburn Park, one of the most popular of local thespians, has been drafted for "Katcha-Koo," and that he will fill the order admirably, those who have followed the rehearsals have not the least doubt. Miss Julia Keith, the engaging young soprano soloist of the Englewood First Methodist Church, sings the "Prudence" part in her usual appealing style and acts it with a vim. Miss Keith, who is a pupil of Mrs. O. L. Fox, wears a beautiful diamond medal won last year at the Chicago Musical College for special work with Mrs. Fox. Miss Constance Folger, the sister Dolly, has a rich and well-trained mezzo-soprano, and is much in demand for entertainments of this sort. She has proved a favorite entertainer these past months at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Club and also at the Art Institute affairs on Sunday afternoons. Frank Kern, as The Maharajah, and Mrs. Charles S. Elkington as Mrs. Chattie-Gaddin, have minor singing parts. Mrs. Elkington sings at St. Elizabeth's Episcopal Church in Chicago Lawn. She has for many years been active in the Apollo Club.

Through the courtesy of the Armour Company, the Armour Orchestra, with Frank A. Andrews, conductor, has been secured for these two performances. The members have generously donated their services and the Armour Company has agreed to bear any expense that may be incurred.

An adult chorus numbering about fifty has been selected from the various clubs in the district, and it sings the snappy music with genuine snap. The finale will be a patriotic song pageant, in which the entire cast, including some three hundred children, will join.

The proceeds from this entertainment are to be applied to augmenting the Third District fund for maintaining a community housekeeper—a conservation measure endorsed by social service experts, and one of the practical methods of keeping the home fires burning.

Left to right—(1) Whitney Tew, the Vocal Master; (2) Mlle. Roxan d'Oex, Contralto-Coloratura; (3) Miss Winnifred Cline, Secretary; (4) Miss Harriet Cartwright, Concert Pianist, and Teacher of Piano, Theory and Harmony.

The vocal process of the great Maestri of the past, which has been rediscovered by Whitney Tew, is rapidly assuming the place which belongs to the most important fact of musical development.

Mr. Tew says: "The unsuspected qualities of the voice, being brought to light through the process of a correct breath control, are unquestionably marvelous. No difficulties seem insurmountable, and no limits of beauty, range or power practically are the almost instantaneous result of the application of the true principle.

"These results, while they constantly amaze me, are corroboration and undeniable proof that the facts of history are true.

"In the unforced natural activity of the whole mechanism through a sensible and logical breath management, a beauty and flexibility of tone are at once secured which are physical impossibilities under the hampering processes of voluntary manipulation of the modern 'methods.'

"No real beauty of tone or real ability of execution is possible under present ideas, and the simple process of nature, which establishes at once powers of which the world lies today in total ignorance, has been abandoned and completely lost.

"A full, free, beautiful compass of three or four octaves is the normal, the natural, the capacity of all. A short compass is the subnormal, the result of conflicting mechanisms, unnatural—a studied artificiality destitute of all the qualifications necessary to a real art."

Beautiful quality in tone is a necessary outcome of a free instrument, and a free instrument is the outcome of a breath control which commands at all times the whole of the voice, and this is in no case a lesser gamut than about three octaves and a half.

THOMAS NOBLE MACBURNEY

Mr. MacBurney is a man with fine and large ideals, and the proven success of his own teaching and of the teachers whom he has trained as his personal assistants inspired him, several years ago, to add to his studio activities certain things which usually are very far removed from the vocal field.

Therefore for a year or two we have grown accustomed to hear at the MacBurney Studios lectures on all sorts of subjects which have relation to music, and we have listened there also to piano recitals and to playing of other instruments, as well as to talks on poetry, literature and other arts.

The success of all this has shown Mr. MacBurney the wisdom and the feasibility of an incorporated institution in which there should be combined and taught by absolute masters, voice, piano, dancing, theory, painting, dramatic art and languages, as well as specialized branches such as public school music, lyceum and chautauqua preparation and coaching and accompanying, and that all these should be intensified and amplified through special lectures in great variety.

The advertisement to be found in Music News today proclaims in no uncertain manner that Mr. MacBurney has been entirely felicitous in his choice of teachers and lecturers for the new institution which takes the place of the thoroughly established MacBurney Vocal Studios.

In an interview with Mr. MacBurney he gave the following further information:

"What I and the other organizers of the MacBurney Studios, Inc., have had in mind is to give a pupil a broad, general musical education without making it the cut-and-dried course of a musical school. Therefore we have formed what may be described as a co-operative alliance of Chicago teachers who are already well established in their own branches and can give the pupil all the courses necessary.

"The MacBurney Studios, Inc., is a corporation not for profit, but operating under one central board of directors. Suppose a pupil comes to me as an individual teacher for lessons in singing and is found to need instruction in piano or harmony or what it may be. Our own directors know that our affiliated teacher of piano or harmony is dependable, and we can safely advise the pupil to go to that one. That teacher will study the individual needs of the pupil and furnish the instruction required. This element, I think, makes the organization an improvement on the conventional school."

DOROTHEA NORTH

Dorothea North rendered the following numbers at the La Salle Hotel Sunday afternoon, August 3, at the meeting of the Mothers of the Boys of the 149th Field Artillery Aid Association:

Negro Spiritual—Swing Low, Sweet Chariot..Burleigh
Bitterness of Love ..... Dunn
Le Coeur de ma mie ..... Dalcroze

Mrs. North gave an unusual interpretation of the first named, and the remaining numbers received an equal share of applause from her enthusiastic listeners.

She was assisted at the piano by the brilliant accompanist Miss Alma Putman, who leaves soon for New York to assist in a series of concerts to be given at the Biltmore Hotel.

Mrs. North is very much interested at present in singing for the soldiers and jackies, as well as doing Red Cross and surgical dressings work.

Music at RAVINIA PARK

Friday Afternoon

On Friday afternoon two of the most promising artists of the season appeared in the Student-Artist series at Ravinia. They were Lillian Dyer, soprano, and Ellen Ekholm, pianiste. Mrs. Dyer is a Chicago woman who has made great strides in the study of voice within the last four years, and has in the past year entered the professional world, serving as soprano soloist at Unity Church in Oak Park. She studied first with Mr. Karleton Hackett of the American Conservatory, and is now under the tutelage of Mr. Adolph Muhlmann of the Chicago Musical College. She sang the following songs: "Little Star, Where Art Thou?" (Moussorgsky), "Awakening," (Mrs. A. O. Mason) and "Lieti Signor" by Meyerbeer (who, it may be remembered, was a German Jew, both in birth and training, in spite of his being associated with the French and Italian schools of his time). That Mrs. Dyer did not quite do herself justice in the opening song was proved by her far superior rendition of "Awakening," a very dramatic number, and also of the Meyerbeer aria, which was the best suited to her voice. She is the fortunate possessor of a voice of great range and power, and of a penetrating dramatic quality which, with further development, should accomplish much. She was accompanied by Miss Marion Bergman, a talented young artist pupil of Alexander Raab, who was heard at Ravinia some weeks ago. Miss Bergman proved herself no less an artist as accompanist than as soloist.

The second soloist was Miss Ellen Ekholm of Elgin, Ill., a pupil of Harold Henry. Miss Ekholm is only 19 years of age, and so girlish and slight that it is hard to tell just where the vigor and strength come from which she displayed in the playing of such brilliant works as the Rachmaninoff "Polichinelle" and the Chopin "C Sharp Minor Scherzo." It was also altogether remarkable that the clarity of her tone did not once become clouded, even in the most brilliant passages. This was doubly noticeable in an open-air theater, where the acoustic properties are so widely scattered, and where the piano is really too small for the tone vibrations to be well sustained through the whole auditorium. Miss Ekholm gave a very refined and artistic reading to both numbers.

Gennaro Papi resumed his accustomed place at the baton, and as a result the orchestra gave much better satisfaction than it has for the last two weeks. The program as a whole resulted in an unusually enjoyable afternoon.

Friday Evening

The soloists on Friday evening were Mr. A. Zukovsky of the orchestra, and Millo Picco, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera cast. Mr. Hageman conducted, as usual, also accompanying the soloists as superbly as ever. Too much cannot be said of the combined abilities of Mr. Hageman, a rare combination to be found in the same artist, namely, at once the ability to lead and the ability to follow with equal assurance and mastery. The program was as follows:

The Star Spangled Banner.....Key
Overture to Russlan and Ludmilla.....Glinka
Noel, from Symphonic Sketches.....Chadwick
Valse des Heurs (from Ballet "Coppelia") Delibes
Notturno (from Ballet "Coppelia").....Delibes
Caprice Italien ..... Tschaikowsky
Romanze ..... Wieniawski
Polonaise in D .....Wieniawski

Mr. A. Zukovsky

Rhapsody Dance—The Bamboula.....Coleridge-Taylor
Selection .....

Millo Picco

Intermezzo ..... Wolf-Ferrari
Rondo d'Amour ..... Westerhout
March—Pomp and Circumstance..... Elgar

The Glinka overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla," the opera which failed, was full of national color and rich, strong orchestral effects. In many ways this work is so far superior to anything else Glinka ever did that it is sad to think of its fortune as being the bitterest disappointment in the life of its composer.

One of the most impressive numbers on the program was that of our own composer, Chadwick. It was charming in its simple and artistic appeal. With its slow, liquid melody repeating itself and gradually reaching a rich and dramatic culmination, it suggested Dvorak and the intensely emotional quality of his work.

The piquant, coquettish "Valse des Heurs" and the "Notturno" from the "Coppelia" of Delibes (his most charming work) made the usual popular impression. The Tschaikowsky "Caprice" proved disappointing in sustained interest, though the climax was good.

Mr. Zukowsky played with splendid tone and feeling and was very warmly received. The Coleridge-Taylor number was broad and effective, and the repetition of the Elgar "Pomp and Circumstance" was not amiss. It is always popular.

Mr. Picco sang arias from "Dinorah" and "Fedora" with great dramatic effect and beauty of tone. No singer at the Friday concerts this summer has had a heartier reception than did Mr. Picco. He was twice recalled for encores amid loud applause.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Saturday Evening

Unquestionably the biggest successes of the current season have been made in the Puccini Operas and equally certain is it that the reason for this lies in the employment in the three that have been given: "Boheme," "Tosca" and "Butterfly," of the three satisfactory artists, Muzio, Braslau and Kingston.

And this is still true in spite of the fact that while Muzio is a typical La Tosca in figure, face and action, she is very far from being the physical ideal of either Mimi or Mme. Butterfly.

She is big, opulent and full of dramatic fire—qualities which militate against success either in "La Boheme" or "Mme. Butterfly," unless offset by such beauty of voice as to disarm the listeners.

Such indeed is the case with Miss Muzio. But what a pity that the score of "Mme. Butterfly" calls for a fifteen-year old girl, and what a still greater pity is it that the child introduced in the last two acts is supposed to be only one year old.

Both these conditions are impossible of realization on the operatic stage, and therefore the libretto should be revised to the extent of making Mme. Butterfly at least twenty-two, and the child should be introduced after at least three or four years of separation of the parents, thus allowing it to be at least at talking and walking age.

Leaving aside this useless and fruitless fault finding, however, it must be said that Muzio looks as much like Butterfly as do the majority of sopranos who essay the role, and the big child put on the stage was no more ridiculous than at the Auditorium.

And Muzio can sing wonderfully well and on Saturday night she, with Mr. Kingston and Miss Braslau, did sing so surpassingly that the performance of the opera (which was an absolutely complete one) rose to the rank of "best" of the entire season.

"Un Bel di" became under the Muzio manipulation not the usual piece of elaborate vocalization, but a narrative, poignant and full of feeling, while the entire second act became a mood, a story and a charm, not alone through the vocalization of Muzio (Butterfly) and Braslau (Suzuki), but also because their acting was so altogether wonderful and each item of the work of either one fitted into the ensemble with the other so perfectly.

In make-up, walk, pose and action there has never been a better Suzuki in Chicago than is Miss Braslau and, in fact, precious few of the many who have played the part are even comparable to her.

And as for vocalization! The "Flower Duet" (Muzio and Braslau) was a perfect gem and far surpassed any remembered reading.

The same praise must be accorded Miss Muzio and Mr. Kingston for their superb work at the close of the first act.

Mr. Kingston was playing the part for the first time in Italian, yet he was not only reposeful and sure of his vocal art but also in action he was at a point of finesse and expressiveness which he has never excelled in any other opera and which has been equalled by so few tenors who have done Pinkerton here as to become one of the most notable pieces of work done by him this year.

The opera was put on beautifully—and this is not comparative speaking but absolute.

The Chorus was very good, the Orchestra fine and the entire production, under the magnetic baton of Gennaro Papi, was a delight.

The other name parts were well done, D'Angelo doubling adroitly and artistically in Yamadori and the Bonze, making of the latter an unequally striking figure and singing both roles admirably.

Mr. Marr was quite as usual in Sharpless and Daddi gave his very authentic conception of Goro its annual airing. C. E. W.

Other Performances

The Monday concert was conducted by Richard Hageman with the usual great skill, and another Symphony Concert under the same baton will be given tonight (Friday).

This afternoon the Student-Artists Concert will introduce Beatrice Seabury, soprano, and Ernst Bacon, pianist.

On Sunday night "Lucia" was repeated and there were repetitions on Wednesday and Thursday evening.

Tomorrow (Saturday) evening the bill will be "The Secret of Suzanne" and on Sunday evening the deferred performance of "Martha" will be presented.

Music Week at Chautauqua, N. Y.

Reviewed by ALBERT SCHOLIN.

Monday Evening, July 29

The initial performance of the French Military Band, which was given this evening in the amphitheater, was of a character that entitles it to be recorded as one of the most artistic ever given in Chautauqua.

The program, which was rendered by the Musique Militaire Francaise under the direction of M. Gabriel Pares, was perfect in every detail. As the soldiers entered the amphitheater and as M. Pares took his place on the director's platform the audience arose and gave the Chautauqua salute. After the cheers subsided the band played "The Star Spangled Banner" and "La Marseillaise."

This wonderful band is well balanced. Because they employ a larger proportion of wood-wind than our regular American bands there is an increased richness of color. The brass-wind produces a tone of velvety smoothness, upon which there could be no improvement, for not in a single instance did one hear a forced tone from this section.

The first number on the program was the Overture to "Roi d'Ys," by E. V. A. Lalo, which was first produced in Paris at the Opera Comique on May 7, 1888. From the very first announcement of the theme to the thrilling climax at the close the number was enjoyed, as was attested by the applause which followed.

The second number, Mosaic on "Coppelia," by Delibes, opened with a distant rumble of the kettle drums, followed by a beautiful four-part chorus of the brass-winds.

The third number, "The Americans Come," by Fay Foster, was sung by Hartridge Whipp with band accompaniment, and he was greeted with a storm of applause, which did not abate until he repeated the number.

The next number, a violin solo, "Rondo Capriccioso," by Saint-Saens, was exquisitely played by M. Debruille, with M. Truc at the piano.

"Carmen" Prelude and Entr'acte, by Bizet, was the next number on the program, and it was played with a French spirit.

Miss Miller sang "Il est doux, il est bon," from "Herodiade," by Massenet, and she was greeted with a hearty applause.

The Entr'acte from "La Colombe," by Gounod; "La Patria," by Paladilhe, and the "Persian Dance," by Guiraud, were given in their characteristic styles, and as a supplement M. Georges Mager sang "To Those Who Have Died for Their Country." He sang it with much feeling and a repetition was requested.

The program was closed with a march, "Sambre et Meuse," by Rausky.

Tuesday Evening, July 30

"Joan of Arc," historic cantata by A. R. Gaul, the text by F. Enoch, was given at the amphitheater by the Chautauqua Choir, the Jamestown Choral Society and the three soloists for July—Miss Rosalie Miller, soprano; Norman Arnold, tenor, and Hartridge Whipp, baritone—under the direction of Mr. Hallam.

The accompaniments were played by the Chautauqua Orchestra, augmented by members of the French Military Band, with Henry B. Vincent at the organ and Frederick Shattuck at the piano. After the beautiful instrumental introduction by the orchestra the women's voices entered in a quiet pianissimo, "List! We Call Thee; Come." This led up to the opening chorus, "Hail to the Beautiful May," which was given with an abundance of power.

Mr. Arnold was in excellent voice and sang that beautiful tenor, "There Is No One Like Her," artistically.

The duet, "Oh, Welcome the Maid We All Love," was well rendered by Miss Miller and Mr. Arnold, and the women's chorus gave a demonstration of pure four-part singing in the chorus "Come Then."

Mr. Whipp gave a splendid interpretation of "May the Chosen Band," and in the patriotic song "Who Would Not Fight for Freedom" Mr. Whipp sang in his characteristic style.

One of the prettiest choruses in the whole cantata was the Chorus of Peasants, and it was beautifully done. The broadest effect of the evening was attained when the chorus sang the wonderful March Chorus. The Jamestown singers were greatly in evidence in this chorus, as they supplied additional volume, an element of which too much cannot be used in such a chorus.

Miss Miller sang "Lead Ye On the Men at Arms" in animated spirit. Miss Miller's voice is clear, with warmth and color, and she has a great range.

An appropriate climax to this historical cantata is reached in the finale, "Hail to the Beautiful Morning of May," when chorus, orchestra, organ and piano were brought together in a stirring ensemble, which gradually worked up to the closing words, "Her deeds will live in the land evermore."

Wednesday Afternoon, July 31

The Chautauqua Junior Choir shared the honors of the afternoon concert. At 2:30 the children, over 300 of them, marched from the rear of the amphitheater to the choir seats to the tune of "Marching Through Georgia," carrying the American flag and the French tricolor. About 8,000 people were present at the afternoon concert.

The Junior Choir sang six numbers under the direction of Mr. Hallam. All the numbers were well rendered and the audience applauded greatly after each number.

The band appeared promptly at 2:30 and as an introduction played "The Star Spangled Banner" and "La Marseillaise," following with a well-chosen program, beginning with a march by M. Pares.

Three numbers of "La Feria" Suite (Lacombe) were delightfully played, followed by "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delilah" (Saint-Saens), by Miss Margaret Abbot. Miss Abbot has a beautiful contralto voice.

A brilliant fantasie in virtuoso style was rendered by M. Thillois, violin, and M. Truc, piano. Norman Arnold, tenor, then sang "A Song of Liberty" (Mrs. H. H. A. Beach) with band accompaniment.

The program closed with the always liked Overture to "William Tell" (Rossini), which was admirably arranged, the full capabilities of the wood-wind, brass and percussion being employed.

Wednesday Evening, July 31

The ovation which was given the French band when they appeared upon the platform demonstrated that their popularity continues to increase with each performance.

The program opened with "The Star Spangled Banner" and "La Marseillaise," followed by the Overture to "La Patria" (Bizet). It opened with a dashing military theme, fortissimo, which reappears pianissimo, for full band. This led up to the second theme in fortissimo, and after a short interval of silence returned to the second and third themes, and closed with an impressive burst of harmony.

"The Swan" (Saint-Saens) as performed by M. Miquelle was an exquisite display of rich tone, fine phrasing, perfect intonation and deep musical insight. As a second number M. Miquelle played Tarantella (Popper). This dance of southern Italy is vividly characterized in this number for cello and, difficult as it is, the performer possessed ample technic to execute it with ease. He was accompanied by M. Truc, who is a skilled accompanist. The support that he has been giving the soloists during the week has been admirable.

The mosaic on "Manon" (Massenet), which followed, was arranged and orchestrated by Captain Pares. Then came the Ballade Suite "Sylvia" (Delibes), followed by "The Mystic Trumpeter," composed by W. Whiteman, set to music by H. Harty, for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, which was the final number on this enjoyable program.

The work was given by the Chautauqua Choir under the direction of Alfred Hallam. The solo part was done by Hartridge Whipp and the accompaniment was played by the Chautauqua Orchestra, augmented by members of the French Military Band, with Mr. Vincent at the organ and Mr. Shattuck at the piano.

Thursday Evening, August 1

After the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" and "La Marseillaise" the French Military Band opened the program with the Overture to "Phedre" (Massenet). This overture is one which has not been frequently played in America, but much played in France and England.

"The Egyptian Ballet" (Luigini), which is a fascinating collection of dances characteristic of the people of the Nile Valley, was well rendered. Their interpretation calls for tempo rubato, and M. Pares again showed that he is a master of the baton.

The Concertino for Oboe (Guilhaud) was exquisitely played by M. Speyer, with M. Truc at the piano.

Miss Lillian Snelling, contralto soloist for August, sang the well-known "When the Boys Come Home" (Speaks).

"L'Arlesienne," from the Second Suite by Bizet, followed by the Fantasia from "Samson and Delilah" (Saint-Saens), was well received by the large audience.

"Let Me Like a Soldier Fall," from "Maritana" (Wallace), was sung by Charles Hart, tenor soloist for August, with much feeling.

Venetian Dance (G. Pares) brought the concert to a very successful close. Captain G. Pares, the conductor of the French Band, was long a professor of orchestration, instrumentation and composition in the Paris Conservatory. His Venetian Dances are bright, catchy and fascinating.

Friday Evening, August 2

Before an audience equal in size to any that has heard the French Band this week, Captain Pares directed a program which was in interest on a par with those that have preceded.

After playing two national airs, the program opened with the Overture to "The Secret of Master Cornille," by the Pares brothers.

"The Dance of Death" (Saint-Saens) was next given. The general effect of the triangle, cymbals and metalaphone could not be surpassed by a symphony orchestra. The applause was so insistent that the band responded with one of the favorite regimental marches so much liked by Chautauquans.

Miss Lillian Heyward, soprano soloist for August, sang "Je Veux Vive dans ce Reve," from "Romeo and Juliet" (Gounod), with good tone and intelligent treatment.

The second number of the "Two Pigeons," by the band, was a Hungarian Dance, a decided favorite with the assembly.

After hearing the clarinet solos by M. H. L. Le Roy the audience begged for another number. He produced a fine tone and has a superb technic. He was accompanied by M. Truc.

Charles Galagher, bass soloist for August, sang the Armorer's Song from "Robin Hood" (De Koven), with band accompaniment. His reception was such as Chautauquans always give good singers, which Mr. Galagher has proven himself to be. The feature of the evening was unquestionably the final number, which was a collection of popular airs of the United States and France.

Saturday Afternoon, August 3

The first number on the program was a march, "Gasconne" (Lacombe), followed by the Overture to "La Muette de Portici" (Auber). The third number was a symphonic poem, "Phaeton" (Saint-Saens), followed by Concertino for Flute (Chaminade), played by M. Bauduin. This was an exquisite number in the lighter vein, requiring much skill on the flute and containing a melody of entrancing beauty. M. Bauduin was greeted with a storm of applause.

The tenor, M. Georges Mager, sang "La Marseillaise" with real French touch, as no American could do. M. Mager took the audience by storm.

The Spanish Dance "Gran Jota de la Dolores" (Roton) was bright and catchy. This was followed by "Marche Solennelle"

Saturday Evening, August 3

There was not a bit of available space left in the amphitheater at 7:30, at which time the concert started. It was crowded to its utmost capacity. As Captain Pares entered the amphitheater the audience arose and gave him and his band the Chautauqua salute. The audience clapped until the noise was deafening. At every concert the French Military Band has opened the program by playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and "La Marseillaise." The first number on the program was Hymn and Marche (Allier.) This number opens with a hymn, supposed to depict the introduction to a wedding, the march which follows being the bridal procession.

Hymn, March and Dance from "Aida" (Verdi) was followed by "Fantasia on Danish Airs" (Saint-Saens). This number was well rendered by M. Bauduin, flute; M. Speyer, oboe; M. Le Roy, clarinet, and M. Truc, piano.

The Mosaic on "Mefistofele" (Boito) was next given by the band. The music is of two different styles—Wagnerian and the conventional Italian—but its orchestration is bold and independent in its character.

For twenty minutes there was Community Singing, with French Band accompaniment. This gave the large audience an opportunity to take part in the program. After the Community Singing two marches—"American Patrol" (Meacham) and "Marche Lorraine" (Ganne)—were played, and the concert closed with the popular march "Sambre et Meuse" (Planquette and Rausky).

With eight concerts by the French Military Band the Music Week at Chautauqua was a complete success. At every concert the vast amphitheater, seating 8,000 people, was filled to overflowing. The week's program was under the direction of Mr. Hallam. Saturday evening the grand finale took place before fully 10,000 people.

ANOTHER REPORT

Patriotism was the keynote of Music Week at Chautauqua, and it is doubtful if anyone who heard "The Star Spangled Banner" and "La Marseillaise" as played by the Musique Militaire Francaise at the beginning of every program during the week will ever forget the thrill experienced or the feeling of oneness that exists between France and America.

Surely nothing that has been done in the last three years by France to create a feeling among Americans toward her people can equal what these quiet and unassuming musicians did in one week at Chautauqua, for, with their splendidly rendered programs, their supreme soloists, their polished director and, more than all, their charm of manner and ingratiating attitude to everything American, they completely won the thousands who thronged Chautauqua during the week for the inspiring programs.

It was a pretty sight everywhere about the grounds to see the blue uniform surrounded by children begging for autographs, snapping pictures right and left, and through it all the men, from the distinguished conductor, Gabriel Pares, down to the humblest player, good-natured and indulgent to all. In fact there was something touching in the attitude of these brave fighter-musicians toward the children, and never will the writer forget the sight on the afternoon that the Children's Chorus sang, accompanied by the French Band, when the glances of the men up toward the shining faces of the children fairly breathed adoration.

The programs were of uniform excellence throughout the week, and from the inspiring and thrilling military marches to the classics of the French composers the quality of tone and variety of expression made the concerts a pure delight. Of the soloists none made a more profound impression than Georges Miquelle, cellist, who, I understand, has been engaged for the Boston Symphony for next year; and a worthy acquisition he will be. Stepping to the front of the stage from his place as saxaphone player with modest charm, he brought from the cello a purity and sweetness of tone, combined with a marvelous technic, such as the writer has never heard. He was heard only on Wednesday evening, when he played Saint-Saens' "The Swan" and the Popper Tarantelle. He was recalled four or five times, when he finally repeated "The Swan." Never has the writer heard such wildly enthusiastic applause as greeted this boy (for he is only twenty-two), and throughout the week his exquisite playing was the topic of conversation among musicians.

Among the other soloists who gave much pleasure were M. Speyer, oboe; M. Mager, tenor, and M. Le Roy, clarinet. The accompanist for these soloists was Georges Truc, who played the tympani in the band, and it is many a day since the writer has heard so finished and thoroughly equipped an accompanist. M. Truc is a very young man, a Paris Conservatory first prize pianist, and was one of the sensations of the week.

Nothing that the French Band played roused more enthusiasm than the famous march "Sambre et Meuse," which was demanded for nearly every program. No one hearing this march as played by the Musique Militaire Francaise will ever forget the effect of the drums in this popular number.

The management was especially fortunate in the choice of vocal soloists for the summer, as the writer cannot recall quartets of as uniform excellence as were both the July and August singers. The July soloists were: Rosalie Miller, soprano; Margaret Abbot, contralto; Norman Arnold, tenor, and Hartridge Whipp, baritone. For August they were as follows: Lillian Heyward, soprano; Lillia Snelling, contralto; Charles Hart, tenor, and Charles Galagher, bass.

Miss Miller was an undisputed success in her fine singing of an aria from "Herodiade," with the band, on Monday night; Mr. Arnold's best work was in the performance of "Joan of Arc" (Gaul) on Tuesday night; Miss Abbot scored with the familiar aria from "Samson and Delilah," while Hartridge Whipp, in the solo part of "The Mystic Trumpeter" (Harty) gave to the part such beauty of tone and finished musicianship that he made of this most ungrateful bit of voice-writing an unquestioned success.

Miss Snelling, Miss Heyward, Mr. Hart and Mr. Galagher appeared in concert with Sol Marcosson, violinist, and Fred Shattuck, accompanist, on Friday afternoon, and each singer was heard to advantage in several songs and quartet. Especially notable was the work of Mr. Galagher, who has a bass voice of unusual beauty, a rare thing in these days, and Mr. Galagher at once became a prime favorite.

A crowd of about 6,000 attended the final concert on Saturday evening, when Pares gave a program popular in nature but having one or two numbers that were especially pleasing to the serious musician.

Arthur Bestor, president of the institution, requested the audience to greet Conductor Pares with the famous Chautauqua salute, and it was a most inspiring sight to watch these men stand and receive the highest honor possible from a Chautauqua audience. Before the close of the concert there was a twenty-minute Community Sing, under the direction of Mr. Hallam, accompanied by the band and Henry B. Vincent, organist. As the last strains of the march "Sambre et Meuse" died away the French musicians were showered with flowers by the members of the choir—a beautiful sight.

On Sunday morning the Musique Militaire Francaise departed, with a crowd of three or four hundred following them to the station. Everywhere little groups gathered around the different members, for many warm friendships had been formed during the week—and on all sides were heard words of regret that the week was over, mingled with expressions of appreciation of what the association had meant to both France and America. Just as the special car was leaving which carried the visitors away, Rosalie Miller mounted a bench on the platform and sang with thrilling effect, "The Marseillaise" in French, while the soldier-musicians stood at attention. As the last beautiful tones were heard, a cheer from the band filled the air, the car started off, and as far as it could be seen the flutter of handkerchiefs sent back the last mesage of love and good-fellowship from the men who have done so much to cement the already firm friendship of France and America. Vive la Musique Militaire Francaise, and may you long continue the splendid work begun at Chautauqua during Music Week is the wish of all who heard you.

SAIDA BALLANTINE

The many friends of Saida Ballantine are glad to know that she has decided to use her great acquaintance among musical people, as well as her knowledge of the whole musical situation, to the end of building up a musical bureau in Chicago.

Mrs. Ballantine is particularly fitted to do this, inasmuch as she herself is versed in many points of musical endeavor and has, as indicated above, an endless acquaintance among musicians.

For years a member of the Apollo Club, Mrs. Ballantine has been prominent on many business committees, and it is no secret that her personal work was one of the biggest factors in clearing away the clouds which hung over that body last year.

Mrs. Ballantine, a native of Ohio, studied at Oberlin with Andrews (organ), as well as in New York and Chicago.

In the latter city she has been a pupil (piano) of Ottakar Malek.

Both in Ohio and Chicago she has been organist and choir director, and in New York she was a thoroughly successful accompanist and coach.

Also, she has made a number of tours in which she reaped big success both in solo work and in accompanying.

She has been a resident of Chicago for seven years and has won an enviable reputation for literary excellence as well as for fine musicianship.

She knows everybody in the musical profession, and in her new bureau, which is located in Kimball Hall, she will book musical artists, arrange and coach acts for vaudeville, have coaching classes in languages and in a hundred details furnish the things most needed by musicians.

Knowledge of conditions and acquaintance with people are not enough, however, to insure complete success in a venture such as that which has been inaugurated by Mrs. Ballantine. Personality, distinct and forceful as well as pleasant, is also a prime necessity.

And in saying that Mrs. Ballantine has such a personality we are but repeating what is known to all her acquaintances, and we are merely emphasizing the opinion of many in predicting for her abundant success.

The Curtailment of Space

The government has issued a statement concerning new rules and regulations affecting the space in newspapers and magazines which will tend to save print paper; therefore we must all abide by the new law. It means victory. The writer will, beginning today, attempt to follow literally the order of the government, but in doing so our readers will not suffer for news, for I will be brief, concise, exact and precise. The next season promises to be a busy one. No one of importance will be left out, but the space devoted to events will be condensed.

The San Carlo Opera Company

Direct news has reached me whereby I am informed that the San Carlo Opera Company will open its season in New York at the Shubert Theater on September 2. The New York run will comprise four weeks, with prospects of a prolonged season if the financial results warrant it. Leone Zinovieff will make four appearances. Eva Didur, soprano, will appear as Nedda in "Pagliacci" and possibly as Micaela in "Carmen." Signor Merola is the new conductor. All the old members will appear in their favorite roles.

Didur-Bernstein Belmar Recital

The colonist's daily routine of country life was somewhat changed for the evening of August 6th, when the doors of the Methodist Church of Belmar, N. J., were open for a recital. Notwithstanding the heat, every seat was occupied and standees were numerous. Eva Didur, whose successful debut was recorded during the past season at the Metropolitan Opera House, appeared to be on this occasion in excellent trim. Her lyric-dramatic voice was used at its best for the interpretation of various songs. Miss Didur's singing would have been perfect, if such thing is possible, were it not for the imperfect assistance at the piano by Eugene Bernstein, a pianist from New York. The playing was indifferent and a little better than amateurish. The piano must be handled equally well, whether in a country town or large city. Violinist Boshkho rendered various pieces.

The Stadium Concerts Close

After a period of six weeks the concerts given at the Stadium City College were brought to a conclusion on August 10th. The reason given for the curtailment of the season is the hot wave which prevailed in New York. The season has been successful; perhaps the deficit was not as large as might have been expected.

At Ocean Grove, N. J.

Mme. Frances Alda, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sang at Ocean Grove on August 6th for the benefit of the St. Paul's Church of the same locality. On August 10th Mischa Elman, violinist, gave his recital before a good sized house.

THE NATIONAL AMERICAN MUSICAL CONVENTION AT LOCKPORT

Music News is in receipt of a handsome showcard telling of the attractions at Lockport, N. Y., for the American Festival, which will be staged there Sept 2 to 9.

There will be seven full days of concerts, with twenty-one programs, embracing musical artists, speakers and musical organization.

Every composition presented will be American. Nothing will be spoken or sung but the English language. The themes of all the speakers will be typically American themes.

Composers' days, when some of the greatest American composers will be present, will be Thursday and Friday, Sept. 6-7.

"The Humoresque," so cleverly arranged last year by Harry Gilbert, will again be staged under his direction, the date being Saturday evening, Sept. 7.

There is a splendid board of directors, a wonderful list of solo artists, and the entire management of the affair is in the hands of A. A. Van De Mark, who has already proven his versatility and his worth. His address is simply Lockport, N. Y.

PABLO CASALS

Word has come from Spain recently that Pablo Casals has received the highest honor from King Alfonso XIII that it is possible for a civilian to receive. It is an order called "La Gran Cruz d'Alfonso XIII" and is given very rarely. Antonio Maura, the Prime Minister of Spain and greatest figure in Spanish politics, is the only other person who has been decorated with this order in recent years. This was given to Casals for no other apparent reason than as recognition of his attainment as a musician.

Casals has always been extremely close to the Spanish reigning house. As a boy the patronage and friendship of Queen Maria Christina, mother of the present King, meant much to him. They were estranged for some years, due to her misunderstanding of a boyish act that savored of disobedience on the part of Casals. When they eventually met and were reconciled, during which time Casals had become famous all over Europe, she was overcome with emotion and wept with pleasure at the meeting and regret at the injustice she had done him. Casals admits that he was so touched that he wept with her. This same Queen, to show Casals her esteem, once asked him to give her his bow, and returned it to him soon after with a wonderful sapphire set in the handle. This she had taken from her own bracelet, and she sent the gift with these words: "Would that this gem could match in beauty or brilliance a single one of the notes that fall from your cello."

Casals played at Court very recently for Queen Victoria, the wife of Alfonso XIII, for the first time, though he had played numerous times at the Court for her husband and Queen Maria Christina.

GEORGE W. MUNRO

The following recital was given at the Munro Studios on Saturday evening, August 10:

A Bowl of Roses ..... Clarke
Miss Moody
Rose of My Heart ..... Lohr
Katherine ..... Allitsen
Miss Stevens
Open, Thou, My Love ..... Massenet

Welcome, Pretty Primrose ..... Pinsuti
Miss Stevens
The Meadow Lark ..... Gerrish-Jones

Miss Read
One Fine Day (Butterfly) ..... Puccini
Vainka's Song ..... Whishaw
Miss Burns

Although the evening was uncomfortably warm, so that before the program everyone was complaining of the heat, the discomfort was completely forgotten in the course of a most enjoyable musicale. The four young girls who appeared on the program are all natives of Magnolia, Ark., where they have been studying with Mrs. Pope, a former pupil of Mr. Munro. This summer they have spent in Chicago under Mr. Munro's instruction, and two of them are planning to remain over the winter.

Miss Moody, who sang first, was suffering from a bad cold and tonsilitis, so that there had been doubt during the day as to whether she would be able to appear at all. In spite of this handicap she disclosed a sweet, lyric soprano voice, with much potential power and clear enunciation. Miss Stevens' voice was of a heavier mezzo quality, which she did not have under control as well as the other soloists. However, hers was the greatest in power, and with another such season as the one just spent with Mr. Munro, it ought to show considerable development. Miss Read possessed, to this writer, the most pleasing voice of the four. Though not powerful and as yet undeveloped, her tone was perfectly free and unspoiled and charming in natural silver quality. She possessed a charming personality and her ideas of correct phrasing and interpretation were scholarly. Miss Burns is the fortunate owner of a most promising organ. She and Miss Read are planning to continue their studies in Chicago, and we shall be greatly interested to hear them again at some future date. Miss Burns' voice is naturally a dramatic soprano and holds unlimited possibilities. She sang the "Butterfly" aria with enthusiasm and a broad understanding of the text. She impresses a listener with having a fine mind as well as a splendid voice, so that she may be expected to excel in musicianship.

Miss Hermia Braithwaite, who accompanied the singers, did remarkably good work and is a young musician of great ambition who ought to have no trouble in seeing it fulfilled. Though the company was select, it filled the pleasant studio room nicely, and a friendly atmosphere of informality pervaded throughout the evening. It could scarcely have been otherwise, with Mr. Munro and his charming wife as hosts.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

ETHICS AND ESTHETICS OF PIANO PLAYING*

A little volume calculated to awaken much fruitful thought bears the above title. Its author, Constantin Von Sternberg, is a Russian by birth, who, after a brilliant career as piano virtuoso, settled in Philadelphia, where he has for a number of years lived and labored as teacher, writer, lecturer and pianist. His writings include piano solos, chamber music, songs and essays on music and kindred themes.

The publication now before us is dedicated "in token of old and devoted friendship" to Josef Hofmann, "whose masterly artistry has inspired many of its thoughts and strengthened many of its convictions."

It presents ten chapters, as follows:

1. Man and Art.
2. The Interpretative Artist.
3. The Lay Auditor.
4. The Three Phases of Understanding.
5. Rules Are Not Laws.
6. Old Errors.
7. Accent.
8. Tempo.
9. Measuring Through the Ear.
10. Conclusion.

The purpose of the book, as set forth in the opening paragraph, is to show from the net results of the speculations of all ages concerning the relations of life and art that man has evolved art to gratify his craving for a means of expressing his inner life. "In art man writes the history of his soul."

In the second chapter art is explained as a message from soul to soul. A message must be received and understood to be of value. Therefore a reliable messenger is an important factor in its success. Thus we have the creative and the interpretative artist. "Not everyone conversant with the language of sentiment and emotion is inspired to make new revelations," says Mr. Sternberg; "but there are some who are fully capable of fathoming and interpreting them when they are made and bringing them within the mental reach of those to whom without this noble service they would have remained insoluble mysteries."

Often the layman is the most legitimate auditor in a concert room. The learned auditor, having his preconceived prejudices to come between him and the message conveyed to him, is not always the most reliable critic, so Mr. Von Sternberg asserts. A man may appreciate good music without being a pianist or a student of composition, the reader is told; but he must have heard much good music sympathetically interpreted. To the untutored auditor the faithful interpreter is both messenger and missionary.

Chapter 4 teaches respect for beauty of tone, beauty of design and, beyond all, for the thought and feeling behind the design. "What other mission has art," asks the author, "than to open up to the average man that which he could not see and hear and feel without its aid?"

Following the three next chapters, we find that an important aim of the work is to suggest ways and means of conceiving a musical thought intelligently and conveying it with lucidity through skillful phrasing. Accent and pause are mentioned as the tools serviceable in phrasing. The first varies in force, the second in length. Both must be felt instinctively. "Life has no pulse without accent, poetry no metre; upon accent depends rhythm, and rhythm is the handle by which the auditor—musician or layman—takes hold of music," declares Mr. Von Sternberg.

Of the pause he says: "Nothing, not even a false note, causes such distress to the attentive listener as the curtailing of stated pauses. . . . The art pause belongs to those points in the melody where the punctuation should be placed if a text were written under it."

Chapters 8 and 9 are luminous with suggestions. The statement is emphasized that music is not a thing apart from life, but is interwoven with the deepest experiences of the human soul, and that a noble musical composition only yields its spiritual contents when the interpreter gives himself, his keenest sensibilities, his finest instincts, his deepest love and understanding; in short, each and every part of that which constitutes his personality. A great musician, we are told, is not simply one who has acquired astonishing skill in his art; it is a great soul whose medium of utterance happens to be music.

In conclusion, the reader is counseled not to accept any of the advice given in the book without first subjecting it to the touchstone of his own individual thinking, and assuring himself that it applies to his own needs or to those of the pupils with whom he may have to deal. Above all, the teacher is urged to stimulate in the student independent thought.

The keynote to this most helpful little volume is that art is a matter for the multitude, not for the exclusive few; that it is deeply rooted in the soul of man, and that every human being has a right to its refining, uplifting influences.

LAKE GEORGE, NEW YORK

On August 3 a concert arranged by Mme. Bogoutzka-Stein for the benefit of the Red Cross was given in Lake George, N. Y. The artists taking part were Professor Leopold Auer, the great violin pedagogue; Mme. Bogoutzka-Stein, pianist; Lady Edgar Speyer, Max Rosen, and Ruth Ray, the young Chicago violinist.

There was a sold-out house, with all standing room taken, a crowd outside the doors, and programs bringing huge sums.

There was great enthusiasm for the entire program, but Professor Auer was given an ovation after his splendid performance of the Beethoven Sonata in G, and he was finally forced to repeat the last movement.

Altogether the concert was an event in the life of Lake George and will long be remembered.

Music News

Vol. 10 Chicago, August 23, 1918 No. 34

Los Angeles, August 8.

Editor Music News: —

Allow me to thank you most cordially for your championing of American piano compositions in a recent editorial. Your sentence, "This writer has long contended that the reason the really big piano works of American composers are not appreciated is that they are 'read over' once or twice, or maybe even played once in public and then laid aside without further delving for content or working over for polish," deserves the gratitude of every serious composer in America. Nothing was ever so true, and the average teacher and student on this side of the water will have to admit it.

Aside from the playing of MacDowell's most worthy and beautiful piano literature in this country, mighty little American piano music of the more serious style is recognized. I maintain that there IS plenty of material right here in America worth the study and worth repeated public hearings.

The American composer does not need any more "boosting" now for his SONGS AND BALLADS. American songs have at last acquired a permanent recognition, both here and many places abroad, but piano music, chamber music and orchestral music have yet to make their way. It is true that one finds a sonata by a contemporary composer on a program of an American pianist or an advanced student, but it seems to me it is once in a long while, and done as a matter of patriotic policy and not from a sincere wish to recognize the work in a DIGNIFIED, ARTISTIC WAY. True, there are many exceptions, but I merely wish to make this point in passing.

Your statement that an American piano piece of serious dimensions should be practiced month after month with the same care that is lavished on a European piece and played before many audiences before any sort of judgment is passed upon it, is food for further thought on the part of those American pianists and students who can see little good in native piano music.

It was not my intention to introduce the personal element into this letter, but let me voice the regret of many of my contemporaries, as well as myself, that most of our fourth, fifth and sixth grade piano numbers meet with so little consideration, while our first to the third grade (teaching pieces) are taken up. Surely, when we write piano music that requires a little more concentration and study and public playing, our efforts should meet with some consideration.

I am sure we are ALL grateful for that recognition already bestowed upon the more serious and technical pieces. The Great War and our entrance into it has caused some American teachers and American students to place our sonatas, and our fifth, sixth or seventh grade piano selections on their programs and in student recitals. Still, American piano music is away at the bottom of the list.

If other musical magazines will only take up the propaganda from time to time (specifically I mean as Music News has just done), I believe much will be accomplished for American piano music.

With thanks and best wishes for this space and for your efforts in our behalf, I remain Cordially yours, (Signed) CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN.

BUSH CONSERVATORY

Another announcement of interest to the musical profession is that Bush Conservatory has secured the exclusive teaching engagement of Mme. Louise Dotti, the renowned soprano and coach of opera and oratorio. The management of the Conservatory feels that it has achieved another triumph in associating this distinguished artist with the teaching force of the institution.

Mme. Dotti has had wide experience in opera and oratorio. The friend and colleague of Melba, Sembrich, Patti, the two De Reszkes, and other stars of the "golden age of opera," she brings the rich heritage of a glorious career to her teaching and represents better than any other teacher now before the public the traditions and achievements of this great group of artists.

Mme. Dotti's pupils have attained gratifying success in concert and opera. Among them are Alma Beck, contralto, who has achieved international reputation, and Cyrena Van Gordon, who is now the leading mezzo-soprano with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. Miss Van Gordon has just been re-engaged on a four-year contract by Cleofonte Campanini, the director general of the Opera Company. He writes Mme. Dotti:

"I wish to compliment you highly as a vocal teacher, most particularly for the method and style in voice-placing since the art of 'bel canto' has been almost entirely forgotten. However, all this does not surprise me when I recall the number of operas you sang, together with my brother, the late Italo Campanini, who often spoke to me of your marvelous vocal attainments."

Mme. Dotti will begin her teaching at Bush Conservatory at the opening of the fall term, September 16, and will be available for private lessons, both in voice-placement and development, in which she is an authority of the highest order, and in coaching opera roles.

A Statement and Some Letters

The Statement

Hertz, a German, gave us the wireless. Shall we drop it for the duration of the war? We have forgotten its origin in the realization of the great good it has done. We cannot forget the origin of Wagner's opera, for every word of it falls in German—that hated accent which commands the kaiser's vandals in war-torn France.—From The Etude.

Letter No. 1

Salida, Colo., July 3, 1918.

The Etude, Philadelphia, Pa.

Gentlemen: I would like to modify a statement made in the "First Prize" letter, "Affirmative," in the "Case of Richard Wagner."

It is here said, "Hertz, a German, gave us the wireless."

Why Hertz any more than Joseph Henry (1797-1878) or Sir Oliver Lodge (1851-?) or others of the early experimenters in this field of research?

The Webster-Merriam dictionary, in a brief article on "Wireless," states the following:

"Although more or less successful researches were made on the subject by Joseph Henry, Hertz, Oliver Lodge, and others, the first commercially successful system was that of Guglielmo Marconi, patented in March, 1897," etc., etc.

Joseph Henry was an American, born 1797.

Oliver Lodge was an Englishman, born 1851.

Heinrich Hertz, a German, born 1857.

Marconi, an Italian, born 1874.

(Signed) HELENA BINGHAM BURTON.

Letter No. 2

July 9, 1918.

Miss Helena B. Burton, Salida, Colo.

Dear Miss Burton: Thank you for your letter of July 3. If it were possible for us to make a correction in either the July or the August issues of The Etude, we would be very glad to do so; but it is impossible for us to do anything about this until the September issue of The Etude and then, as you may readily understand, it would be entirely too late.

Very cordially,

(Signed) JAMES FRANCIS COOKE,
Editor The Etude.

Letter No. 3

Salida, Colo., Aug. 13, 1918.

Dear Mr. Watt: Can't you write a brief editorial from the enclosed, without being bitter—just truthful? For my own part, I do not see why the readers of The Etude should not have had the truth of the wireless, for their edification, even though it did not get to them until September.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) HELENA BINGHAM BURTON.

American Music Festival

The Musical Messenger, published at Lockport, N. Y., is at hand and contains much information regarding the great American Music Festival, which is to be held at the Auditorium in Lockport, N. Y., on September 2 to September 9.

Many fine singing and instrumental artists are pictured in this circular and the list of announced speakers is a long one.

There will be a festival chorus, under direction of Alfred Jury of Buffalo, and the list of composers who will be present and the mass of American music which will be presented is amazing.

J. Lawrence Erb of the University of Illinois will again be presiding officer, and the entire business management is in the hands of the founder of the institution—A. A. Van de Mark.

W. H. Hoerrner of Colgate University will speak on "Music in the Schools," Harold L. Butler of Kansas University on "Musical Needs," Lynn B. Dana of Warren, Ohio, on "Standardization," Leonard Liebling of New York on "Some Aspects of American Music," Charles E. Watt of Chicago on "Commercialism," and there will be a number of famous orators, whose subjects will be other than music, these including Edward Howard Griggs, Hon. Woodbridge N. Ferris, George W. Pound and others.

Carrie Jacobs Bond will be a guest of the week, Harry M. Gilbert will again stage a "Humoresque," Oley Speaks will sing a program of his own songs, Henry Bethuel Vincent will preside at the banquet, Arthur Wilson of Boston will give practical illustrations of song interpretation and there will be numerous other attractive features.

The program for Monday morning, September 2 (opening day), 10 to 12 o'clock, reads as follows:

Registration of Artists, Speakers and Guests
Presentation of Festival Badge of Identification
Seating of Official Bodies, Home Defense Reserves and Guests of the Opening Session

PUBLIC SCHOOL MUSIC AT THE AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

This has been one of the strongest years in the history of the department of Public School Music of the American Conservatory. Under the guiding hand of O. E. Robinson, who has had a very wide experience in this field of musical education, the Department of Public School Music has become one of the leading institutions of its kind in the country. Its graduates have been more in demand by superintendents of schools throughout the country this year even than in former seasons.

Among the early positions filled by its graduates this season, perhaps the most important is the engagement of William Breach as supervisor of music in the high schools of Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Breach has made a big success in this vicinity as supervisor of music in the schools of Park Ridge and Desplaines, Ill., and of the Mann Township High School.

Gertrude Wood, another American Conservatory graduate, has been chosen supervisor of music at Phoenix, Ariz.

Clara Lawrence will serve as supervisor of music at West Bend, Iowa.

Lola Gibbs, class of 1918, will supervise at Ellinwood, Kan.; Marjorie Gurnett at McHenry, Ill.; Josephine Hall at Cleveland, Okla.; and Florence M. Hanson at Huntingburg, Ind.

Jessie O. Ferguson, class of 1917, has just been elected supervisor of music at Belle Fourche, S. D.

Mr. Robinson's efficient assistants are Katharine Baker, the well known composer of cantatas for children; Edna B. Wilder, the very popular soprano soloist of the Oakland M. E. Church, and Frances Burch, the able supervisor of music in the schools of Hinsdale, Ill.

THE MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE

A very astonishing circular, at hand, shows the buildings owned and occupied by the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, which has been aptly named, "The West Point of Christian Service."

Among the multiplicity of buildings pictured on this circular is one of the new music building, in which is housed the Moody Institute School of Music, an institution at once unique and effective.

———###———

Casals—Mr. George Kelley has recently taken ten dates for Pablo Casals in New England. These engagements will be fulfilled during different periods when he is within easy communication of that territory. After his first appearance in New York he is to appear in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Washington, Baltimore, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville, Rochester, Milwaukee, Duluth, St. Louis, Springfield, Houston, Forth Worth and Dallas.

———###———

Worcester—The entire program of the coming Worcester, Mass., Festival (September) is to be devoted to American compositions.

———###———

Knoch—Ernst Knoch is spending this month at Fish Creek, Wis.

SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL

The final concert of the summer season was held in the Recital Hall, Wednesday evening, August 14. The program was complimentary to the teachers of the branch schools who were attending the normal session and was given by members of the main school faculty.

The opening number, Grieg's Sonata in G for violin and piano, played by Guy H. Woodward and Georgia Kober, presaged an evening of more than usual interest. Mr. Woodward's impeccable technic, beauty of tone and, above all, fidelity to the composer's message form a combination rarely found in present day violinists. Let us be grateful for a few artists who yet adhere to the old-fashioned belief that the story the writer is telling is of as much import to the audience as the manner in which the story is told. The flawless support given by Miss Kober must have been inspiring to the soloist, as well as a delight to the large audience.

Mrs. Mabelle Church Van Alstyne's reading of Edwin Markham's "Shoes of Happiness" was so well done than she was compelled to give another number.

George Ralf Kurtz, with Miss Kober at the second piano, proved his musicianship in the rendition of MacDowell's Concerto in D. Why are not more of MacDowell's compositions played nowadays? He was America's greatest composer and always gave a message worth while.

The climax of the program was reached in the sonata for violin and piano by Cesar Franck. There is a dignity and majestic grandeur in this work that evidently appealed very strongly to Mr. Woodward and Miss Kober, judging from the fine presentation they gave.

The program closed with the popular scherzo from Litolff's Concerto Symphonique by Miss Kober, with Mr. Kurtz at the second piano, and was played with the brilliancy and dash that are necessary for a perfect interpretation. W. A. H.

Tuesday Night

That Claudia Muzio is a dominant figure in the grand opera world today was again proven on Tuesday evening when she repeated her performance of the ill-fated Tosca. Madame Muzio does more than interpret Tosca well, albeit that she gives it a vocal finish that is almost incomparable. She adds to her delineation a human, vital something that carries it sweepingly beyond mere operatic traditions and conventions.

Tuesday night must have been a most trying ordeal for the singers concerned. The noise of the storm that persisted in being an exterior accompaniment, was most annoying, and at times almost obliterated the music.

Madame Muzio and her worthy colleague, Mr. Rothier, were not to be frustrated, and despite these unkindly elemental disturbances, continued to give what culminated in being one of the most splendid performances of the season. Mr. Rothier gave a most effective reading of Scarpia. His voice lies a trifle low for the role, but his fine sterling qualities of both actor and singer served him well, and his performance was exceedingly worth while. Mr. Kingston was especially good in the last act. The first act being omitted, the tenor has but to wait patiently for the final opportunity. His rendition of the big aria, "E lucevan le stelle," was unusually beautiful and was sung with a warm, opulent tone.

Thursday Night

"Aida" does not lend itself to the condensed version as well as some of the operas, and yet Ravinia singers do what they do of it so tellingly that it is one of the attractions of the season, as last Friday night's large audience attested. Most certainly it is one of Claudia Muzio's greatest roles, and when one adds this one immediately places the high standard mark of approval thereon, for Mme. Muzio has yet to offer to us a performance that lacks in any degree the details and essentials of importance. Her subtle dramatic instincts, her well modulated conceptions of musical values, and her almost flawless vocal equipment are constantly in evidence in this opera particularly.

The "Ritorna Vincitor" and the "Patria Mia" were splendid examples of what versatility in singing really means. The former aria, strikingly balanced by the rebellious and almost savage mood, combined with the fear and paganistic reverence, was a huge contrast to the pathos and retrospective quality in the latter. Miss Braslau was an excellent foil as "Amneris." Her voice gratefully lends itself to the music, but as yet it seems almost too high for her. Her performance contained a dignity and regal bearing competent for a role of this type.

Mr. Kingston sings "Rhadames" well, more dramatically than sympathetically perhaps, but then this may be a matter of one's conception of the character. Mr. Picco's "Amonasro" was a fine, well sustained interpretation. His voice was gloriously effective, and he sings it with a barbarousness and abandon that never border on the grotesque. Why can't that thirty-minute intermission be cut down to fifteen and the remaining fifteen minutes be devoted to more opera or a return trip to our metropolis?

Friday Afternoon

On the whole, the best student-artist concert of the season at Ravinia took place last Friday afternoon. The soloists were Miss Bernice Seabury and Mr. Ernst Bacon, both of Chicago. Miss Seabury graduated in 1914 at the Hathaway-Brown School in Cleveland, Ohio, where she studied with Mme. Rita Elandi and made many public appearances, serving two years as soprano soloist in one of the largest Jewish temples. Since her return to Chicago she has studied at the Chicago Musical College, winning the operatic scholarship, and also appearing in the Auditorium Theater as winner of the diamond medal. She sang "O! Ma Lyre Immortelle" (Gounod), "O! Si les Fleurs Avaient des Yeux" (Massenet) and "As We Part" (Ilgenfritz). Her voice is a full, resonant, dramatic soprano of remarkable range and carrying quality. She responded to enthusiastic applause with a very fine interpretation of "Habanera," which showed her voice as one containing great possibilities.

Among the talented amateurs who have apeared at Ravinia this season, Ernst Bacon deserves high rank. He has appeared in public a limited number of times since entering Northwestern University, where he is now a student. He played three numbers, "Etude, C Minor" (Chopin), "On the Lake of Wallenstadt" (Liszt), and "Vallee d'Obermann" (Liszt). In all these the young man proved a credit to his childhood training under his mother, and to recent student work with Glenn Dillard Gunn.

Papi was again absent from his accustomed place at the conductor's desk, and, as usual, was greatly missed. The orchestra, however, did a little better than formerly under the substitute conductor. This was perhaps due to the fact that there seemed to be more body to the program. The orchestra numbers included the Overture to "The Barber of Seville," the Gavotte from "Mignon" and the Aragonaise from "Le Cid" (Massenet).

Friday Night

The Friday evening program was more than usually delightful under the never-failing charm of Hageman's baton, and with Ruth Miller as soloist. The program opened with the Dvorak "Carneval" overture, intense and colorful. Then followed the Borodini sketch "Of the Steppes of Central Asia." This composition, with its air of desolate monotony, will always be considered, as it was at the time it was written, one of the most fortunate works of the great Russian friend and contemporary of Cui. The Alfven "Midsummer Wake," with its beautiful harmonic professions, was given in a suitable graceful style. After this came the lugubrious Tschaikowsky "Slav" March.

Miss Miller sang the Waltz song from "Romeo and Juliet" superbly. Her voice, heard by this writer for the first time, is beautifully clear and bell-like, and very fresh and unspoiled. That she is an artist of the highest order, in concert as well as opera work, was proved by her charmingly unaffected reading of the old song, "The Lass With the Delicate Air," sung as an encore. Miss Miller's singing, together with her youthful brightness and enthusiasm, won the audience completely.

Saturday Night

A big audience on Saturday evening was treated to one of the most colorful, as well as delightful bills of the season, consisting of "The Secret of Suzanne," given in entirety, and the second act of "Jewels of the Madonna," Claudio Muzio appearing in both.

This singing actress is very versatile and has created success in many and varying roles. She is not entirely all comprehensive, however, as to opera repertoire, and it is not possible to say that her Countess in "The Secret" was an unqualified success. She is too big for the part and the music is of too light and frothy a character to entirely suit her powers.

She was, nevertheless, very interesting and she did some things with the role, both musically and histrionically, which were original and decidedly, also, very good.

Picco, looking not at all as the Count should look, was yet vocally fine and in action commendable, while Daddi in the Mime part of Sante was at his cleverest and best.

It may be unnecessary to add that this was probably because there is no singing to do in the part, but it is certainly true that when Daddi does not sing there is a distinct feeling of relief.

The stage pictures in "The Secret" were beautiful, and the opera was presented in every respect as well as it has ever been done at the Auditorium.

The second act of "The Jewels" provided Muzio a much more agreeable opportunity than did the Wolf-Ferrari miniature opera, and she rose to the more elaborate music of the greater score avidly.

It would be difficult to conceive of the part being better done, either from the acting or the singing standpoint, than she did it.

Morgan Kingston was the Gennaro and, although he does not fit the part physically, he scored in it on Saturday night one of the greatest successes of his career.

His singing, throughout, was beautiful and his acting in the opening part of the act was entirely appropriate and natural.

But, at the close of the act he rose to a tragic climax which was compelling, and, although his means of expression were simple, he yet managed to impress a picture which was thrilling in intensity and in meaning.

It would be a joy, indeed, to see and hear this fine artist in a complete performance.

Cordelia Latham played the part of Carmelia, and Graham Marr was the Rafaele, appearing only in the duet scene with Maliella, which he sang excellently.

This opera was also put on elaborately and with fine attention to detail.

Both the Wolf-Ferrari scores were handled by Papi with distinction, the intermezzo being particularly well done.

Other Bills

Lucy Gates, very palpably, failed to live up to the expectation that she would rival Muzio in popular favor and her engagement terminated abruptly at the end of last week.

On Sunday, Edith Mason reappeared in "Martha" and was scheduled for Wednesday evening in the same opera and for Saturday night as Micaela in "Carmen."

In this opera, Sophie Braslau will have the name part and will, unquestionably, create a sensation, others of the cast being Kingston, Rothier, Daddi, Miller and D'Angelo, the baton being in the hands of Richard Hageman.

On Thursday afternoon "The Message" was presented by the Junior Drama League Players, under the direction of Bertha Iles, and this was preluded by some beautiful dancing by Joan Peers, who has justly been named "the art child."

Today (Friday) Florence M. Grandland, a talented young pianist of Chicago, will appear, Bertha Kribben, violinist, also being scheduled.

This evening the usual Symphony Concert, as also on Sunday and Saturday afternoons.

Next week will be the final one of the ten weeks' season, the last performance being on Labor Day, September 2.

CENTRALIZING SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Under the caption of "What's in a Name?" the following indicative article appears as the introduction to the "Centralizing News," which is published by the Centralizing School of Music:

"Patrons, friends and strangers frequently inquire for an explanation of the application of the word 'Centralizing' as the name of our institution. Briefly, the word 'Cēntralizing' means 'to gather to a center,' 'to systematize,' etc., and this definition is the eptomized explanation of the system of teaching and business plan of this institution.

"Consciously centralized brain action is the secret of all success in the material world and it is the purpose of every teacher in the Centralizing School of Music to demonstrate and explain to her students how such action can be attained and practiced. As the student becomes familiar with the principle that makes such action possible he soon perceives he has attained knowledge that is invaluable, for it is applicable to everything that pertains to successful living. Therefore, such training raises music study from the plane of luxury to the plane of necessity.

"The purpose of all education is to develop constructive thinking, and centralized brain action, plus emotional understanding and mastery, is an infallible guarantee of the constructive thinker.

"The business plan of the institution conforms also to its name, in that from the Central Studios are radiated some twenty-two branch studios, and the demand for establishing new studios has been greater than we could supply.

"What's in a name? A purpose, a plan and a fulfillment."

GROUP OF AGNES LEIST-BEEBE'S PUPILS IN RECITAL

Five pupils of Agnes Leist-Beebe gave a program of arias and songs in her studio in Kimball Hall on Friday evening, August 16, and pleased the audience very much with their singing.

Miss Esther Anderson is possessed of a very gorgeous natural organ and the bigness of her voice is most discriminately handled. Her singing of an "Aida" aria was in good dramatic style and her diction and style in this and Arditi's "Se Seran Rose" commendable. Her versatility came to light in the additional rendering of a group of songs in English, one manuscript number, "Isn't It True?" (Ferguson-White), winning much favor for singer and song. A clear and well sustained legato in her pianissimos was a thing of joy to hear and remember.

Miss Emily Jones, a coloratura with a voice in which one rejoices to find flexibility and trueness to pitch, two qualities most desirable in this range of voice, was both convincing and pleasing in the "Ah fors e Lui," from "Traviata," and a song by Ambrose Hawley, "The Butterfly." Perfectly clear enunciation, which at no time affected intonation, was also noted.

Miss Esther McGahey disclosed one of the freshest of soprano voices and she sang with good understanding for so evidently young a singer, putting real feeling into the "Flower Song" from "Faust," and a nice lightness into "The Swallow" by Dell' Acqua.

Mrs. Scottie Green Leist has a lyric soprano which shows much promise and a sweet, ingratiating personality, but her singing lacks conviction and sureness at the present. Miss Anna Lichtenfeld in a group of songs was visibly affected with nervousness and her production was, therefore, not absolutely sure. Miss Ada Kriger has a voice with both volume and quality, and her singing of Cadman's "Land of the Sky-Blue Water" was good, but it, as well as the Musetta "Waltz Song," was marred by careless diction.

Accompaniments were played by Miss Olive Hill, Mr. Alfred Holmes and Mrs. Beebe.

LEVITZKI'S SENSE OF HUMOR

While bathing with his sister at Avon by the Sea, where Mr. Levitski is spending the Summer, his sister overheard two young ladies mention his name; she called his attention to it and he could not resist listening. The two young ladies were discussing musical topics very loudly. He heard his name mentioned again among many other artists. He drew closer so that he could hear more, and one of them said, "Did you ever hear Mischa Levitzki play?" The other replied, "Yes, he is wonderful, and I am looking forward to going to all his recitals this Fall again. I have heard him many times, but he is so serious I have never seen him smile, and do you think he is only 19 years old?" The other replied, "He looks about 40." At that Mr. Levitzki couldn't resist the temptation to talk to them, as they had not recognized him in his bathing costume. After a quarter of an hour's innocent banter, in which Levitzki showed he could laugh as heartily as any one else, he bid them adieu laughingly and said, "You have had your desire to see Mischa Levitzki smile, because I am that serious young pianist." At that the girls shrieked with embarrassment and ran away as fast as they could.

SINAI CENTER ORCHESTRA

The Sinai Center Orchestra, under the direction of Maurice Goldblatt, gave an interesting, varied and well-rendered program at Municipal Pier last Friday evening, under the auspices of the Drama League of Chicago.

The orchestra has a membership of from fifty to sixty and is well balanced except in the bass section. As this is an amateur organization, one can imagine Young America say to himself, "Why carry a bass viol when a violin weighs almost nothing?" So naturally the lighter strings constitute the main part of the orchestra. Yet it must be said that there is more of a wind section in this than in most amateur orchestras, resulting in a decided improvement in variety and color.

The writer has long been an earnest amateur orchestra "fan." We cannot have too many such organizations and we cannot hear them too often, nor can we show them too much appreciation. This is the material that in time will become available for our increasing number of symphony orchestras. America is surely waking up, from an orchestral standpoint. But it must be urged that more young people take up the study of such instruments as the viola, bass, oboe, bassoon, etc. An equal amount of time and talent expended upon these instruments will get the student farther along the road to professional success than the usual instruments studied.

The orchestra from Sinai Center is particularly fortunate in having as its director so musicianly and routined a man as Maurice Goldblatt. A playful wind cutting up capers with his music in the first numbers feazed him not at all. He conducted the balance of the program sans music. A violinist of high rank, he is able to infuse into his young people much of his magnetic personality, intense feeling and interpretative power. The immense audience was enthusiastic and heartily applauded every number.

The concert numbers included "Marche Militaire" (Schubert), "Valse des Fleurs" (Tschaikowsky), "American Patrol" (Meacham), Overture to "Le Caid" (Thomas), Three Spanish Dances (Moszkowski) and "Coronation March," from "Le Prophete" (Meyerbeer).

Miss Ruth Kuerth, a well-schooled soprano of beautiful voice, sang "One Fine Day," from "Mme. Butterfly," so effectively that the audience justly insisted upon an encore.

IRVING GINGRICH.

Langer—The Ora Padget-Langer Concert Company was one of the successful attractions at the Lincoln, Ill., Chautauqua on Aug. 18, when they appeared both afternoon and evening. The personnel of the company includes Mrs. Ora Padget-Langer, the well known contralto; Charles Mitchell Mixer, a favorite young Chicago violinist, and Clara Campbell Moffett, harpist, with Mrs. Charles Orchard at the piano.

Mixer—Charles Mitchell Mixer, Chicago violinist, filled two dates with the Langer Concert Company at Lincoln, Ill., under the management of the Coit-Alber Chautauqua, where, as is invariably the case, he met with great success. Mr. Mixer has been teaching all summer at the American Conservatory, and has had such a demand upon his time that he has been unable to go away for more than one week.

WHITNEY TEW STUDIOS

At the "at home" of Whitney Tew's pupils on Sunday, Mr. Tew explained to the guests the appogiata, or breath control, used by the old Italian Maestri.

This principle forms the basis of the extraordinary results which are being reached by all of Mr. Tew's pupils.

Mrs. Elsie Melius gave a clear illustration of a developed appogiata by singing Henschel's "Morning Hymn" with a powerful dramatic accent, which she followed by a perfect example of pianissimo singing in Nevin's "O That We Two Were Maying."

Dorothy Wood and Werra Schuette, two of Mr. Tew's advanced pupils, sang as usual with the ease and faultless enunciation which characterize the work of this studio.

Miss Alice Schaffner showed an unusual capacity in sustained phrasing.

Miss Pauline Bernstein was successful in showing this breath support, especially in her last number, which was so effective as to bring enthusiastic applause.

Emma Berg, Winnifred Cline and Hazel Henninger also contributed to the success of the afternoon.

The Misses Wood, Winnifred Cline and Hazel Henninger gave Mr. Tew creditable assistance in bringing the subject of his talk before his audience in different stages of development.

Harriet Cartwright, Lucy Levy and Winnifred Cline proved efficient accompanists.

FROM THE STURKOW-RYDER STUDIOS

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder is making fifty records for the foreign catalogue of the Q. R. S. Company this Summer.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder has added a number of new compositions to her repertoire, among them being the A minor Concerto by MacDowell, which she is to play in Lockport September 2 at the Convention of American Musicians.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder is teaching repertoire in the form of lecture-recitals to many of the most distinguished of Mrs. Dunning's class, some of whom come from distant states.

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder will give a recital in honor of Mrs. Dunning and her class August 25 at her Kenwood studios, the program consisting of the Saint-Saens Concerto in G minor, the Arensky Concerto in F minor, the MacDowell Concerto in A minor, and the Mozart Sonata in F major, with the second piano part by Grieg. Miss Lillian Parks will be the assisting artist.

The big Australian house of Nicholson & Sons has taken up the compositions of Mme. Sturkow-Ryder and is featuring them extensively there. Mme. Sturkow-Ryder is also writing some analytical notes for recent publications which they are presenting.

Dimond—Bernadine Dimond, the Chicago cellist, will return to Chicago next month from a twelve-week Chautauqua tour with the Hadley Concert Company.

THE PROBLEM OF NERVOUSNESS

By DANIEL BONUS, PSYCHOANALYST

It is an open secret that even great artists with years of experience are nervous in public, at least until the program is well under way. Some go so far as to tell us that such a condition "keys" them up to their responsibility. They have become so much accustomed to this feeling of uneasiness that they consider it necessary to success. The student is told that constant experience in public work will gradually reduce the tension until he can do himself justice before an audience.

In the first place, anyone may notice that the nervousness manifests itself through temporary abnormal or unusual actions. Some turn red in the face; others turn pale. We have all witnessed or perhaps experienced trembling, shaking, dizziness and, in extreme cases, hysterical actions.

Those who claim that they are never nervous in public experience a sense of relief, at least, "after it is all over." This sensation of relief indicates a previous psychic strain or nervous state which is merely not recognized by the individual who thinks that he was free from anxiety. It is repressed to such an extent that its existence is emphatically denied.

The only way discovered by science in which the person can be free from such impediments is to understand the actual meaning of such actions. To understand abnormal actions of any kind we must leave our own field of music and convenient philosophy, etc., and enter the field of neurology. It is in this phase of scientific research that we find the solution of so-called psychopathic actions, or those actions that are opposed to normal or average actions.

Each individual has a personal history, different from that of any other individual. Is it not reasonable, therefore, to claim that each unusual action has its source in the particular experiences of the person displaying such action? For this reason the problem cannot be solved by any superficial or general rules. Merely to state that over-anxiety causes the performer to lose control is to describe an effect and not a cause.

Analysis of individual cases reveals first of all the fact that nervousness represents a conflict between two opposing psychic streams or forces. On one side is the conscious desire to make a creditable appearance, based on the preparatory work that has made such appearance possible. There is also a wish to be well thought of, personally, by the people in the audience. This wish strives to exclude or hide everything objectionable in order to display the good qualities conspicuously. On the other side of this "mental tug of war" are numerous unconscious impressions that have been repressed before people since childhood. Here we find all of the habits and impulses that are inhibited because society places its disapproval upon such actions. Yet it is in the very fiber of the human being to have such impulses. These are the pleasurable impulses of childhood which we are compelled to abandon in the face of stern criticism from parents.

I have called them unconscious impressions because they exert their influence upon us without our knowledge. Until we clearly understand these primal impulses of ours, we blissfully think that old habits and desires are buried, never to come to life again. We may succeed in repressing or forgetting them, but they reappear in a substantial form which consciously mystifies and annoys us, for the reason that they interfere with serious work. It is the purpose of the new science of psychoanalysis to trace all unusual actions to their source and interpret them so that the individual may be freed from such impediments to efficiency.

I realize clearly the radical step I am attempting in touching on a subject that is so entirely foreign to the education of a musician, but it is my opinion that such education in the future will include such analysis so that he may overcome the distressing experiences of public performance. It is only by facing the truth as we find it in scientific research that we may build the future of art and life. To make the idea more clear I can cite the following illuminating passage written by Dr. Wm. A. White:

"The path along which mankind has come has been a long one. Like the dusty traveler we have come a long way on the road, and we, too, are dirty, begrimed and travel-stained; the marks of the journey are upon us. To one who has tried to fill in the details of this journey, each individual, everything human, will come to have a new, a vivid interest. He will begin to see in a thousand and one indescribable details the evidences of the nature of each individual conflict and indications of the happenings along the particular path which he has come. Every little quirk of expression, facial mannerism, restless, nervous and apparently unmotivated movement, every slip of the tongue, and posture of the body, every superstition or prejudice, every interest and every opinion will each be an indication fraught with the richest material for illuminating character. As Freud (the discoverer of psychoanalysis) very well puts it, 'He who has eyes to see and ears to hear becomes convinced that mortals can hide no secret. Whoever is silent with the lips, tattles with the finger tips; betrayal oozes out of every pore.'"

This "long road" leads back to childhood, as before stated, and it is here that we discover many impulses of which we have later been ashamed. The very thought of them causes us embarrassment. So it is that we are embarrassed or distressed before an audience because we are unconsciously reminded of our historical past, and part of our energy is taken up in an effort to prevent this past from becoming known publicly. It is analogous to the efforts we made when we first began to know shame. But when does shame begin? Certainly not in the first few years of life. Any close observer may notice that children feel no shame, even when undressed. Shame is a reaction to our customary overestimation of sexual facts, causing the child to assume an evil attitude toward natural physiological functions. Dr. Freud says: "This age of childhood in which the sense of shame is lacking seems to our later recollections a paradise, and paradise itself is nothing but a composite phantasy from the childhood of the individual. It is for this reason, too, that in paradise human beings are naked and are not ashamed until the moment arrives when the senses of shame and of fear are aroused; expulsion follows, and sexual life and cultural development begin. Into this paradise the dream can take us back every night; we have already ventured the conjecture that the impressions from earliest childhood, in themselves and independently of everything else, crave reproduction, perhaps without further reference to their content, and that the repetition of them is the fulfillment of a wish." This wish is both childish and unconscious. And it is through the analysis of our childish wishes that we can arrive at actual accomplishment.

E. H. SCOTT LECTURES

"Music of the Allies" will be the subject of a lecture by President E. H. Scott of the Western Conservatory tonight at McLeansboro, Ill., in connection with the commencement exercises of the branch at that place. There are six graduates, and the program will consist entirely of selections from English, French, Italian and American composers.

Lindley—Florence Caro Lindley, soprano of the Hadley Concert Company, is touring Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota, on the Lincoln Chautauqua circuit.

Irons—Myrle Tyler Irons, who has spent the past two months visiting in Nebraska, has returned to Chicago and has reopened her studio in Kimball Hall.

Craven—Carl Craven, tenor, has been engaged to conduct community sings at South Bend on Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 26 and 27.

LEST WE FORGET

The article in last Sunday's Tribune, signed "F. D." (which doubtless stands for Frederick Donaghey), clearly was written on hearsay. The gentleman is comparatively a newcomer to our city; he may have acquaintance with the leading musicians (the soloists) of our great orchestra, but does he know the "rank and file"?

Does he know that for years the orchestra has been known among musicians, the country over, as a "German" orchestra? That since we entered the war many of the German-born musicians, knowing themselves greatly in the majority, have shown an actual delight in making things uncomfortable for those born in the allied countries by addressing them, or talking in their presence, in German? More than a year ago, in a propagandum to "square" the orchestra with the public, the use of German was prohibited—but the practice persists.

As to the truth of the charge that certain leading musicians have spoken as a loyal American could not speak, I do not know, except by hearsay.

But I do know that the chief accuser of perhaps the most prominent musician of them all (the accuser's name is not Julius Furman) said in my hearing, more than a year ago: "This G— d— America!" For this I reported him to the Department of Justice, but nothing came of it!

The management of the orchestra (and I do not include any sub-manager who has lately been talking for publication), I mean the executive committee of the Orchestral Association, has in its power to settle for all time the question of the loyalty or disloyalty, of citizenship or non-citizenship of its musicians, by giving orders that henceforth no one be engaged, whether as director or as a private in the ranks, unless he be American-born, or American by a completed naturalization; and that, while the war lasts, no one of German or Austrian or Hungarian birth shall, under any condition, be engaged.

If the orchestra is to be kept up to its numerical strength of last year, at least seven men will have to be engaged. No trouble to find in Chicago seven men, or seventy men, of American birth, or British, French or Belgian or Italian, fully competent to hold their own in our orchestra, and do full credit to it.

S. F. NEWHALL.

Here follows the F. D. article to which Mr. Newhall refers.—Ed.

It is doubtful if the Chicago Orchestra will be junked, despite the thoughtful efforts made in the name of patriotism. As the best of modern organizations in kind, it could easily survive the loss of one, or three, or five, or seven players, even last desk men; but no orchestra ever developed into a great ensemble, as Chicago has been under Thomas and Stock, could long survive a mischievous campaign such as has been slinkingly carried on for more than a year in the belief that the hue-and-cry might be started against the conductor and the management.

The fantastic notion of dropping Mr. Stock because he is, technically, an enemy alien, is eloquent of the degree of insincerity underlying the vocal fuss of the last ten days. The men and women to whom he is unthinkable as a conductor in war are, man for man and woman for woman, those to whom he was unthinkable in peace. Pin them down to categorical questions and answers, and not one of them even hints at a sound reason why he is not rightfully and logically in his position. Some of these are the same men and women who told me, when I came to Chicago in 1907, that he was a pro-tem man, out of the question as the permanent conductor, and put there just to go through the motions while the directors made a choice as among Paur, Nikisch, Wiengartner and Mottl.

These persons are not interested in the loyalty or the allegiance of a cellist, or a flutist, or a player on the fagotto. The excitement which had its start, no doubt, in a quarrel among the men, simply provided a fresh opportunity in the effort to "get" the conductor. It was, I guess, wellnigh impossible to air the charges against Steindl and his several accused fellows without involving the Orchestra as an institution, but out of the inquest is come a cloud of blah and bushwa which is nauseating to anybody in touch with the facts.

No honest American would make a plea for immunity in behalf of any of the accused simply because of membership in the Orchestra. There is, perhaps, less excuse for any member who voices or practices disloyalty than in the average case of German-born residents of the United States; for from the day we went in the directors and the management have insisted that the spirit of the organization must be the spirit of the nation rightfully bent upon complete victory. If the allegations against the several accused men be proved to the satisfaction of the government, to punish them to the statutory limit would be to do the Chicago Orchestra a great good.

Mr. Stock's has been a fairly hapless ordeal since mid-April of last year. He has carried himself through it with poise, restraint, good judgment and a dignity never at variance with his intelligent consciousness of the circumstances. I know of no man or woman who knows him and doubts his loyalty; and I know many men and women who know him well. Among those who talk against him—always, of course, preluding their disclosures or suspicions with the admonitory "This is confidential!"—are some who know him; but they are not on the level, and can be easily urged to admit that they are not. —F. D., in Chicago Tribune.

THOMAS REMINGTON

The following press comments were given to Mr. Remington's "Messiah" performances last season:

The singing of Thomas Remington, baritone soloist, pleased the large audience and added much to the rendition of the oratorio. Mr. Remington has a baritone voice which shows operatic qualities of high merit. His tones are full, round and mellow. He sang with a sincerity and originality which delighted his hearers, great breadth and splendid interpretation were shown in the aria "For Behold," as in the other solo parts rendered by Mr. Remington. His singing had that artistic touch and finish which always proves so delightful.—Manhattan (Kan.) Mercury.

The bass, Thomas Remington of Chicago, has a voice of ample range and power and he seems thoroughly at home in the music allotted to him. He has a commanding stage presence, which made him a favorite at once. Especially telling was his delivery of "Why Do the Nations," a number which taxes the average singer in breadth and poise.—Abingdon (Ill.) Kodak.

Thomas Remington, bass, sang with the power and virility that only a man of his stature can command, carrying his audience by sheer force, coupled with exceptional ability. His rendition of "Why Do the Nations" concluded a performance of genuine merit.—Hammond (Ind.) Times.

FRENCH MILITARY BAND AT THE MUNICIPAL PIER

Among the many weekly attractions at the Municipal Pier the appearance of the French Military Band on Sunday evening, August 11, must not be forgotten, for it was certainly a very memorable occasion. It seemed as though all Chicago must have been there and this writer was at first in great danger of not gaining entrance, together with the hundreds of other people who were turned away. It was a stirring sight to see the large auditorium at the end of the pier lighted up with its red, white and blue lamps and the spacious stage filled with French musicians of the first rank, all in uniform, as all have seen service in the great war. This sight, with the flags of the allies hanging above them and a cosmopolitan audience, full of patriotic enthusiasm, must have inspired everyone present with a feeling of the nearness of the two nations, such as was never felt before, we were so knit together in the brotherhood of our cause.

The band was brought here through the co-operation of the Board of Public Works and the Civic Music Association, two of our most distinguished municipal organizations. This is only one of the many enterprises in which the Civic Music Association has been interested during the past year, and it may not be amiss to say here that the public must not fail to keep itself fully aware of the work and worth of this growing organization and give it the constant support which it needs as one of the most important factors in the community life of our city.

The concert on Sunday evening was contributed through the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., with whose support the band, known as "La Musique Militaire Francaise," has been making a musico-patriotic tour of this country. It was sent to America in May under the direct patronage of the French Government and is composed entirely of men who have been in service. They are all musicians of splendid standing, and the conductor, M. Gabriel Pares, was for many years leader of La Garde Republicaine," the most famous military band of France. The present organization includes some of the survivors of the former band, of which many members have fallen or been crippled.

The program given contained the finest type of band music, including many old favorites, as well as a number of patriotic songs. M. Pares' own "Franco-American Rhapsodie" was in the form of a medley of French and American patriotic airs in variation, closing with a musicianly elaboration of the "Star Spangled Banner," which caused a tumult of enthusiasm among the crowds which thronged in the doorways. The soloists also did distinguished work, although they were somewhat at a disadvantage because of the constant noise of people coming and going and of the officers trying to keep order. Especially impressive, however, was a tenor solo by M. Mager, "Aux Morts pour la Patrie," the words of which were written by Charles Peguy, killed at the Marne in September, 1914. "The Marseillaise" and "The Star Spangled Banner," given in closing and sung with superb feeling by M. Mager, were rousing to the last degree.

FRANK DUNFORD

When the Paulist Choristers gave, a few weeks ago, in Chicago, the closing concert of their trans-continental tour, there was present a capacity audience and intense enthusiasm.

And at no one point of the program was this enthusiasm more in evidence than when Frank Dunford stepped forward to sing his solo group.

This was not alone because of his great popularity and the fact that his personal friends in Chicago are legion, but also because, through past experience, the music lovers knew that a great musical treat was about to be delivered.

Mr. Dunford has one of the richest and biggest basso-cantante voices ever heard in Chicago, and his acceptance as a musician and a song interpreter has been along lines commensurate with his great voice and his fine intelligence.

As one endorsement of his voice, his personality and his integrity, it can be stated that up to the time he left Chicago to make the long tour with the Paulist Choristers he had been bass soloist in the quartet at the First Congregational Church in Oak Park for ten years.

This is a great recommendation as an isolated fact, for, during that time, there have been several fine directors there and a great many excellent solo singers, which facts, coupled with the further one that he has sung in numerous concerts throughout Oak Park and Chicago, place Mr. Dunford, very definitely, in the front ranks of Chicago's favorite singers.

Mr. Dunford has also been cantor at Temple Israel for five years and sung as soloist with the Paulist Choristers in almost every concert given by them during the past five years or longer, both in Chicago and on the many tours they have made.

And, in the big tour just completed, and which, to the sorrow of a great many people, constituted the farewell to Chicago and the west of Father Finn and his Chicago organization, Mr. Dunford proved himself a veritable tower of strength.

He was the only baritone soloist of the entire trip, and sang solos and concerted parts at every concert throughout the six months.

He thus made his personal appeal to no less than three hundred and fifty thousand people, and it is very safe to say that all of this number will remember his voice and his personality, and that he will be persona grata whenever he again appears in any of the towns covered by this trip.

But not alone did he prove his musicianship and his artistry day after day throughout this memorable six months (which touched both the Atlantic and Pacific in its itinerary), for when it was proven that the chief difficulty of the entire venture lay in the business management of affairs, Mr. Dunford stepped to the front and, entirely without special remuneration for that work, took up all the burdens of the financial end of the matter and managed them so carefully and adroitly that the tour of the Paulist Choristers will go on record, not alone as a wonderful artistic success, but also in the fact that it made great sums of money for the cause which was the reason for making the trip.

Mr. Dunford is now announcing his intention of accepting oratorio and concert engagements for the coming season, and has exceptionally fine gifts and preparation for both, not to mention the fact that his experience has now become so extensive that there are few singers before the public so well fitted to take up exacting musical tasks as is he.

Great Lakes Concert Quintet

The latest contribution of Capt. William A. Moffett, commandant of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, to constructive propaganda in this country is by way of an organization of former symphony orchestra and concert performers, styled "The Great Lakes Concert Quintet." Captain Moffett has given special permission for this quintet to tour the country, playing at the leading educational and musical centers.

Captain Moffett's first use of music was by means of the well known Great Lakes Naval Band, of which Lieut. John Philip Sousa is director. The work of this great bluejacket band during recent Liberty Loan, Red Cross, War Savings and Salvation Army drives is too well known for comment. It was regarded as one of the greatest single elements that contributed to the success of the Third Liberty Loan drive, influencing the sale of bonds variously estimated from five hundred million to a billion dollars.

The Great Lakes Concert Quintet promises to be another great morale builder, carrying the message of undiluted Americanism to music-loving America. It is composed of the following artists:

John Doane, organizer, formerly head of the organ department of the Northwestern University School of Music. Mr. Doane's musical training included work with E. H. Lemare of England and C. M. Widor of Paris. He was graduated from Oberlin College and also from the Oberlin Conservatory of Music, where he was retained on the faculty as instructor of pipe organ and musical theory.

Walter Brauer, cellist, studied harmony, theory and composition with Cyril Graham of the Columbia School of Music, and has toured the country in concert work as soloist, earning a name as a thorough student of music and a cellist of distinct merit.

Hermann Felber, first violinist and musical director of the quintet, received his early training with Ludwig Becker, former concertmaster of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, latterly studying with Leon Sametini. Mr. Felber's association with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the age of 18 and his later work with the Berkshire String Quartet of New York City are well known.

Robert Dolejsi, who plays the viola in the quintet, studied with Sevcik, being admitted to the master class for violinists in the Royal Conservatory of Music, where he was awarded the Royal State diploma, being the second American ever to attain this honor.

Carl Fasshauer, violinist, began the study of the violin at the age of 10 with William Happich; he was also graduated from the violin department of the Temple University. He had been associated, up to the time of his enlistment in the navy, with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. For the past five years he has studied with Dr. Thaddeus Rich, one of the favorite pupils of Joachim, and now concertmaster of the Philadelphia orchestra.

The quintet will present programs, including the best works of modern composers, as well as those of the older masters. Their concerts are arranged with a degree of musical discretion that will make them appeal both to the thorough student of chamber music and those folks who are "just music lovers."

Every man in the organization has had musical training and association of the finest. They bring to the interpretation of their programs a quality of ripe musical understanding only possible for men who have seriously studied their instruments; making up what they lack in years by a vitality and virility that will class their work as the equal of the finest chamber music organizations ever heard in this country.

The entire proceeds of this tour are to be turned directly into the work of the Navy Relief Society, the naval organization that cares for the families of sailors, and for the sailors themselves, should they return from the war incapacitated. This is one of our noblest war charities and, as someone has aptly styled it, "The society that guards the homes of the men who guard the seas."

THEATERS

POWERS THEATER

Powers', long known as "the parlor theater" of Chicago, has, for more years than one can recall, catered to the highest class clientele in the city and has presented during that time countless hundreds of successful stars and plays.

It is doubtful, however, if ever a star has been more popular there than May Robson and, even in so poor a play as "A Little Bit Old Fashioned," she scored during the past ten weeks a constant succession of full houses and nightly ovations.

She is distinctly, in the parlance of the street, "a wonder," and those who did not see her in the engagement just closed will be keen to welcome a return engagement.

Powers' this week is dark, but can be depended upon to announce its usual splendid list of attractions for the coming season.

OLYMPIC THEATER

The Olympic is again fortunate in presenting Fiske O'Hara, who has been the attraction there last week and this in "Marry in Haste."

This is the usual conglomerate of romance and melodrama necessary to a successful Irish play and it affords Mr. O'Hara ample opportunities for his graceful dancing, pleasing singing and altogether good acting.

He has been drawing excellent audiences and has proven himself a staunch favorite with the Olympic clientele.

His support is good and the entire performance moves with celerity and ease, and it is liberally punctured, of course, with song and humor.

"Turn to the Right," which played 319 successful performances during its former long run in Chicago, returns to the Olympic next Monday evening for another engagement with practically the same cast as before.

ORCHESTRA HALL

So marked was the success of "The Great Love" at Orchestra Hall last week, it has been retained for a second seven days.

It is thrilling, indeed, in its war aspects, and the love story part of it is well taken care of by Harron, the Gishes, Walthall and others of the Griffith stars.

Also there is a distinct London society element and, possibly, the curious throng is attracted largely by the chance to see Lady This and Mrs. That in poses in a pictured charity bazaar.

The music at Orchestra Hall steadily improves. The leader of the orchestra is not honored by his name on the program, but is, I believe, George Bass. He is exceptionally good, and his own solo bits are artistic in the extreme.

At one point in the picture there is some solo piano playing depicted on the screen, and this is beautifully illustrated in synchronization by the pianist in the orchestra.

This artist, for such he is, is not programmed either, but he certainly does fine work, and in this he is aided greatly by the fine Baldwin piano at his disposal.

MUSIC IN NEW YORK

By JOSEPH DE VALDOR

The Boston Symphony

Within seven weeks the rockets of the musical season will be ablaze, perhaps with greater illuminations than in the past, and this in spite of the war. The Boston Symphony is still in existence, minus a conductor—all the candidates for this post have been approached with no satisfactory results. None of the mentioned probabilities have accepted and no reasons have been given by the respective musicians. In the past two weeks two names were prominently mentioned—Mr. Tulio Serafin, formerly conductor of the Metropolitan Opera and at present leading opera in Italy, and Camille Chevillard, the conductor of the Lamoureux concerts. Of the two, the Frenchman is better qualified—he is known as a great leader of Beethoven and Wagner, and he never conducts without giving the masterpieces of the above composers—even in these troublesome days. It is not known whether the great conductor will leave his beloved Paris to accept the Boston post. Mr. Tulio Serafin, though an operatic conductor, is said to be a capable leader of symphonies, but many musicians doubt his ability. To make comments would be unnecessary; we shall wait until we convince ourselves "de visu." We hope that by next month the problem of conductorship at the Boston Symphony will be solved and that a great leader will be chosen for the post.

John McCormack Sings at Ocean Grove

Since the Irish tenor invaded our shores he has been nicknamed the "Voice of Erin." The ingenious management of John McCormack discovered a new title, which it applied, for the first time, alongside his name, "The Minstrel of Nations." Let there be no confusion about the meaning of the word. A minstrel, in the eyes of the masses, is a negro singer or a singer interpreting negro songs, but to musicians the word minstrel has another significance; it means clearly and purely a national singer, a certain hero, worshiped by the respective nationality for the rendition of the native popular songs. If John McCormack is not a French or Italian minstrel, there is no doubt about his being an American and Irish popular tenor. McCormack's recital flashed brilliantly up and down the New Jersey coast, and up to the date and hour of his appearance the eager admirers were counting time up to Saturday, August 19.

The great Ocean Grove Auditorium was jammed, both off and on the stage, and the same followers from the Hippodrome and Carnegie Hall, as well as from the Metropolitan Opera House, came to enjoy one hour and a half of magnificent singing.

We are going deeper and deeper into the war—some of us may be overseas when John McCormack reappears. Many a man and a woman in the audience gave thought to their beloved son in France when the Irish tenor sang "Keep the Home Fires Burning," for sobbing and weeping were heard all around. He brought home the love of mothers and fathers in such a way that when we left the hall the heart still felt thrills. The maternal love was best depicted in "Little Mother of Mine." "The Long, Long Trail" was again a stimulant for the audience. "The Star Spangled Banner" was magnificent. "Macushla," "Mother Machree," "Ave Maria" (Schubert) and other songs brought the huge attendance to the tenor's feet. The enthusiasm was unbounded and the applause was thunderous. Some 7,000 people attended and more would have been present to hear him if the capacity had been larger.

Lieutenant McBeath of the British Flying Corps, at present on a furlough, was again presented in violin numbers and gave an excellent obligato to the singing of Gounod's "Ave Maria." Edwin Schneider was at the piano.

BALLANTINE BUREAU AT AUDITORIUM HOTEL

At the regular meeting of the Chicago Woman's Patriotic Association, held Aug. 15, the following program was given:

Ave Maria ..... Gounod
Miss Mary Todd of St. Louis
Mr. Levakoff, violin obbligato; Miss Tamminga at the piano.
Pianologue .....
Miss Irma Becklimberg
America, My Country ..... Hesselberg
(New National Hymn, dedicated to President Wilson.)
Miss Ethel Tamminga and Club
Miss Sullivan at the piano.

Miss Hannah G. Sullivan, vocal teacher and opera coach of Boston, gave a most interesting talk on her experiences as the first volunteer worker at the American embassy in Berlin in 1914. Immediately following the declaration of war, Mr. Gerard asked Miss Sullivan and others to make out passports, as the American embassy was crowded with German-Americans and others who were anxious to have the protection of America.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. This is done in the belief that this matter will be found to be of great interest to a large number of people. This is in no sense an advertising department, and no items will be accepted for pay

I Want to Know

Now keep your nether garments, also your shirt, where they belong, company promoter. I am asking only for information.

I have traveled about a lot with young women companies recruited and exploited by agencies. I have studiously refrained from trying to find out what they get for their work, but some information was thrust upon me, and I am wondering if it is typical.

I have been told of some agencies that pay their girls $25 per week the first year and jump them by the enormous leaps of $2.50 per week for the next year, etc. Thus a girl starting at $25 per week working forty weeks in the year would make $1,000 the first year. Out of that she pays for eating and wearing and laundry, which cannot amount to less than—well, let's take her road time. It is almost impossible to get along and be decently fed and housed for less than $3 per day. That takes about $21 of her $25, leaving her $4 for clothing and laundry. At this rate she will have about $160 to clothe and launder herself for the entire year. I have omitted anything in the way of reading matter, presents she would like to give somebody, and everything in the universe in the shape of luxuries or pleasures.

Now, what I'd like to know is how much does the manager who throws this company together and peddles it to a bureau man get for that girl's services? I want to know what profit he makes off that girl's career. Does he clear more than she does? She is patient and loyal and does not complain. She doesn't call herself a slave or anything like that. But when I see girls eating dill pickles and sleeping behind the piles whenever they are planning some expenditure that a house servant or a stenographer or a saleslady could make with impunity, I wonder and wonder how much money is really being paid for the services she gets so little for.

I have figured carefully and cannot see where she can clear a red cent at such a wage, and remain respectable. And those of us who have been on the road and associated with the young women in question take off our hats to them in the matter of straight-laced, puritanical good behavior. If the girl's people be well to do and she is doing the road work merely for the experience and the travel, that would be different. But if she is doing the work for a living—that's about all she gets out of it, if that. And she is swapping so many years of her life for it at that.

And I say this: If any manager makes as much as $15 a week off any company that is not paid enough to save that much among them every week, he ought to be dealt with. His immortal soul will be much more greatly benefited by asking a little smaller profit than his bank account is benefited by profiteering in human lives.

Now, maybe, I have the wrong dope. And if anybody who reads this is not sending out girls at $25 a week and railroad. I haven't hit him. If he is, and he has a good defense, I should be tickled stiff to have him correct me. I am unhappy in believing what I am compelled to believe about this situation, in the absence of better or different information. Always, when I have an unfavorable impression of any man or any business, that man or that business can please me no better than by proving me utterly wrong. I want to be wrong when I think unkindly of anybody or anything.—Gillilan in the Lyceum Magazine.

Steindel's Wife Talks

Bruno Steindel may soon cast his famous cello aside, condemning it to the silence and dust of oblivion. The delicate instrument, the delight of music lovers since it was shaped by the hands of Carlo Bergonzi, the Italian master cello builder, in 1742, is likely soon to be strummed by the symphony star for the last time. For Steindel is at odds with the world.

Neighbors hearkened in vain for the almost human voice of Steindel's cello last evening. But the pretty little cottage on Birchwood avenue, just a few paces from the lake, remained silent.

"Mr. Steindel is so discouraged!" exclaimed Mrs. Steindel today, when seen at the home. "He wouldn't touch his cello last night. And he even said perhaps he would never touch it again." This with a pathetic smile.

"It would have been so much better if Walter Ferner and Mr. Steindel had met at the corner and fought it out with their fists," continued the musician's wife. "Instead, Mr. Ferner made the charges of disloyalty against him.

"And at this time! Mr. Ferner has declared several times that he would bitterly revenge himself upon Mr. Steindel, because he didn't get a position at Ravinia this summer. And this is his revenge!

"Mr. Steindel practices two or three hours a day. And years ago he used to practice five hours daily. It is not as if he came to this country and made a fortune and won fame. He was well known when he was a member of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. But now he's so discouraged."

The famous cello wasn't in sight. But a glistening grand piano, with shining ivory keys, stood in one corner. On the table a few volumes in German lay scattered, including a German edition of Leo Tolstoy's "War and Peace." Over a bookcase hung a picture of Queen Louise, Prussia's "martyr" queen.

"Mr. Steindel has such a fine ear for music," Mrs. Steindel continued. "But—isn't it strange?—he has no ear for languages? And, although he has lived here for twenty-seven years, he hasn't been able to learn English. And it happens so often that his words are misconstrued and that he means something entirely different from what he says."

Outside, on the glass porch, an American flag fluttered languidly in the breeze. It's been there quite a while, neighbors said.—Chicago Daily News.

Bruno Steindel in U. S. Inquiry

Cellist, Among Symphony Musicians Accused of Disloyalty, Makes Denial to Borrelli

Bruno Steindel, leading cellist of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and rated one of the four greatest cellists in the world, denied to Assistant District Attorney Borrelli yesterday that he had said Americans could "go to hell except for their dollars."

He professed loyalty to the flag and declared he had played the American national anthem a thousand times. The reason, he said, he failed to arise during the playing of the French anthem was that no one told him to stand up.

He also said he did not declare President Wilson was working for England.

On the other hand, Walter Ferner, formerly a pupil of Steindel, declared positively the famous musician had made the statements attributed to him. Ferner was corroborated by Julius Furman, another musician.

Mrs. Steindel admitted telling a phonograph record clerk that she didn't want "such stuff" as "Somewhere in France Is a Lily," because she was a German.

Joseph Zetteluman, kettle drummer, denied he had by gross insults shown contempt for the national anthem.

Denial came, as well, from Richard Kuss that he had declared he would rather kill his son than have him learn the English language. Also from William Hebb, a trumpet player, that he had made disloyal statements or ridiculed the national anthem.

Nearly a dozen witnesses will appear today before Mr. Borrelli to continue the investigation, including three men directly accused of additional disloyal remarks.—Herald-Examiner.

Oppenheimer Brings Five American Divas

During the coming music season Manager Selby C. Oppenheimer intends to introduce to local music lovers no less than five of America's leading prima donnas. These include Anna Fitziu of the Chicago Opera Company, Lucy Gates, Anna Case, America's great American singer; Mabel Garrison, a member of the Metropolitan forces, and the lovely May Peterson, about whom so much has been written in fulsome praise. It is a big undertaking for Oppenheimer, but he has entered into the propaganda of American artists for the American people with great enthusiasm and is confident of success.—Pacific Coast Musical Review.

Mme. Hassler-Fox in Milwaukee

Her voice, a contralto of the most pleasing quality, has carrying power and strength, and showed no traces of fatigue in the rather high aria. The songs were especially well done. In Wolf's "Verborgenheit" the singer showed excellent musicianship and deep feeling. Spross' "Awakening" was brilliantly sung and was so enthusiastically received that it had to be followed by two encores.—The Milwaukee Free Press, November 20, 1916.

The voice, contralto, is sweet and golden. The singer has a fine art and a great sympatico which make for appeal and beauty. Her performance elicited great applause.—Milwaukee Sentinel, November 20, 1916.

THE "ELIJAH" PERFORMANCE AT WINONA LAKE, IND.

REVIEWED BY CHARLES E. WATT

In connection with the Winona Lake Assembly there were two music days last week under the general direction of H. W. Owens of Chicago and Winona.

Following the annual Eisteddfod, which occurred on Tuesday, there was given on Wednesday evening the annual oratorio performance, the bill for this occasion being Mendelssohn's wonderful "Elijah."

H. W. OWENS

One says "wonderful" advisedly, for the music of this great work is such as to be acceptable, alike to professional and lay hearers, and, while it is of great proportions and effectiveness, it is yet within the powers of non-professional singers, provided they are in the hands of a master conductor and have the upholding of good accompaniment and fine soloists.

All these factors were present on last Thursday evening in positive degree.

Mr. Owens, director of several choirs in Chicago and of countless choral societies throughout Ohio, Indiana and Illinois (including the Haydn Choral Society of Chicago), is an "institution" at Winona Lake, and the visitors there always expect something fine at his hands and are never disappointed.

Thomas Remington, who was especially engaged to sing the part of Elijah, is a Chicago singer of note. He is director of music at Warren Avenue Congregational Church and has just been elected head of the voice department at Northwestern College at Naperville, Ill., besides which he has a class at the American Conservatory in Chicago.

Lillian Landwer, soprano, has often been heard as soloist at Winona and also at many choral events in Chicago.

She is an established teacher in Chicago and is soloist at Warren Avenue Congregational Church.

Mildred Wessman, contralto, has had the advantage of study with a number of vocal masters in Chicago, including Mr. Owens, and is rapidly gaining wide recognition.

She was one of the prize winners in the Tuesday contest at Winona and contralto soloist in "Elijah."

Haydn Owens, a splendid pianist, is now in Y. M. C. A. army service, but was able to serve in his old capacity as accompanist at Winona while on leave of absence.

Henry B. Roney, who had just completed his work as pageant director at the assembly, was, fortunately, available for the organ bench and, with Haydn Owens, provided an ensemble accompaniment which was noteworthy.

Mr. Owens provided the steady background of tone and the definite rhythmic flow, while Mr. Roney employed his instrument largely for the production of color. Again and again he introduced cello, flute or violin motifs in the most effective way and the total of accompanying effect was extraordinary.

* * *

This writer has added Winona Lake to the list of musical Meccas to which he makes annual pilgrimage and, for at least five years, has heard the oratorios at that place.

Never has he heard a better one than that of Wednesday, and this is true in spite of the fact that the male sections of the chorus were distinctly small.

They were, nevertheless, very good, and the total of vigor, expressiveness and style displayed by the body as a whole was remarkable.

The personnel included singers from Winona and Warsaw, as well as a large contingent from the Haydn Choral of Chicago, and the mass tone was brilliant as well as distinctly pliable.

Mr. Owens knows "Elijah" intimately, and his chorus has sung it repeatedly, so that the brilliance of "Thanks Be to God" and "Then Shall Your Light" was entirely to have been expected, but there was still an element of surprise in the excellent shading and color, as well as definite mood values with which the quieter passages and numbers were suffused.

"Elijah," as an oratorio, revolves very definitely around the part of Elijah, the Prophet, which Mendelssohn assigned to the bass score, although a real baritone is absolutely imperative as well.

Mr. Remington, a young singer with fine voice and excellent musicianship, showed at this time also that he is a splendid student and that the dramatic values of "Elijah" were as an open book to him.

And these values are very extended and very great. Again and again must the singer of this part remain in the picture for fifteen or twenty minute stretches, and the part is a vocal and physical strain which can be met only by a like quantity of mental and vocal ability on the part of the singer.

THE STIEFF PIANO USED

The strictly dramatic passages were done in a thoroughly telling way. There was good enunciation as a basic virtue, fine accent, strong sense of rhythm valuations, and an accurate sensing of moods. The two big arias were also treated with great intelligence and big vocal effects.

Altogether Mr. Remington may rest assured that this performance was one very much to his credit.

Miss Landwer is a singer of great brilliance basically, but she has the finest sort of mentality also, and this prompts her to correct shading, coloring and contrast building.

MILDRED WESSMAN

Her singing of "Hear Ye, Israel," was at a thoroughly fine vocal and interpretative point, and in her long scene with Mr. Remington she worked in admirable ensemble with him.

Miss Wessman has a lovely quality of voice, contralto as to its initial timbre, but easily soaring also to mezzo-soprano class. She disclosed much skill and intelligent appreciation of text in the abounding recitative of the part, and in "O Rest in the Lord" she was of fine charm and effect.

The tenor part was in the safe and artistic hands of Theophilus Lewis Alban, a young singer who has studied extensively with Mr. Owens, but who must now defer his professional entry until his return from war service, he having been called for immediate work.

Mr. Alban has fine personality, good musical intuition, and a voice of such power and quality as to entitle him to the hope of a successful career. His natural quality is brilliance, but through careful study he has developed also a very fine degree of repression, and on last Thursday not only did he do the bigger numbers bravely, but in quieter passages, such, for instance, as "Behold, Now He Sleepeth," he proved conclusively that he has learned repression and purity of tone in a refreshing degree.

Notably good were all the duets and other small ensembles, proving that the rehearsals had been very careful.

The "Angels' Trio" was very deftly and musically done by Marguerite Eckhart, Thelma Fisher and Mrs. L. Chinworth.

"Cast Thy Burden" and O Come, Every One That Thirsteth," were beautifully sung by the regular soloists, and "For He Shall Give His Angels" was presented with great suavity and good tone by a double quartet consisting of Mrs. L. Dickey, Mrs. E. Funk, Miss Bassinger, Miss Johnson, Mr. Naftzer, Mr. Funk, Mr. Remington and Mr. Bangartner.

Note—The electric baton used by Mr. Roney in conducting the last two songs is an invention of his especially for conducting large choruses in outdoor evening performances in pageantry. It is run by a 6-volt storage battery, blue signifying sing softly; red, medium power; and white, full power. It was first used by Mr. Roney in conducting a chorus of about 5,000 singers, largely children, at the Indiana Centennial Celebration at South Bend in October, 1916, at three evening performances in the open air.

The Contest at Winona

Further credit is due Prof. Owens for the musical contest which delighted Winona audiences Tuesday afternoon and evening. In each competition were from two to four entries, and the adjudicator, Prof. James H. Jones of Van Wert, Ohio, a former pupil of Prof. Owens, had no little difficulty in determining the excellence in several cases, though his decisions were marked by fairness and won the approval of all present. The afternoon contest distributed prizes as follows:

Piano solo—"Polonaise Americaine," by Carpenter; first prize to a young and talented Warsaw girl, Sadie Petocsky.

Second prize; also captured by a Warsaw pianist, Mabel Christ.

Contralto solo—"When the Boys Come Home;" Clara Basinger of Bluffton took first prize and Mildred Wessman of Chicago, second.

Recitation—"The Fleet Goes By"; prizes went to two Chicago girls, Misses Gladys Kern and Esther Fritz.

Tenor solo—"The Trumpeter"; first prize won by T. L. Alban of Chicago, and second prize awarded A. Lehman of Bluffton, Ohio.

Mixed quartettes—"Stand by the Flag"; honors won by Misses Lillian and Ethel Landwer and Messrs. Haydn Owens and T. Remington.

The evening contest gave awards to names below:

Baritone solo—"Flanders Field," by Bergen; first prize, Roy Spriggs of Warsaw; second prize, William Turner, Chicago.

Ladies' duet—"We'll Never Let Our Old Flag Fall," by Kelly; winners, Misses Neff of Elkhart, Ind.

Comic quartet—Any selection; Misses Lillian and Ethel Landwer, Miss Mary Woods and Miss Mildred Wessman carried off the trophy in singing a clever take-off on women.

Soprano solo—"God Be with Our Boys Tonight"; first prize, Miss Mary Woods, Chicago, a young girl with a remarkable voice; second prize, Gertrude Ziesel, Elkhart.

Tenor and baritone duet—"Watchman, What of the Night?" T. Alban of Chicago and Roy Spriggs of Warsaw were winners.

Ladies' quartet—"There's a Long, Long Trail"; winners, Misses Lillian and Ethel Landwer, Miss Mary Wood and Miss Mildred Wessman.

Trio—"God Be Merciful"; prize to Mary Woods, Haydn Owens and Roy Spriggs.

Male quartet—"Land of Mine;" Haydn Owens, T. Alban, Don Cochran and Roy Spriggs again proved the victors.—Warsaw Union.

MRS. MANN'S STUDIO

Last week there was given in Mrs. Mann's studio another of the worth-while Saturday afternoon musicals which have been taking place under her direction for the last few weeks. The soloists were Miss Westfall, soprano; Mrs. Morse, mezzo-soprano, and Miss Masters, contralto, with Mrs. Beulah Taylor Porter at the piano.

Miss Westfall, whose voice is well trained and well used, as well as lustrous and pervasive in quality, has had a broad experience in lyceum work, having been for four years soprano singer in the Schubert trio, touring the country. She sang five songs, including "Bird of the Wilderness" (Horsman), which she presented with incisive vigor, and the Massenet "Elegie," to which she added a note of pathos peculiarly appealing.

Mrs. Morse, who has had no experience in public work, nevertheless was pleasing in a group of negro songs, "Do Na Ask Me" (Homer) and "Deep River" (Burleigh). She and Miss Westfall also sang a group of Tuscan folksongs in duet form. Here Mrs. Morse lent herself particularly well to the ensemble and sang with great refinement and discrimination of expression.

Miss Masters, whose home is in Toledo, has been taking special summer work with Mrs. Mann. She revealed a rich contralto voice of vibrant character, which she used skillfully. Particularly fortunate was her execution of Manney's "Consecration," which she sang with exceptional fervor.

Mrs. Porter's accompaniments were skillful and discriminating.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

Stelzl—In last week's paper there was incorrectly printed the name of Miss Martha Stelzl, who appeared so successfully in the Saturday afternoon recital at Mrs. Mann's studio.

Pfeiffer—May Pfeiffer, contralto, is on an extended Chautauqua tour and will return to Chicago about the middle of September. Miss Pfeiffer will tour the south during October.

York—Allen York has returned from Duluth, where he fulfilled an engagement with the Mrs. Thomas Whiffen Company in "Where There's a Will There's a Way."

FOR RENT—Time in attractive studio. Very reasonable. 602 Kimball Hall.

PAUL ALTHOUSE, "CREATOR" OF ROLES

The career of Paul Althouse, the young American tenor, whose next season will be his fifth at the Metropolitan Opera House, has been watched with a great deal of interest by many who were under the impression that no singer who had not studied or had operatic experience abroad could be intrusted with a principal role at the greatest opera house in the world.

In the case of Mr. Althouse, however, he has not only been intrusted with such roles, but has been given important ones to create, as well, in practically every new production the Metropolitan has put on since the term of his engagement with them. Thus in "Boris Godounoff" the American tenor was selected to create the role of Dimitri, which he sang with splendid effect in a production which is considered one of the greatest successes of the present management.

His second "creation" was that of the Duke in "Madeleine," Victor Herbert's opera, which had its initial presentation at the Metropolitan. Closely following this came his third, when he was cast for the role of Count Neipperg in Giordano's opera "Mme. Sans Gene," which had its world premiere at the Metropolitan in January of 1916.

By this time Paul Althouse had so successfully established himself as a "creator" that he was among the first selected for the cast of L'Oracolo," Leoni's one-act operatic tragedy of Chinatown, and still further honors were heaped upon him when he created the part of the Squire in "The Canterbury Pilgrims," Reginald De Koven's opera in English, which had its first performance on any stage at the Metropolitan in the season 1916-17.

It was but natural and fitting, after this list of successful creations, that Paul Althouse be chosen for the leading role in Charles Wakefield Cadman's opera "Shanewis," which was given its world premiere at the Metropolitan during the past season. Some have said that it was his well-nigh perfect English diction that contributed to his great success in this premiere, while others maintain that with a voice of such glorious opulence as the Althouse organ everything else would be forgotten. But whatever the contributing factors, it is certain that with his impersonation of this role, in addition to his singing of Turiddu in "Cavalleria Rusticana," Pinkerton in "Mme. Butterfly" and Mario in "Tosca," Paul Althouse has during the past season definitely established himself as one of the most valuable principal tenors of the Metropolitan Opera Company's entire roster.

PABLO CASALS

Pablo Casals writes that he is playing a short tournee in Spain. He did not wish to play in public this summer, as he had intended to devote it entirely to rest and work, but he was urged incessantly by his countrymen and he finally acceded to the general demand for a few concerts. He has been playing with Risler, a very fine French pianist, and together they have given recitals in Lisbon, Madrid, Valencia, Barcelona, and several other large cities in Spain. Casals wrote of Risler: "He is a great artist and plays Beethoven especially well." He said that they had been playing very heavy programs and that he was surprised at the appreciation with which the Spanish people had received the music. He commented on Barcelona, especially, which, he said, "has a very large public for good music," and though it already has two good orchestras, he expects it to have an orchestra which will rank with the finest in the world within a short time. In Barcelona there are many fine choral societies composed of working people. Some years ago they combined and had an enormous auditorium erected, which is called "The Palace of Catalonian Music." All of the members pay a dollar a month for its support, and it is there that many great musical events take place. It is really quite a remarkable and unique thing for the people to found and support such an institution and shows what great lovers of music the Spanish people are.

THE MUSICIAN DURING THE WAR

Prelude—A Pittsburgh judge recently said to a proposed juryman, a professional musician, "What good is music during the war? It is a non-essential." The mayor of the same city said to the writer during an interview on municipal music, "Say! No high-brow music for me. Winter and summer, me for the Yankee Doodle stuff." The school board of an adjacent borough cut out the position of music supervisor a few days ago as a "war measure." So we live, move and have our more or less musical ways. All of which suggests what the musician should do during the war.

I was interested in the following letter to a large Pittsburgh paper some time ago:

"Sir: You say: 'Borglum, who reported on the airship program for the President, is a sculptor. Wonder if we couldn't get a portrait painter to look over the ordnance situation?'

"This isn't really such a subject for joking. There is something about the art school training that makes a naturally practical man exceptionally clear-sighted. It teaches him to eliminate unessential details and to get right down to the basic facts of structure and appearance. It is really one of the most utilitarian forms of education. Through no mischance have so many important inventions and processes been devised by trained artists, beginning with Fulton, who invented the steamboat, and Morse, who invented the telegraph.

"F. OGDON CORNISH."

———♯♯♯———

Ffrench — Florence Ffrench, soprano, sang last Sunday afternoon in a benefit concert at the new Woods Theater, Chicago, one of her numbers being the Sousa setting of "In Flanders Fields."

———♯♯♯———

Dickey—Helen Cutler Dickey gave a successful song recital at Winona Lake Auditorium on last Wednesday evening, having the assistance of Katherine N. Carmichael, pianist.

MAY "PURGE" ORCHESTRA

Under this caption the Chicago Daily News of August 20 contained an article which is of a foolishness to make the blood of intelligent students of the American musical situation boil.

The article is as follows:

BORRELLI HINTS AMERICANS WILL FILL PLACES OF SOME MEMBERS

Member of Chicago Symphony Organization Is Quoted

Chicago's famous symphony orchestra will emerge from the present investigation freed of all disloyalty taint and become an all-American organization. It was declared today enough American musicians have been found who can qualify as of orchestra timber to fill the places that will be made vacant if steps now on foot to rid the organization of its alien enemies are carried out.

Francis Borrelli, assistant United States district attorney, declared today that he had been informed by a member of the orchestra that the orchestra will not suffer through the expulsion of its alien enemy members. He said this member, whose name he refused to make public, declared a sufficient number of proficient American musicians had been found to fill all possible vacancies.

Officials of the Federation of Musicians who have been urging the expulsion of all alien enemies from the organization declared they had not heard the report, but hoped it was true. They declared there is no doubt Chicago has many American musicians who can qualify for the positions.

Albert Ulrich, one of the officials of the orchestra, said he had heard nothing of the report.

The special point of objection to this lies in the patronizing way in which it is surmised that Americans "might" be found to take the places of disloyal Germans in the Orchestra.

As a matter of actual fact, there are enough American orchestral players of absolute first class in Chicago today to fill all the places in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra with entire conviction—several times over.

Of course, the wonderful finish which is now in evidence in that body is the result of years of practice together, and to take out any great number of the accustomed players at one time and substitute new ones would make for roughness.

And this would be true no matter what nationality might be drawn upon for the new players.

And it would be no more true if the newcomers were Americans than if they were Germans.

And if there were not to be found in Chicago enough American musicians to fill the places—or, we might perhaps say, American musicians who would be willing to accept them—then in the country at large there could easily be found hundreds of thoroughly capable Americans for each vacancy.

The Chicago Orchestral Association has now gone on record as intending to fully cleanse the Orchestra from every taint of pro-Germanism.

If they will faithfully do this (and they can very easily do it) there will be no need of further comment or criticism.

A recent issue of the Herald-Examiner had the following:

SYMPHONY SEEKS TO RETAIN STOCK

Clyne, However, Tells Trustees Director Knew of Disloyalty Talk Among Members

Disloyalty under the guise of artistic temperament will not be tolerated by the government.

United States District Attorney Charles F. Clyne so informed Clyde M. Carr, president, and trustees of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. The organization must be purged of the taint of pro-Germanism before it would meet his approval, it was understood Mr. Clyne told his visitors.

The trustees called on the district attorney to assure him they did not wish to appear in a position of maintaining an organization in any way disloyal. They assured Mr. Clyne the orchestra, as a whole, was loyal.

He answered by producing reports on certain of its members, notably Bruno Steindel, cellist.

It developed that the trustees were extremely anxious to retain Frederick Stock as director, despite the fact he is an enemy alien and has lived in this country nearly a quarter of a century without becoming a citizen.

Mr. Clyne made it clear to the trustees that, in spite of their protests, Stock had knowledge of disloyal talk in the organization.

A statement presenting their position would be issued today by the trustees, they announced.

Here is the gist of the matter: Both the Board of Directors and Mr. Stock himself can and must assume a position that is one of such absolute loyalty that there can be no further question, and they must co-operate to throw out bodily every suggestion of disloyalty among the men.

That this will be done promptly is indicated by the following statement, which is copied from the Chicago Tribune and which was printed in practically the same form in every newspaper in Chicago:

TRUSTEES OFFER U. S. AID TO MAKE SYMPHONY LOYAL

Punish the Guilty and Clear Reputation Is the Aim

Trustees of the Orchestral Association yesterday offered their co-operation to the government in making sure that there is 100 per cent loyalty in the ranks of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. They propose that any disloyalists who may be found shall be dealt with through the law, but at the same time that those members whose loyalty is beyond reproach shall be given a "clean bill."

The Orchestral Association trustees took cognizance of the inquiry being conducted by the office of District Attorney Charles F. Clyne at a meeting held on Monday afternoon. Clyde M. Carr, president of the association, made public yesterday a set of resolutions which were passed. At the same time a committee consisting of Mr. Carr, Charles H. Hamill, Charles L. Hutchinson and Horace S. Oakley was appointed to act in co-operation with Mr. Clyne's office.

The resolutions, after taking official cognizance of the inquiry, read:

"Be it resolved, That the trustees of the Orchestral Association do co-operate in every way in their power to assist the department of justice, or any governmental agency, in securing all possible information which may insure a just and certain determination as to the loyalty of any member of the orchestra under investigation, to the end that those members of the orchestra, if any, who are disloyal or who have been guilty of acts or expressions of disloyalty may be dealt with according to law, and that the orchestra may be purged of disloyal members, and to the end further that there may be put, once for all, an end to idle and malicious gossip concerning those members of the orchestra whose loyalty to the country shall be found to be beyond reproach."

In providing for the appointment of the committee, the resolutions declare that their duty shall be "to co-operate with all appropriate governmental agencies in their efforts to discover and deal appropriately with disloyalty."

In addition to the members of the committee, the trustees signing the resolution are Joseph Adams, Philo A. Otis, William L. Brown, Clarence A. Burley, Edward B. Butler, John J. Glessner, Chauncey Keep, Harold F. McCormick, Seymour Morris, Maj. A. A. Sprague, and Charles H. Swift.

"I am satisfied that the Orchestral Association trustees will go to any length to wipe out any disloyalty which may exist in the orchestra," District At-

How to Obtain a Scholarship—

THE Educational Aid Society has relations with more than one thousand of the leading Colleges and Private Schools of every kind throughout the United States and, in return for services rendered, receives a limited number of full scholarships or Credit Certificates for students enrolling through the Society.

These Scholarships in the best institutions of every kind are sold to parents and students at lower rates and on more favorable terms than those charged by inferior institutions.

On a course in a Business College, the usual saving is from $10.00 to $25.00; in a Medical or Law School, $15.00 to $50.00; Music or Expression, $25.00 to $100.00; in Military or Boys' Boarding or Girls' Boarding Schools, $50.00 to $200.00. It is the agreement with each school not to sell its scholarships to students who have previously attended that school; otherwise there are no restrictions, excepting that the student must be qualified to enter the school selected.

The student paying his fees with a scholarship is considered by the school to have paid the school's regular rates even though he may have purchased the scholarship at one-half its value. In case of a sharp reduction, of as much as one-third or one-half of the regular rate, the student is expected to perform some service in bringing the work of the Society to the attention of his friends and acquaintances. Students who will be able to repay the Society at a definite future time or who can furnish a responsible guarantor can arrange with the Society for a scholarship.

To obtain a scholarship, either call or write, stating the kind of school desired, the location preferred, and you will be informed what rates of discount are obtainable in the school which will most nearly meet your requirements. A copy of our COLLEGE AND PRIVATE SCHOOL DIRECTORY, 480 pages, containing complete lists of all colleges and private schools in the United States with some facts about each and much information about many of them, will be sent to any address upon receipt of 25 cents.

torney Clyne said upon receipt of a copy of the resolutions. "The trustees are all men whose loyalty to country is held above everything, and they would not countenance any pro-German influence at work in our midst. I am exceedingly gratified to obtain their expression of co-operation."

SING FOR LIBERTY

The War Camp Community Service of Philadelphia has distributed a card on which is printed the following instructions for co-operation in Community Singing:

1. Every family to write upon a card the names of all the boys in the naval or military service of the United States who are intimately connected with it either by ties of blood or close friendship.

2. Daily, after the evening meal, all members of the family to gather in the living room, read the names and sing a patriotic song to its particular group.

3. Once a week all the families in the block, or immediate neighborhood, to come together at a central point, read aloud the names of the service men from that locality, and for fifteen or twenty minutes sing to them the war songs which the boys on the fighting line are singing.

4. Once a month, or as circumstances dictate, citizens to gather in larger groups, representing a greater area or community, and hold a big Liberty Sing under the direction of experienced leaders.

By this plan we constantly visualize our relatives and friends who are fighting for world democracy, bringing them closer to us and ourselves closer to them. If these boys know that we are singing to them by name every day it will be the biggest contribution we can make to that morale which, according to General Pershing and other high military authorities, constitutes 80 per cent of a soldier's efficiency.

Inasmuch as the government is spending billions upon the other 20 per cent, made up of material and technical training, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen to in this manner help to keep up the spirits of the men who are sacrificing so much to make the world safe for democracy.

We have found by experience in Philadelphia that these block Liberty Sings are wonderful levelers, uniting all races and creeds and kinds of people into one common purpose—win the war, regardless of cost.

AN INTERESTING LETTER HAVING NOTHING TO DO WITH MUSIC

Music News:

Referring to the article "Bohemia" by me which appeared in Music News some time ago: You probably have been surprised (as well as your readers) how accurately all the statements therein contained have been borne out by recent developments in Siberia, and the activities of the heroic Czecho-Slovak soldiers there.

While this is not strictly a musical matter, it seems to me nevertheless that the attached copy of the oath of the Czecho-Slovak soldiers, which I have translated from "La Nation Tcheque," is of uppermost interest today. In my humble opinion, this remarkable document will go down in history, and the sentiments therein expressed might well be taken to heart by every soldier and civilian of the allied powers. Should you care to publish it, it will make a good sequence to the article "Bohemia" above referred to.

(Signed) JOSEF KONECNY,
On detached service with Overseas Distribution Branch, Depot Division, Q. M. C., U. S. A

THE OATH OF THE CZECHO-SLOVAK SOLDIERS

[Translation from "La Nation Tcheque" (The Bohemian Nation), April 1, 1918, published at Paris, France.]

(As the public is now aware, the Czecho-Slovak soldiers are making momentous history in Siberia, compared with which the fabled adventures of Homer's Iliad fade into insignificance. There were originally 300,000 of them who deserted from the Austrian army and went over to the Russians when that country was still in the war. These Czecho-Slovak soldiers then immediately took sides with the allies and fought the Austrians and Germans on the eastern front. It was this valiant and heroic body that was responsible for the last successful Russian offensive under Brusiloff, and it was this intrepid body, now reduced to about 100,000 men, who, though betrayed by the Bolsheviki, kept on fighting, and are now regaining Russia for the allies. The heroic character, invincible spirit, magnificent ideal and desperate determination of the Czecho-Slovak soldiers are eloquently expressed in the oath which they have taken, the text of which follows):

"Severing forever the ties that bound us to the Hapsburgs and to the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, remembering the iniquities which for centuries have been committed against us and which are still unavenged—

"We, the Czecho-Slovak soldiers of the first revolutionary army created outside the boundaries of our country, depose our solemn oath, before our beloved Czecho-Slovak country, before the leaders of the revolutionary movement, before the Czecho-Slovak National Council with Professor Masaryk at its head:

"In the name of our national honor, in the name of that which is dearest to us as men, whether Czechs or Slovaks, with a free conscience, we swear to fight at the side of our allies to the last drop of our blood, against all of our enemies, so long as we have not obtained the complete liberation of our Czecho-Slovak nation, so long as the Czechs and Slovaks are not united in a free and independent Czecho-Slovak state, and so long as our country is not absolute mistress of her destinies.

"We bind ourselves solemnly, no matter what the danger, no matter what the conditions may be, without fear and without hesitation, never and in no part to abandon the sacred object of our struggle.

"Fighting faithfully and honorably, carrying within us the heritage of our glorious history, guarding the memory of the heroic acts of our immortal chiefs and martyrs, Jan Hus and Jan Zizka of Trocnov, we promise to remain worthy of them, never to flee from battle, never to evade any danger, to obey the orders of our chiefs, to venerate our flags and insignias, never and under no circumstances to implore the grace of the enemy and never to give up our arms; to love our companions as our brothers and succor them in danger, to have no fear of death, to sacrifice even our life for liberty and country.

"Thus, freely and without any urging, we act and bind ourselves, such being the duty imposed upon us by our honor and our fidelity towards our people and our country."

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY NOTES

The new school year of 1918-1919 will begin Monday, Sept. 9. Judging from present indications, the attendance will equal if not surpass that of the two previous years.

John J. Hattstaedt, president of the conservatory, has returned to the east, and is very busy with the preparations for the coming season.

The new bulletin of the conservatory gives much interesting information relating to American Conservatory events. Among these are the results of last year's examinations, prize contests, recital programs, given by the principal artists, engagements of graduates for teaching positions and recitals, the names of over ninety students and teachers on the roll of honor, and many other items of interest.

Clarence Loomis, a brilliant young pianist of the conservatory piano faculty, is in Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C.

CENTURY ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY

Edward M. Beck again announces a season of English opera in America by the Century English Opera Company, presenting a repertoire of the standard and light operas, all in the English language.

The following data is taken from a very attractive circular which is being distributed:

The Company

TENORS—Joseph F. Sheehan, Henry Taylor, John W. Wandling.

SOPRANOS—Hazel Eden, Edna Kellogg, Florence Warren.

CONTRALTOS—Alice May Carley, Marvel Kessel, Helen June Hall.

BARITONES—Louis La Valle, Stanley Deacon, W. Rufus Northway.

BASSOS—Lester Luther, Curtis Johns, Bert F. Goltra.

CONDUCTOR—H. S. Linne, considered one of the greatest operatic conductors of the day.

The Chorus

The Century English Opera Company chorus is one of its special prides. It consists only of carefully trained youthful voices, selected from the foremost music conservatories of the country.

The Orchestra

of 25 specially selected musicians is composed of real artists, each and every one a master of his instrument.

Mann—Richard Mann, son of Ellen Kinsman Mann, the Chicago teacher of vocal art, has just been commissioned a lieutenant in the United States army.

CLEVELAND BOHNET

A distinct addition to Chicago's musical forces is Mr. Cleveland Bohnet, who has just been added to the teaching forces of the American Conservatory.

Mr. Bohnet is a pianist of fine ability and the most elaborate training, and is also a teacher who has been amply prepared for his work through many years of favorable study and who, in various localities has proved that he is a great success in that line.

CLEVELAND BOHNET

After extensive study in Chicago and other American cities, Mr. Bohnet lived abroad for several years and was, during the last two years of this period, first assistant to the splendid pedagogue, Alberto Jonas, and taught many advanced pupils in preparation for that master.

Since his return to America, Mr. Bohnet has appeared in many concerts, and everywhere has met with pronounced recognition of his abilities.

His booking of pupils at the American Conservatory is already a large one and he will, undoubtedly, prove to be a distinct acquisition to that institution.

Witmark—M. Witmark & Sons, New York, are sending out a circular which details the songs being featured by Grant Hadley, baritone. These include "There's a Long, Long Trail" (Elliott), "Dear Little Boy of Mine" (Ball), "Spring's a Lovable Ladye" (Elliott), "Gypsy Love Song" (Herbert), "Freedom for All Forever" (Hilliam), "The Magic of Your Eyes" (Penn), and "I Did Not Know" (Vanderpool).

CHARLES M. COURBOIN

Charles M. Courboin, the famous Belgian organist, is looking forward to a very busy season this fall, according to his managers. Among the important recitals already booked is one at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, where Mr. Courboin will appear on a course which includes Mischa Levitzki, the pianist, the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. This recital comes on Tuesday evening, November 5, and will be followed on the next evening by one in Cincinnati before the southern Ohio chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

On December 10 Mr. Courboin will play in Carleton College Conservatory, Northfield, Minn. Mr. Courboin was booked for a recital here last season, but was unable to make connections so as to arrive in time on account of a blizzard. On December 13 Mr. Courboin will play a return engagement before the St. Cecilia Club in Grand Rapids, Mich., where he won a great success last season.

During the summer Mr. Courboin's Sunday evening recitals in the First Baptist Church of Syracuse have been devoted to the works of one composer each evening. In this series Handel, Widor, Mailly, Guilmant, Mendelssohn, Saint-Saens, Callaerts and Cesar Franck have thus far been presented. The recitals have provoked much favorable comment from the musical people of the city and have been largely attended in spite of the very hot weather.

Plans are now on foot whereby Mr. Courboin will give occasional recitals for the soldiers stationed at Camp Syracuse, where from seventeen to twenty thousand troops are being drilled. Other artists will assist and the proposed series will doubtless be well attended by the soldiers.

ETHEL M. RICE ANNOUNCEMENTS

Ethel M. Rice, manager, makes the following announcement of engagements for her artists:

Jane English is singing in vaudeville (Songs of Yesterday) at the Empress Theater on South Halsted street, August 29, 30, 31 and September 1.

Grace Carlita, coloratura soprano, opens in vaudeville in Milwaukee on August 29 for a four days' stay to be followed by an extensive tour.

Carl Craven conducted a community sing at Michigan City on August 26 and 27.

Carl Craven, tenor, and Ruth Mills, soprano, will appear in duets in vaudeville on September 1, 2 and 3 at Michigan City.

Elsie Viewger will be soloist at the Howard Theater the week of September 1.

The Fashion Show, which was so successful in another theater recently, was repeated with great effect at the Rainbow Gardens on August 24, 25, 26 and 27. This was a brilliant spectacle, invented by Mrs. Rice, largely patriotic in character.

On October 8 the United Continental Daughters will give a concert in place of their usual early Fall bazaar when the artists will include Amelia Conti, harpist of the Chicago Opera Association; Edward Hesselberg, pianist, and others.

On Tuesday of each week Genevieve Fitzgerald conducts classes in aesthetic dancing at the Rice Studios in Kimball hall.

FREDERICK GUNSTER IN WAR SERVICE

Frederick Gunster, the American tenor, announces that he will not be available for engagements in concerts and recitals until after March 1.

Mr. Gunster has entered the war service work under the Y. M. C. A. for a period of six months, and is associate secretary of the Music Committee of the Y. M. C. A. War Work Council, at International headquarters, 347 Madison avenue, New York City.

For the present Mr. Gunster's activities will be mainly connected with the development of army and navy music.

Miller—Reed Miller is one of the few concert artists of prominence who took part in the Spanish-American war. At the outbreak of the trouble with Spain, the tenor enlisted as a cornet player in the band of the First South Carolina regiment of volunteers, and served with that organization at Chickamauga and at Jacksonville. On a recent visit to his home in South Carolina, Mr. Miller experienced all the sensations of a war veteran by donning his old uniform, hat and canteen, and making a desperate effort to extract some music from his weather-beaten cornet. To his surprise, the notes refused to come.

"Singing must have given a new kink to my lips," explains Mr. Miller, "for they stuck, and the fool cornet wouldn't work. So I put it back in the trunk, along with my other fighting paraphernalia."

BALLANTINE BUREAU

The Ballantine Bureau in Kimball Hall announces the following bookings:

Louis LaValle and Florence Warren have been fulfilling a vaudeville engagement at the Central Park Theater.

Miss Montgomery, contralto, opened at the Rialto this week and will fulfill a season of thirty-five weeks.

The Artist Quartet is singing this week at the Hippodrome, the personnel being Ethel Tamminga, Ruth Simmons, Stuart Dykema and John Rankl.

Next week at the Hippodrome the Artist String Trio will appear, the personnel including Mme. Amelia Conti, harp; M. Verney, cello, and M. Lavatelli, violin.

WALTER SPRY

Walter Spry will celebrate, during the season September, 1918—June, 1919, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his first appearance in Chicago as a concert pianist. During this quarter of a century he has been very active as a pianist and teacher, and has been identified with many of the most beneficial movements of this country musically.

As a pianist Mr. Spry has appeared in every part of the United States and with distinguished success. As a teacher he has developed some of the most brilliant American pianists before the public, and some of our leading teachers owe their training to this eminent master.

Jacobson—In July, Mrs. C. T. Jacobson gave a successful pupils' recital at Mozart Park, introducing the following: Mildred Klinenberg, Clarence Spicer, Anna Ciboch, Helga Nielsen, Della Nelson, Lilly Klinenberg, Lillian Steiners, Anna Calla, Arnold Holstrom, Evelyn Chaloupke, Edward Sattler, Lillian Smid, Mabelle Williams, Marie Nielsen, Carl Holstrom, Paul Miller, Alvina Martin, Camilla Slack, Magna Slack, Erma Polacek, Leonard Sattler, Miss Johnson, Alice Sheehan, Harriet Smid, Harry Juul, Miss Frey Nelson, Erma Klinenberg, Victoria Johnson and Mildred Klinenberg.

Cleveland Bohnet

Cleveland Bohnet, pianist, appeared on the artist course at Findlay College last evening, giving a lecture recital for a large audience that listened with deep interest and appreciation to one of the best purely educational programs given at Findlay for a long time. Mr. Bohnet has a remarkable technique and a masterly musical intelligence, and his performance touched on the marvelous in some of the more brilliant compositions given, the "Staccato Etude" going with terrific speed. He played each of the numbers appearing on the program, and by request supplemented it with two groups of four modern atmospheric things that were keenly appreciated. The first was by the Russian, Juon; the second by the Finnish composer, Palmgren. The other two were a comparative study of the two compositions known as "Moonlight," the one by Debussy and the other by MacDowell. The second part of the program was a lecture recital on Tannhauser. He gave a synopsis of the opera, went through the composition, playing the different leid-motifs, and various passages, especially characteristic.

It was a long program, but the interest did not flag for one minute; and the number was one of the peculiarly successful ones given under the auspices of the Conservatory.

—Findlay (O.) Morning Republican.

---

Cleveland Bohnet, pianist, brought the enthusiasm to a climax with his performance of the Liszt "Hungarian Fantasia." An absence of affectation was a characteristic of Mr. Bohnet's playing.

—Milwaukee Sentinel.

---

The Liszt "Hungarian Fantasia," with Cleveland Bohnet at the piano, also was received with an encore number. This is really the "Fourteenth Hungarian Rhapsodie" in the form of a fantasia for the pianoforte and orchestra, and is not easy of proper presentation, the more credit attaching to the work of Mr. Bohnet and the orchestra.

—Evening Wisconsin.

Schumann-Heink in San Francisco

At the Auditorium Rally Madame Schumann-Heink, "one of the greatest mothers of them all," charmed the tremendous audience. Appearing before her audience with a four-starred service badge pinned on her breast, she awakened the greatest enthusiasm, and when she sang "When the Boys Come Home," a tumult of cheering swept the auditorium.

The audience, familiar with her singing, but for the first time hearing her make a speech, warmed to her words, and as she finished with the declaration that there is no sacrifice in giving for the government or the Red Cross, and that if she had a thousand lives she would gladly give them all for the United States, ten thousand persons stood and yelled.

—San Francisco Bulletin.

Presented to a cheering audience as "one of the greatest mothers of them all," Madame Schumann-Heink sang three songs and then voiced a brief but stirring appeal for the Red Cross. She had traveled across the continent to be present, and the audience showed its appreciation. As a parent she spoke in heart-to-heart fashion to the fathers and mothers of the boys already over there and to those whose boys and loved ones are yet to go. Her appeal had its effect, for soon after she concluded the clang of coin falling into the collection boxes could be heard from every part of the crowded auditorium.

—San Francisco Call.

Saba Doak at Peoria

Despite the weather, with its lowering skies, a large and smart assemblage gathered for the recital of Miss Saba Doak, soprano. It must be a truth that not one of the audience regretted having braved the weather to hear such a splendid artist. A piquantly charming little figure was Miss Doak, and her crystal clear voice was a delight to listen to. A perfect enunciation, a purity and sweetness of tone and a fine interpretative power mark her singing.—Transcript, Peoria, Ill.

---

Miss Doak proved herself a charming singer, having a voice of such rich sweetness throughout its wide range as is seldom heard. Her English songs stirred her audience to great enthusiasm. This was one of the most delightful concerts in our history.

—Star, Peoria, Ill.

Wessels' American Ancestry

(From an Editorial in Musical Leader)

Except at rehearsal, neither Mr. Stock nor Mr. Wessels came in personal contact with the members of the orchestra and would not be in a position to know of treachery. None of the members would be likely to air their views before Mr. Stock or Mr. Wessels, who traces his lineage to the American revolution, his great-great-grandfather, Thomas Montgomery, having fought all the way through the Revolutionary War with Washington Mr. Wessels is so much an American that in a recent interview he declared "there should be no papers published in this country except in English, which is the language of Americans, for," said he, "if the Russians, Poles, Frenchmen, Germans, Swedes and other nationalities read the news in their own language, they continue to think in their language, and never learn ours. I am in favor of abolishing papers in foreign languages. We have to make this country all American. People come here to earn a livelihood—they expect to live here and to die here. How can they have allegiance to any other country but America? So far as the orchestra is concerned, it is true we have to depend largely on foreign players. The American boys do not learn to play the horn, nor the woodwinds, nor double bass. If they study any instrument at all it is the violin, piano or (very infrequently) cello."

Orchestra Always Pro-Hun

(A letter written to and printed in The Chicago Journal)

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra has suddenly become "100 per cent loyal." This is a ghastly joke to most members of the music profession. It is a notorious fact, known to musicians for years, that this orchestra is a hot-bed of the rankest and most insulting brand of sedition, notwithstanding the outbreak of one "F. D." in the Tribune of August 18. I am not a professional musician, and have no ax to grind, but I am well acquainted with many of the members of the orchestra, and I know whereof I speak.

Ask Joseph Schreuers, the Belgian clarinetist, how unpleasant the "pros" have made it for him since the war began. Inquire from some of the members if Manager Ulrich has not warned them (Furman is a notable instance) to "keep their mouths shut, as this is a German orchestra." Find out from non-German members how many cellists Steindel has run out of the orchestra.

"Talent is scarce," says Czar Ulrich. Bosh! "F. D.," in his pro-Stock propaganda in Sunday's Tribune, is worried about the "first desk" men. The first oboe is a Frenchman; the first clarinet a Belgian; the first horn a Hollander; the first trumpet an American of Welsh descent, and the "konzert meister" is a Hebrew. There is little doubt that some of the remaining "first desks" would be improved by the substitution of artists whose jobs are not dependent upon conversing in the language of "the fatherland."

The plain truth of the matter is that the orchestra is and has always been a source of the most insidious sort of German propaganda. It is an open secret to the members, to the delight of about 70 per cent of them, and to the disgust of the remainder. "F. D." and his followers are considerably exercised over the horrible thought of "sacrificing the orchestra." Why sacrifice the orchestra? Why not simply sacrifice the alien enemies in the orchestra, and thereby not only improve the morale, but the artistic worth of the orchestra?

Ask Harry Dimond, who originally organized the American Symphony Orchestra, if it was not brought into being simply because Americans could not get a square deal in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

I have written to The Journal before, and my letters have always borne my signature heretofore, but in this instance I must ask that my name be withheld and I have to admit that this fear of publicity is caused by my knowledge of the pro-German strength of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Orchard—The Orchard School of Music will begin its fifth year Tuesday, September 3. The school provides for full courses in piano, voice, violin, harmony, sight-reading, dancing, expression, all stringed instruments (mandolin, guitar, etc.), by very competent teachers.

LOS ANGELES

The opening of August brought all summer school sessions to a close. It may be said they were all very successful in membership, in elaborate outlines of work, with large and able faculties of instructors and lecturers covering the entire curriculum of education in music and art. No climate could be more satisfactory for summer special courses than Los Angeles. The entire year is so delightful that it is hard to say which is the more preferable, summer or winter.

Many good popular concerts, with star attractions, have been given, largely as benefit entertainments and for the purpose of sustaining musical interest. The community singing of several clubs with chorus selection, solo attractions, and a good list of war and folk songs by the audiences participating in the ensemble, is enjoyed.

Special mention is due Arthur Farwell's Liberty Chorus Concert of over 100 voices, which rehearsed twice a week while he was delivering lectures in the State University Summer School, this being their first year in southern California. This concert was held in the First M. E. Church, where they had a pipe organ and a small orchestra supporting an unbalanced chorus, with Dean Skeele at the organ and Mr. Louis Curtis at the piano, and Mrs. Gloria Mayne, soprano; Mme. Mariska Aldrich, dramatic soprano; Chester Rand, tenor. Mme. Rose Dione gave an effective reading of "The Marseillaise" in French. Mme. Isabelle Whittingham, in Grieg's "Solvejg's Song," obligato, was most effective. The best choruses were "Unfold, Ye Portals," and "Sanctus," by Gounod, and the "Inflammatus" (Rossini), with Mme. Mayne as soloist. Mr. Farwell gave the premiere of his chorus, "O, Captain! My Captain" (words by Whitman) and his "March! March!" The first is quite a work for mixed voices and orchestra, and with balance of voice parts would be quite effective.

Salter's "Cry of Rachel" was intensely dramatic as presented by Mme. Aldrich. The large audience was spirited in the familiar folk and patriotic selections.

Hollywood Community Chorus, under the enthusiastic drill by Hugo Kirchoffer, seems to be in popular favor. Miss Florence Woodley, pupil of Mme. Groff-Bryant, sang a group of songs in good voice and style at this week's general sing.

# # #

Vernon Spencer, pianist-teacher, presented Miss Florence G. Davis in thirteen classic, technical works of master composers—MacDowell, Foote, Bollinger, Dohnanyi, Poldini, Schloezer, Spencer, Campbell-Tipton and Liebling. Her playing is promising in artistry and freedom of expression.

The alternate groups in the program were given by Miss Gifella W. Eichert, a lyric soprano and pupil of Mr. Menotti. She sang arias from "Carmen" and "Madame Butterfly" and a group of English songs, displaying good voice and ambitious endeavor in vocalism.

Miss Veroni Schikora was accompanist in the vocal selections, ably sustaining the piano support.

The monthly banquet of the Gamut Club was not as large as usual, being an off month, but the star guests were ample to hold it up with the usual good interest in artistry and national and world caste. Father Cherniavsky and his son, Gregor, and two daughters, Elsa and Marion, were present, and all will make their home in Los Angeles, the family having arrived from Russia this month. Two other members are renowned players. Miss Marion is a fine cellist and is skillful to the highest degree in quality of tone and dexterity. Hans Linne, of pianistic and operatic directing fame, was with us. Director Guerieri, of operatic fame, was another guest. Theodore Steere, another famous conductor and concert artist, gave an interesting reminiscence of his world concerting, and our own Henry Schoenfeldt, conductor, made a quartet of batonists whom the music world can rely upon as authority. Mr. Schoenfeldt presented his new music setting to our hymn, "America." It is most effective, characteristic, dignified and impressive, melodic and harmonic voicing, but can we desert the old tune?

In the absence of President Behymer, Program Manager Charles Draa introduced Mrs. Jason Frankel and Mrs. Josephine Brown McClure, both interested in community and war music. Dorsey Cain, baritone from New York, late arrival and resident, sang well in a group of songs. Mrs. Lila Baird, contralto, gave a group. "O, Red Is the English Rose" and "Joan of Arc" were delightfully rendered.

Sig. Serafin Cla, a Spanish tenor-baritone, was much enjoyed, giving a double encore, with Miss Alice Harrison at the piano.

Miss Hilda Nolte, late from Lhevinne's tutorage, shows fine technique and pianistic mastery.

# # #

Musical clubs and the concert courses are forming for a big year of musical endeavor. The past season exceeded all expectation, with the world conflict that is agitating every class of work. Above all the trials and troubles the music should not be dropped—the world needs its ameliorating influences.

HERBERT WITHERSPOON

Herbert Witherspoon, who completed in August a six weeks' term of special teaching at the Chicago Musical College, during which he worked at capacity of hours throughout, expressed himself in a final interview as pleased to the fullest extent with his reception in Chicago and the musical conditions he found, stating also that he was looking forward with great pleasure to his return next summer for the same kind of work.

He thinks that the business management of the Chicago Musical College under Mr. Carl Kinsey is ideal, and he feels also that in Felix Borowski the institution has a president of the finest personal and musical possibilities.

Mr. Witherspoon found an ideal class of pupils waiting for him in Chicago, and this condition he maintained in every detail of the ten lessons to which each was limited.

He began by giving an honest opinion as to the possibilities in each case, and thus he eliminated at the outset all voices which were not of a calibre to warrant the expenditure of time and money.

Mr. Witherspoon lays great emphasis on this, and follows the plan always, as he deems it basically dishonest to encourage anyone to take lessons unless he can clearly see that it is well worth their while. He thinks that the reverse course, practiced by many teachers for gain only, is distinctly dishonest.

Mr. Witherspoon, possessed of one of the most beautiful voices ever heard in America, and whose concert and operatic career is a fine part of the musical annals of America, gave up those fields five years ago for teaching, and has already arrived at a place at the very top of that profession.

After leaving Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Witherspoon went to Connecticut for a few weeks' vacation, following which they return to New York and will there inaugurate their fine new studios.

Mr. Witherspoon's plans for the coming season are of great dimensions. He has taken a house at 44 West Eighty-sixth street, which is large enough to accommodate his five assistants and permit them to be at all times associated with him. Situated between Central Park West and Columbus avenue, the new studios are easily accessible to transportation. These are to be the quarters for several years, but in three years or so Mr. Witherspoon expects to buy a large house in New York in which he can build a theater to seat four hundred, where operas and private recitals can be given.

The Witherspoon assistants are: Graham Reed, chief assistant in voice, a pupil of Mr. Witherspoon, and thoroughly prepared in every branch by the teacher himself; Jacques Coini, of the Paris Opera Comique, and one of the two or three great stage managers and teachers of acting in the world, as instructor in dramatics; Victor Padula, teacher of Italian, probably at the head of his profession in this country; Edith W. Griffing and Marion Sims, assistant in voice and accompanist for practicing students, and practice accompanist for repertoire, respectively. These young women have been with Mr. Witherspoon for five years and are carefully trained in their work. Mlle. Marzel and Mlle. De Ginsheim will teach the French department; George Wedge will instruct in theory and sight reading. Five studios will be in use at all times, and in addition there will be a lecture course under the supervision of Mr. Witherspoon, in which Dr. Arthur Mees will participate, together with another lecturer to be named later in the season. This course will number twenty lectures and recitals free to the students, including talks and demonstrations on diction, singing, style, phrasing, repertoire and program making, as well as the art of singing with orchestra.

For those interested in ensemble, viz., duets, trios, quartets, oratorio and opera, a class will be maintained under the supervision of Mr. Witherspoon.

The new studios will open Monday, Sept. 30, and the season extends to the middle of June, 1919. Last year the New York pupils numbered one hundred and twenty-five, with an average lecture attendance of one hundred.

During the comparatively short period in which he has been occupied in teaching, Mr. Witherspoon has produced from his classes for the concert and opera field a remarkable list of artists. Included among them are Florence Hinkle, Mabel Garrison, Lucy Gates, Merle Alcock, Lambert Murphy, Sue Harvard, Carl Formes, Amy Ellerman, Calvin Cox, Bechtel Alcock, Marie Zendt, Walter Green, John Quino, Marie Van Essen, Isabel Richardson, Tom McGranaham, Ruth Ecton, Dicie Howell, Vernon Williams, son of the late Evan Williams, Louise Homer, daughter of Madame Homer, Ruth Harris, Clifford Cairns, James Price. Miss Garrison sang at Ravinia during the opera season and had great success in "Lucia," "Tales of Hoffman" and "Rigoletto," and Miss Gates followed her for a number of performances.

Of the artists above named, Miss Florence Hinkle has already been engaged for several of the leading societies in the country; Miss Garrison has been re-engaged at the Metropolitan Opera House; Lucy Gates, who has acquired considerable fame in replacing Madame Galli-Curci several times on short notice, has been booked by her manager, Miss Catherine Bamman, for an unusually heavy season. Mr. Carl Formes has been singing with the opera in Pittsburgh; Miss Van Essen Miss Garrison, Miss Lucy Gates, Carl Formes, John Quino and Walter Green have been engaged for the season of opera to be given by the Society of American Singers at the Park Theater in New York, beginning Sept. 30. Walter Green sang at the Norfolk, Conn., Festival in June with very marked success, and has been engaged by Daniel Mayer as his leading baritone for next season. Of the artists engaged at the recent Cincinnati Festival, five came from the Witherspoon studios, namely, Miss Hinkle, Miss Garrison, Mrs. Alcock, Mr. Formes and Mr. Murphy. Of the artists engaged for the great performance of the Bach "St. Matthew's Passion" in Boston for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, four out of the five artists were from the Witherspoon studios, including Miss Hinkle, Mrs. Alcock, Mr. Murphy, as well as Mr. Witherspoon himself. Helen Newit will be with Kingsbury Foster next season and will take part in the performances of the "Secret of Susanne" which Mr. Foster will present the coming season, both in New York and on the road. Sue Harvard is under the management of Haensel & Jones, and has already been booked for an extensive season. Mrs. Marie Zendt is one of the leading church singers of Chicago and is rapidly forging to the front in concert. Lambert Murphy has attained an enviable position in the musical world and is recognized today as a leading concert tenor. Miss Dicie Howell has had a fine season and will be heard in recital next fall in New York. Miss Harvard also will give the first New York recital and is now preparing her program with Mr. Witherspoon. James Price will probably appear with the opera comique given by the Society of American Singers.

VARIOUS VOCAL VAGARIES

The general belief that a singer may be in good voice today and not tomorrow, is a logical outgrowth of the reversed law of breath-emission now universally employed.

In the renascence of the art of singing about to come there is an awakening, either through objective observation or subjective perception, the new adjustment of spiritual values. This aroused desire will not rest in a disquieted aloofness from the true nature of art, but will probe to the depths of principles and reach that source of beauty within us where "broods a radiance vast, to be elicited ray by ray."

The three essential attributes to success in art processes may be named, Wisdom, Courage and Loyalty.

Wisdom to see the inevitable fruit of a true law; courage to maintain its truth, though the whole world to a man should arise to oppose it, and loyalty to the law which knows neither modification nor change.

An absolute law of nature, call it what you will; the act of God, a spiritual and immutable activity, an impartation from the source of the dynamic irradiation of order, a process of the first great cause, a mode of truth's manifestation; by whatsoever name we choose to call a principle of being, we exercise it well or otherwise, exactly in proportion to the obedience and loyalty we yield to it.

The perennial decree of wisdom in the cohesion of universal forces is co-ordination; no machine, be it mental or material, can successfully function unless all parts co-ordinate or work in unity and harmony.

The modern processes of tone-emission are, without exception, the antithesis to this all-essential central domination. Years of study with the most eminent of the world's vocal teachers, and long experience before the public in the practice of the theories advanced by them enable me to state, with indisputable authority, that the entire vocal training of today is an advocacy of a studied conflict of mechanisms.

The whole imbroglio of error, resulting in a perpetual struggle, results from the loss of the Voice di Mista or one position scale. How to produce this scale, no one knows; many are seeking it; they are balked at the outset by the deep-seated mistake as to what appogiata is, and how the breath is controlled.

This loss has resulted in the usual processes attendant upon decay. The art of singing being, as Francesco Lamperti said, "in a terrible state of decadence," the body of the idea exudes the excrescences which have fastened upon it to glut in their work of destruction. The spirit of co-ordination departed—art withdrawn—and behind the grinning mask a mental, protoplasmic pulp alone writhes and recoils in its sickening famine of the heart, the hope of beauty dead, the star extinct.

But even in the rotting leaf there still remains the germ or instinct of life; otherwise it could not rot; Co-ordination Is:

Co-ordination lives! Neither physical decay nor mental dissolution can interfere with or alter this eternal fact. The accumulated vagaries, theories, speculations, and experiments of the complacent highbrow, simmering in his own juice, cannot long barnacle the true idea which is stirring and awakening to life. Why? Because the dyed-in-the-wool Zoilus, the critic in his Attic fur ("asinus portat mysteria"), a Midas, even though Apollo was constrained to confer upon him the accolade of the ears of an ass, the wayfaring man, the child of the Ghetto, all thrill instinctively at "the touch of nature which makes the whole world akin." The striking on the cords of the heart by the harmonies of music takes him out of the realm of the grinding daylife, and "arches over this existence with Another and a diviner."

HERBERT WHITNEY TEW

To say that the singing of today does this would be a flagrant effrontery to the true facts. The tears which fall unbidden from the eye, impelled by the exquisite grace and soft beauty of the tone of Patti, is that tribute of joy and responsive gratitude with which the soul embraces its beloved fellows.

Can we recall an instance when we have been moved thus by the singing of, for example, a Melba or a Caruso?

Tears can only spring at the call of some emotion inspired by truth. St. Lawrence wept that others had not the same spirit to suffer for truth's sake as did he.

Co-ordination of the mechanisms results in a use of the vocal instrument by which it emits "simulacra" of the purest emotions of the soul; without this nice adjustment these may not be uttered. All modern processes defeat this adjustment at the attack; for this reason the heart remains untouched. The jugglery and practiced trickery of some of our highly-paid operatic acrobats sometimes excites a species of admiration, but this is so tinctured with sadness at the wasted time and energy, and the crippling of a fearfully and wonderfully fashioned instrument, that one who thinks leaves the theater dejected and cast down. The deft and normal adjustment of the instrument through appogiata places it in a position in which a scale of three or four octaves naturally and spontaneously flows.

It is impossible to have one beautiful tone above the E first line treble clef without the command of this scale; that is to say, without the position of the instrument which is the counterfoil to this breath mastery.

The bacilli which have corroded and eaten away the flesh of the old art may be summed under the modern vagaries known as "head voice," "chest voice," "open," "closed" or "covered" tones; "registers," "breaks," "nasal resonance," "up over," "forward," "in the masque," "clavicular," "lateral," "abdominal," or "diaphragmatic" breathing, etc., etc., etc.

All terms utterly meaningless, and without the faintest excuse for being.

Not one of these could exist without completely upsetting the normal position and right activity of the vocal instrument.

What these clogs in the vocal mental gearing of today have sprung from, I shall endeavor shortly to explain; space now prevents.

That one who possesses, or, to those who understand, is possessed by an art, could be in good voice today and not tomorrow, is sublimated inanity. The mastery of an art is in itself a perpetually normal state of the vocal mechanism.

Until these facts become recognized, modern singing must remain a pitiable thing, lacking in every element of power, beauty or conviction.

AT THE MACBURNEY STUDIOS

At the MacBurney Studios on Monday night a fine attendance of the Summer Class pupils listened with delight to the singing of a well-chosen program by Fred Huntley, baritone (accompanied by Alma Putman), and some delightful reading by Mrs. F. J. Sucher.

Mrs. Sucher, earnest and sincere as well as completely artistic, gave some trench sketches most appealingly and proved her possession of brains as well as of reading technic.

Mr. Huntley, personable to the last degree and possessed of a remarkable voice, which lately has grown to big proportions, sang a Handel aria with rare discernment and execllent tone, and finished up his first group with "The Happy Lover" (Lane Wilson), which lacked a little in animation, and the Prologue from "Pagliacci," which he infused with much dramatic spirit.

In his second group, which began with "Deep River," the second number, "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," was particularly beautiful and disclosed resonant low tones. Pierce's "The Little Town," a story of Belgium, has nice text but is musically uninteresting, while Fay Foster's "A Nipponese Sword Song" (to conclude), besides again proving itself a vital and very attractive song, provided Mr. Huntley a thoroughly grateful opportunity to express himself.

His closing group, not heard by this writer, included numbers by Linn Seiler, Coates, O'Hara and Clark—i. e., "Six Full Fathoms of Men," "Dinder Courtship," "Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride" and "Tally-Ho." A popular list. C. E. W.

CAVE THOMPSON

Cave Thompson, blind pianist, left with his wife and daughter on June 18, as usual, to spend the summer at their country cottage among the wilds of northern Michigan on the western shore of beautiful Bass Lake, Lebanon county, about twenty-five miles northwest of Traverse City.

He will return to reopen his studio on September 3. Mr. Thompson anticipates a busy season of teaching and recital work throughout the middle west for the coming winter.

AMERICAN MUSICAL FESTIVAL

The Festival of American Artists, Composers and Musicians, which will open at Lockport, N. Y., next Monday morning and is to continue for one full week, bids fair to become the greatest convention in the history of music in the United States.

Many Chicago artists will appear. Music News will be in attendance and will give a complete account of the event.

ALMA CECELIA COLGAN

Alma Cecelia Colgan has been recognized as a brilliant concert pianist since her early childhood, when she first appeared in concert at the age of five, displaying a thorough musical understanding.

She received her first training in Little Rock from Professor P. E. Pfeifer.

After having completed both a graduate and post-graduate course with Professor F. D. Baars of the Baars Studios, being the only pupil to take the latter degree, she continued her studies with Laurent Chaveaux, having been presented by him in concert during the season of 1915. Later in the same year she attended Chautauqua, N. Y., studying interpretation with Ernest Hutcheson, the widely known concert pianist, and normal with Eliza McWoods of the same institution.

Miss Colgan then made a short concert tour in Arkansas, meeting with much success. She then pursued her studies in New York City, with Leopold Godowsky, Sina Lichtmann, Antoinette Ward and special harmony courses with Effa Ellis Perfield, all predicting a successful career for her.

Miss Colgan has played with much success both in the East and South.

MRS. MANN'S STUDIO

The musical given in Mrs. Mann's studio last Saturday afternoon was the most interesting of the series of which it was the last. A large number of students have appeared in these recitals, many of whom have recently had Lyceum experience, or have just been engaged for the coming season. This is a good proof of the superior character of Mrs. Mann's teaching, and of her successful results in preparing singers for this kind of work.

The program was opened on Saturday by Miss Biong, a lyric soprano, who sang "May Morning" (Denza). It was the first appearance of this singer in public, and though some nervousness was evident in strain in the upper register, she disclosed a voice of sweet quality and potential power, singing this much-used and popular number with spirit.

Following Miss Biong, appeared Miss La Verne McCrum, who is a summer student of Mrs. Mann, from Boise, Idaho. Through the efforts of Mrs. Mann, she has just been engaged for Lyceum work for the coming winter, and if her singing on Saturday may be considered the criterion of her ability, her success is assured. She sang Massenet's "Il est doux, il est bon," and kept the interest in this long and difficult solo perfectly sustained, as well as proving herself the possessor of a well-managed and resonant singing organ.

The next soloist was Mr. Laskowski, tenor, in two songs, "Eternal Love" (Woodman), and "The Bitterness of Love" (Dunn). His voice is poignant and fresh, and his singing unaffected and sincere, and with more study he will undoubtedly develop further commendable qualities.

Miss Sweetson then sang "The Open Secret" (Woodman). To this writer her voice appealed as one of the most pleasing in natural quality of any heard in Mrs. Mann's studio, although the period of her training has probably been more brief.

Miss Blanche Snider, soprano, gave two songs, "Should He Upbraid" (Bishop), and "No Candle Was There, No Fire" (Lehmann). Miss Snider had not come prepared to sing, but kindly consented to appear in the absence of some of the artists of the day. Her songs were distinctly not showy numbers, but of the type requiring an advanced degree of scholarship. Miss Snider did them admirably, especially the latter's very beautiful Christmas Hymn.

The last group on the program included two patriotic songs, "Laddie in Khaki" and "Freedom for All," given by a quintet of young ladies coaching with Mrs. Mann preparatory to a Lyceum tour. Though the work is still in process, the quintet did good, promising singing, with the enthusiasm and vigor essential to the type of their numbers.

Mrs. Beulah Taylor Porter, again at the piano, played accompaniments with the same never-failing sense of assurance and appreciation.

This completed a series of most enjoyable afternoons, and Mrs. Mann is certainly to be congratulated upon the fine results of her work, representing a long period of faithful and intelligent teaching experience.

Kirk Towns

Baritone

THE Columbia School of Music announces the engagement of Kirk Towns, the eminent baritone, as a member of the voice department. Mr. Towns is an artist and teacher of international reputation. For twelve years, with the exception of 1902 to 1904, during which time he was one of the prominent teachers in Chicago, Mr. Towns resided abroad in France, Italy and Germany, where he established himself as one of the leading teachers and singers. For the past three years he was the head of the voice department of the Southern Methodist University.

A NATIONAL PAGEANT AT WINONA LAKE, IND.

August 6 and 10 witnessed at Winona Lake, Ind., Chautauqua the crowning historical and spectacular event of its quarter century existence. This was Henry B. Roney's Historical Pageant of Three Hundred Years of American History, Characters and Song, in Costume, and Patriotic Song Festival. It is Mr. Roney's own plan and conception, stupendous in its scope and fascinatingly interesting in its appeal to every student of American history and red-blooded patriot.

The pageant began with the episode of Pocahontas saving the life of Capt. John Smith in 1607, the preceding 115 years of our history following the discovery of America by Columbus not being covered for want of time. The 17th century Indian scenes and incidents, the landing of the Pilgrims, and the first Thanksgiving Day were enacted on the lake as a water pageant and on the shore under a clump of giant willows. The participants then repaired to Raikes Hall to form the big processional, while the audience went to the great auditorium, whose nearly 4,000 seats were soon filled. The great organ, played by Prof. H. D. Cleland of St. Louis, accompanied by brass instruments and drums, struck up the processional hymns, "America the Beautiful" and "Onward, Christian Soldiers." Mr. Roney conducted throughout the evening.

The processional was headed by the Indian chief, Powhatan (Don Cutter), a figure of giant stature (6 feet 4½ inches), in a magnificent Indian costume belonging to Mr. Roney, the equal of which in barbaric richness and elaborate beading can scarcely be found in this country. Next followed Capt. John Smith (James Heaton), Pocahontas (Ariane Haymaker), Chief Massasoit (Alamo Hawkins) and a host of savage red men, squaws and children. Miles Standish (Rev. Domer), John Alden (Jack Rhodeheaver), Priscilla Mullins (Margaret Miller), Elder Brewster ((Rev. O. M. Newlin) and a long train of Pilgrims in Puritan dress next followed, the immense number of participants precluding the possibility of further mention of names.

Then came, all in costumes historically correct, Pere Marquette, Louis Joliet, La-Salle, Tonti, the Witches of Salem, George and Martha Washington, the Cabinet and ladies, Betsy Ross, Nathan Hale, Dolly Madison, etc., in Colonial costume; then Lafayette; a large troop of negro slaves before their emancipation, led by Uncle Tom, Little Eva and Old Shady; a crowd of farmers, their wives and children, of the reconstruction period; cowboys and rough riders; Children Crusaders, an army of little tots in white, with plumed hats resembling Knight Templar chapeaus and a large blood red cross on their breasts, typifying their crusade against King Alcohol; U. S. soldiers, Jackies and Scotch soldiers in Highland costume. The Spirit of the Red Cross followed by two or three dozen girls in Red Cross uniform came next; then the Chinese Ambassador at Washington, his suite and family in gorgeous array; the Loyal Spirits of America and her allies, each carrying her flag, shield with emblem,, and baldric—England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Belgium, Italy, Japan, Greece, Serbia, Portugal; Liberty, History; President Wilson, by J. C. Shade, a striking resemblance; Columbia's Guard of Honor, and last of all Miss Columbia herself (Mary Stanton), a beautiful child of 9 years, supporting a silk flag and borne high upon a draped platform by four Continental soldiers, preceded by a khaki clad soldier (Elmer Funk) bearing a magnificent silk flag.

The great procession, whose long march was greeted with one continuous round of applause, all singing with patriotic fervor, more than filled the five long aisles of the big auditorium as they marched and countermarched to their seats on the stage. It was shot through and through with gorgeous tasseled banners with gold leaf and silver spangles, and rich with the sheen of silk and satin and gold bullion-fringed silk flags, which gave a spectacle of brilliancy and picturesque feudal splendor never before seen in this section of the country. Billy Sunday gave the use of several of his finest flags and banners, gifts from admiring friends and converts, and Mr. Roney contributed his rich and wondrously beautiful Knight Templar banners, souvenirs of various Triennial Conclaves.

I, UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE CHAUTAUQUA ASSEMBLY. HENRY B. RONEY, PAGEANT MASTER

As might be expected, "Old Glory" outdid all the rest.

The noted characters in history appeared in the procession chronologically, and the patriotic songs of our country, from the "Landing of the Pilgrims" down to "Keep the Home Fires Burning," of the present world's war, came also in chronological order, with descriptive prologues by Miss Carol Brown of Joliet, Mrs: Van Osdel and Miss Van Dyke preceding many of them. A Colonial Minuet, staged by Miss Irene Van Dyke of Chicago gave a realistic scene in the White House during Washington's administration. The songs brought out the best singers of Winona, Warsaw and other places, including Mrs. Lincoln Dickey and James Heaton of Winona, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Funk, Mrs. P. W. Kreiser, Mrs. Basinger, Priscilla Matthews, and Roy Spriggs of Warsaw, Mrs. H. D. Cleland of St. Louis, Mrs. C. C. Horner of Indianapolis, Miss Lorene Hoover of Orleans, Miss Virginia Unthank of Hagerstown, Md.; Miss Alamo Hawkins of Lexington, Ky.; Miss Anna Bristol and Mr. L. O. Davis of Chicago, not forgetting tiny 8-year-old Lincoln Dickey, who became a veritable "Roney Boy" in four weeks and won an ovation with his song, "When I'm Big I'll Be a Soldier."

Besides the slave songs and others in historical interest, some of the very effective choruses were: Handel's "Largo," with Miss Bugby, violin, and Mr. Welch, cornet, in the solos; the Kipling-DeKoven "Recessional," "American Consecration Hymn," by Mackaye and MacMillan, and the "Anvil Chorus," from "Trovatore," with patriotic words, the anvils being played by twelve children upon six anvils with great eclat. At the "Apotheosis to the American Flag," the entire audience and chorus rose, remained at salute, and gave in unison the Pledge of Allegiance to the American Flag, led by the Rev. Sol. C. Dickey, D. D., General Secretary of the Assembly. Mrs. Orpha Smith-White of Indianapolis then recited Riley's "Old Glory."

Mr. Roney conducted "America" and "The Star Spangled Banner" with the famous electric baton of his invention, which is connected by cable to a 6-volt storage battery, and by pressing buttons gives the national colors at will—in the chorus work blue signifying soft; red, medium power, and white, full power. And so, with the electric baton indicating expression and dynamics with the changing of its flashing colors, and concealed fans unfurling and fluttering silk flags around the stage, the thrilling Historical Pageant closed in a frenzy of patriotic fervor. Mr. Roney, as Pageant Master, succeeded in uniting and welding together the hundreds of participants from Winona Lake, Warsaw and a score of cities all over the country in a wonderful manner.

Different characters were taken by well-known clergymen, railroad officials, bankers, business men, professionals and society women. Owing to the scarcity of men in Winona, every man of military age having gone to war, many men's parts were taken by young ladies, who donned the trousers of courtiers and wore feathers and war paint of Indian chiefs with consuming grace. The costumes, some of them costing $150 to $200, were the richest and most elegant ever seen at Winona. Many were privately owned, Chicago costumers were drawn upon for many others, and "make-up" artists were secured from the Chicago Grand Opera Co.

The Kewatin School for Boys, the Red Cross School, the Medical School, the Biological School, the Chicago Boy City Club, the Summer Bible School and Winona College, all grown up under Supt. Sol C. Dickey's administration, furnished their respective quotas, and a legion of boys and girls, intensely loyal to Mr. Roney, helped to make the pageant the wonderful success it was. Mr. Roney has negotiations pending for putting on his pageant in other cities.

Tuesday Evening

Montemezzi's tragic opera, "L'Amour de Tre Re," impresses one more deeply as time goes on, especially when in each case parts of the cast have been improved, until in Tuesday night's program one felt an ideal had been reached.

Claudio Muzio seemed even lovelier than last year at the Metropolitan. Always a beautiful temperamental actress, her voice seems more opulent and full of intensity. Exactly the same could be said of Kingston, and their work together was simply stunning. One never marvels at Muzio's position today, and Kingston has surely reached the front rank of tenors. Graham Marr, whose Manfredo, since its first hearing, has left nothing to be desired in this role, increases one's admiration for his baritone voice, than which there is surely none better in America today, and with it he combines intelligence and ease of acting that is among the rarities of the singing actor.

Rothier was vocally and histrionically more than satisfying, and even blurs the memory of what we considered an almost ideal characterization of the stern, savage old Archibald which Jose Mardones gave us in earlier presentations of the opera. Rothier, like Marr, has the combination of desired qualities which remove anxiety from mind and nerves of the auditor.

Papi conducted the orchestra in his masterful and satisfying manner through the mazes of this lovely score, and that he lets his brasses sweep everthing aside in some climaxes can be cheerfully forgiven for the sake of the colorful climax he obtains. Costuming is up to Metropolitan standards; the mise-en scene time will doubtless improve, and at that it is not so bad as some the Chicago Opera Company has used on tour.

The passionate purple falling of twilight in the second act startled one's eyes from the passionate love scene of Fiora and Avito, but it gradually cooled down to a favorable pastel effect for Fiora's strangulation, which was admirably done by Rothier, and his subsequent scene with Marr was tremendous.

If the writer can always hear this opera with as good a cast there will never be any cause for carping.

Friday Afternoon

Two young artists of great talent appeared at Ravinia last Friday and made the performance one of the most successful of the year. They were Florence M. Grandland, pianiste, and Bertha Kribben, violinist, with Katharine Kittilsby at the piano.

BERTHA KRIBBEN

Miss Kribben came to Chicago in 1915, intending to enter Chicago University, but through the influence of Alexander Raab, who heard her play, she was persuaded to drop her scholastic study and devote herself entirely to music. She studied for six months with Hugo Kortschak, and has since been working with Leon Sametini. Her home is in St. Louis, Mo., where she began the study of music at the age of 14, receiving her early instruction from Franz Bausemer of that city. Since coming to Chicago, Miss Kribben has made remarkable strides in her work, and has appeared a number of times in public. She has played this summer on several occasions at the Great Lakes Naval Station, and also recently at the Majestic theater. This coming season she is engaged for a tour in which she will do considerable vaudeville work and make a number of appearances with clubs, among which will be the Renaissance Club on Nov. 25. On Friday afternoon she played two numbers—the prelude to "The Deluge" (Saint-Saens), and "Ballade and Polonaise" (Vieuxtemps). In "The Deluge" she displayed beautiful tone and deep feeling, in the high degree in which it is called for in this rare composition. In the Vieuxtemps number her temperament proved equally adaptable to the whimsical vigor of its movement. In this her technique was admirably demonstrated in difficult runs and clear double-stopping. Miss Kribben is lacking neither in musicianship nor personality, for her stage presence is instantly winning and her enthusiasm convincing.

Miss Kribben was accompanied by Miss Katharine Kittilsby of Rogers Park, who has played for soloists at Ravinia twice before this season, accompanying last week for Miss Bernice Seabury, and two weeks previously for Miss Loder. Although Miss Kittilsby's specialty is accompanying for the voice, she is no less able as an instrumental accompanist, which is proof of her thorough and diversified musicianship. Miss Kittilsby is to teach this year in a new music school to be opened at Rogers Park early in September. She has already booked a very large class and there are splendid prospects ahead. The school will no doubt become a prominent factor in the city during the coming season. In the meantime it is to be hoped that Miss Kittilsby's teaching will not interfere with her career as an accompanist, in which art she reveals remarkable insight.

The second soloist was Miss Florence M. Grandland, who played the Liszt C Major Concerto, with Mrs. Helen Woesiwick Ross at the second piano. She gave this difficult composition a most distinguished reading, for several reasons, in that her technique was unfailingly perfect, and that her tone was rich and exquisite, but especially in that the quality of refinement pervading her whole interpretation was thoroughly artistic, not effeminate or lacking in the virility required in a Liszt composition. Particularly masterful was her rendition of the closing movement, Allegro Animato. Miss Grandland is a native of Maywood, Ill. She studied during her early years with Dr. Francis Hemington of Oak Park. Her musical education has been broad and thorough, for she began the study of harmony, counterpoint and organ at an early age. She has always been particularly talented as accompanist and sight-reader, and is making a specialty at present of accompanying and coaching, as well as solo piano work. It is very rarely that this combination of gifts is found developed to so great a degree in the same person, as the two arts require such distinctly different faculties of musical perception. Miss Grandland entered the Northwestern University School of Music three years ago, since which time she has studied piano with Professor Oldberg, and theory and composition with Dr. Lutkin. She graduated in June with highest honors, having completed the four-year course in less than three years.

The orchestra, with Papi at the baton, completed the program in a most enjoyable way, playing the Delibes Ballet Suite "La Source" and the Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" (Saint-Saens). There is something increasingly interesting about Mr. Papi's conducting. He does his work with such ease, with one hand in his pocket (his accustomed attitude), that at first sight he might give the impression of nonchalance; but with each successive appearance there grows upon the listener a realization of the splendid precision and accurate vigor with which he controls the movement of his conducting arm. Mr. Papi's has been a constantly elevating and pleasing factor in Ravinia's successful season.

Friday Evening

On Friday evening the program, with Hageman conducting, was interesting and varied. In opening, the "William Tell" overture was given with the delicate finish and quaint vim pertinent to this old favorite. This was followed by a queer, piquant Rhapsodie, No. 1, Opus 17 (Hallen). The Grieg "Norwegian Melodies" were effectively repeated.

The most varied and interesting feature of the program was the Cesar Franck Sonata for violin and piano, played by Messrs. Weisbach and Hageman. It was unusual and decidedly refreshing to have an insertion of a chamber music number in an orchestral program. The simplicity and restfulness of it had the same effect upon the mind of the listener as do some of the humorous scenes in Shakespeare's plays. Not that the music was light in character, but that, without lowering the standard of the program, it so varied it as to afford a pleasing departure from the conventional vein of the program arrangement. It is really needless to say what joy the playing of this Sonata afforded at the hands of two such superb artists as Mr. Weisbach and Mr. Hagemann, for any reader of Music News would expect no less from its accustomed reports of these two soloists.

Sibelius' tone poem "Finlandia" followed the intermission and was given vigorously, though the brasses seemed a little too vigorous, and the slow movement was not slow enough to make the usual pathetic appeal.

Ruth Miller was the other distinguished soloist of the evening. She succeeded in outstripping her splendid solo of a week ago in the "Bird Song" from Pagliacci, which she sang with less restraint and a great deal of insight. However, again, as last week, she excelled in her encore, "My Love is a Muleteer," the song which Rosa Raisa made so popular the past season. ### Saturday Night

That Sophie Braslau will sing "Carmen" at the Metropolitan some time, and also very likely, at the Auditorium, is a foregone conclusion, for her debut in that fascinating if exacting role was accomplished at Ravinia Park last Saturday night in such an altogether satisfactory way as to leave no doubt whatever as to the impression she created, and, if the many thousands at Ravinia last Saturday were moved to show such enthusiasm as was the case, then, it follows, of course, other audiences in other places will also recognize the Braslau adaptability to the Bizet role and her artistry, as well as originality in presenting it.

Her voice was beautiful and this applies not alone to the big arias, but also, and equally, to all the recitative, the small ensembles, and very particularly to the second act quintet, in which she was superb, being backed up also very effectively by Miller, Latham, D'Angelo and Daddi.

The ovation tendered her at the close of the second act has never been duplicated, to my knowledge, at Ravinia, and was more like an opening-of-the-season night at the Auditorium than anything else that can be mentioned.

And, although he was not in the prime of vocal condition, Morgan Kingston as Don Jose was a splendid collaborator with Miss Braslau, and together they sang and presented all the vis-a-vis scenes admirably.

Mr. Kingston grows in histrionic finish week by week and is today one of the most polished Don Joses in mind.

In fact, there are a few points in which he excels so signally as to be notable.

For instance, in the second act scene with Carmen, where he first hears the sound of the bugle called "the retreat," he expresses his conflicting emotions facially and in action better than this writer remembers to have seen any one else do it.

This may, perhaps, be only a small matter, but it is a composite of small matters which makes the great artists, and Morgan Kingston, besides having a noble voice, has learned to be careful of action in the smallest detail, with the result that his every interpretation has become a joy.

Rothier as Escamillo sang the "Toreador Song" so pleasingly that a repetition was deemed necessary (though it should have been omitted).

He is a fine picture as the Bull Fighter and always very much the polished artist.

Edith Mason sang the Micaela aria so well as to reap a whirlwind of applause, while Ruth Miller was lovely as Frasquita, and Cordelia Latham essayed the role of Mercedes as best she could.

Miss Miller, who sang her part at short notice to oblige the management, again proved herself a charming girl and a delightful artist. Her voice is clear as a bell and soars upward with utmost facility. Her action, too, is sprightly, as well as properly dramatic, and she again created an intense desire on the part of the audience that she could be heard in one of her bigger parts.

Graham Marr as Zuniga was in his element (he loves to pose), while Daddi gave a stercotyped reading of the role of Remendado.

Louis D'Angelo, always adequate to every demand, was both original and forceful as Doncairo and invested the role with better vocal art than is the usual case.

It is astonishing that so small a stage as that at Ravinia could be employed so effectively in a scenic way as was true of this "Carmen" production, and altogether the performance was a very great improvement on any other of the opera that has been heard at Ravinia.

The Orchestra played accurately in so far as all accompaniments were concerned, and very thrillingly in the Prelude and Intermezzi.

Richard Hageman at the baton held all the forces carefully in hand and gave frequent eloquent touches to the remarkable Bizet score. C. E. W.

Other Bills

On Sunday night a part of "The Jewels of the Madonna" was repeated, thus affording Miss Muzio one of her most grateful moments and disclosing Morgan Kingston still further as a sterling artist; for, as Gennaro, he has thought out one of the most logical lines of action yet seen in that part.

On Monday night there was a splendid concert under direction of Mr. Hageman.

FLORENCE GRANDLAND

"Pagliacci" was repeated on Thursday night, and "Trovatore" will be given on Saturday.

On Wednesday "Rigoletto" was given, and on Monday night, September 2, the closing day, the bill will be the most popular of the season, "Butterfly," with Muzio, Braslau and Kingston at their best.

This afternoon the closing Student-Artist program will introduce Winifred Case Vail, vocalist, and Blanche Bonn, pianist.

The German Administration at the Metropolitan

No official announcement has been issued by the directorship of the Metropolitan Opera Company concerning the plans of opera for the coming season of 1918-19, but a word should be said beforehand regarding the administration of the Metropolitan. No need of being a linguist in order to disclose the nationality of some of the members of the administration. Their place in various occupations is a puzzle to all good Americans. Backed by American financiers, the Metropolitan ought to be completely purified of that contingent. Since the roster of German artists has been eliminated, why are the gentlemen of the administration being retained? They are German (though perhaps American citizens), and on many occasions thy have uttered opinions not entirely flattering to our country and Allies. They use their diplomacy to convince the neighbors that they are as good citizens as the 100 per cent Americans, but it is only a mockery. We have thousands of Americans eligible for the posts occupied by these Germans. They (Americans) deserve encouragement in their own country, and their ability cannot be disputed. The guarantors of the Metropolitan and the directorship are responsible for the retention of this contingent. It is their duty to purify this branch of the institution.

Miniature Philharmonic Severs Connection With Emil Reich

Owing to misunderstandings with Emil Reich, the New York musical agent, formerly with the Philharmonic Musical Bureau, Jacques Grunberg, the conductor of the Miniature Philharmonic Orchestra, has severed connection with his former representative and will in due time announce the new management.

Enrico Caruso Marries

Announcement is made of the tenor's marriage to Miss Dorothy Benjamin Franklin, a New York girl and a Summer resident of Spring Lake, a well-known colony of artists. We wish both all the happiness they deserve. Enrico Caruso was previously married to Miss Giavini, a sister of the well-known tenor; has two children, both boys, who are in the Italian service. He divorced his first wife some five years ago.

Giulio Crimi, Charles Hackett and Baritone Monte Santo at the Metropolitan—Dolci, Italian Tenor, with the Chicago Opera

Though no official announcement has emanated from the Metropolitan Opera Company, it is known that Charles Hackett, a brother of Arthur, the well-known tenor, has been engaged to sing lyric and bel canto operas. Charles Hackett is a reputable tenor and made himself famous throughout South America and Italy. He is known to be a protege of Titta Ruffo, who was first to appreciate the American's voice. He was born at Worcester, Mass., and his debut is awaited with great interest.

Signor Monte Santo, another Latin, will sing baritone roles at the Metropolitan.

Giulio Crimi, who is now fairly well restored from his recent operation in Chicago, will alternate with the other leading tenors.

Nothing is known here of Mr. Dolci's career as a tenor, but Mr. Campanini has engaged him for next season.

The San Carlo Opera

The opening of the San Carlo Opera Company will take place at the Shubert Theater on Labor Day with a performance of "Aida," interpreted by Elisabeth Amsden, formerly of the Chicago Opera Company. Radames will be sung by Manuel Salazar; Joseph Royer will sing Amonasro, and Stella Demette will take the part of Amneris.

Leone Zinovieff to Sing Eleazar with the San Carlo Opera

Among the interesting novelties which Fortune Gallo will offer for the three weeks' opera season at the Shubert Theater will be "La Juive," by Ludovic Halevy. The role of Eleazar will be sung by the Russian tenor, Leone Zinovieff, in which part it is said he is unique. The balance of the cast is not announced.

Other Appearances at the San Carlo

More information reaching your correspondent is being conveyed to the readers. The artists known as the positive factors of the coming season are: Marcella Craft, who will repeat her last year's success as Marguerite in "Faust"; Esther Ferrabini, who will reappear in her famous interpretation of Carmen, which stirred New Yorkers last Fall. Among the artists we note a soprano, Queena Mario, said to be a protege of Mme. Melba.

The Rivoli and Rialto

Both movie houses are beginning to see increased audiences with the abatement of warm weather. The musical program of the Rivoli for the week ending August 25 consisted of Jean Sibelius' Overture "Finlandia," conducted by Erno Rapee; Alberto Bachmann, concertmaster of the orchestra, played Meditation on Bach's First Prelude, organ obligato by Professor Swinnen and harp accompaniment by Sepp Morscher; Josephine Garavelli, coloratura soprano, rendered the Waltz Song from "Mireille" (Gounod). The popular musical selection was Sir Arthur Sullivan's "The Mikado," and Organist Swinnen played the Fantasie by Pierre Benoit.

The Rialto for the same week offered the Overture "If I Were King," by Adolphe Adam, Mr. Finston conducting; Greek Evans, baritone, sang Leo Croke's "Waiting"; Mlle. D'Espinoy rendered the Berceuse from "Jocelyn" (Benjamin Godard), with violin obligato by Sascha Fidelman, concertmaster of the orchestra. The popular selections consisted of Victor Herbert's "The Red Mill." George Crook was at the organ.

Fernando Carpi, Max Gegna and Cecil Arden Appear at West End, N. J.

Following my policy of not commenting professionally on artists appearing for charitable performances, I will content myself with making a record of this event. On August 23 at West End, Hollywood, N. J., under the auspices of the Jewish Relief Society, a musical program was given before a large gathering of Summer colonists at the fashionable Hotel Hollywood. Signor Fernando Carpi, assisted by his daughter at the piano, rendered several operatic airs; Max Gegna, cellist, assisted by Mr. Falk at the piano, gave several numbers, and Miss Cecil Arden, mezzo-soprano, sang various songs. The only discomforting feature was the out-of-tune piano, which made the artists and the accompaniments much trouble. As fashionable a hotel as the Hollywood should not economize in this way, especially when musical entertainments are part of the colonists' pleasure.

At Spring Lake, N. J.

For the benefit of the Red Cross, and at the same hour at West End, N. J., several artists appeared on the program. Max Gegna, cellist, made his second appearance of the evening, and Vera Barstow, violinist, and Mme. Viafora, soprano, were also on the program. The concert was given under the auspices of a committee of prominent Spring Lake colonists.

KATCHA-KOO

Under the auspices of the Third Congressional District (Illinois) Federation of Woman's Clubs a great Oriental-American Fantaštique, entitled "Katcha-Koo," was given under the direction of the John B. Rogers Producing Company at the Marlowe Theater, on Sixty-third street, two evenings last week to splendid attendance.

The Marlowe is a beautiful place, and to provide for the enormous crowds of people who took part in the pageantry of this play the Reo Hotel, next door, was also put into commission, and the whole neighborhood was alive with excitement and color.

The performance was largely in the nature of pageantry, tableaux and dancing, and hundreds of young people and children took part, providing a perfect riot of spectacle and impressionism.

The music was plentiful in quantity but rather slight in texture, and very much reminiscent of other times and places.

It was all well handled, however, and a very specially noteworthy feature was the playing of accompaniments and incidental numbers by the Armour Orchestra, which was donated for the occasion by the Armour Company.

This is a more than usually creditable amateur body, under the direction of F. W. Andrews, and did some excellent playing.

Harry L. Fellowes played Katcha-Koo, a Svengalistic sort of person, with some conviction, and Francis J. Finn made a convincing Maharajah.

Constance Folger and Julia Keith, as the two daughters of the foolish American widow, had the most of the solo singing to do, and they accomplished their tasks very attractively.

The stage was a perfect riot of color and movement, and the action of the piece was carried forward with vim and spirit.

The speaking of most of the players needed more attention than had been given, for a great deal of the text was lost through poor enunciation.

Enough of value was to be found in the whole production, however, to warrant great enthusiasm on the part of the audiences and to mark the venture a fine success.

AT ORCHESTRA HALL

The bill at Orchestra Hall this week is made notable not only because of the fine orchestral playing under Mr. Bass' direction—playing which is both intelligent and artistic—but also through the introduction of "Ave Maria" (Bach-Gounod) and "Sing, Smile, Slumber" (Gounod), played on harp, violin, cello and organ by Mme. Amelia Conti, George Bass, Walter Ferner and Miss E. Bester.

Mme. Conti is a splendid artist and she is associated in this ensemble with thoroughly worthy co-workers, with the result that at no time in the Summer Night Cinema Concerts at Orchestra Hall has there been such beautiful and altogether charming numbers.

One of the films used this week shows Cantonment Singing and Marching Singing and various other musical demonstrations in the East. It is wonderfully indicative of the value of music in the camps and the spirit and understanding with which it is administered. You ought to go to Orchestra Hall just to hear Mme. Conti and the others of the quartet and to see these remarkable pictures of "the boys," even though the "big picture" of the bill is scarcely worth the time it takes to see it. C. E. W.

MME. STURKOW-RYDER

Mrs. Carrie Dunning and about thirty of her teachers' class from all over the United States attended the recital given at the Sturkow-Ryder Studios August 25 by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder and Lillian Parks.

In addition to the numbers on the program Mme. Sturkow-Ryder played her sparkling "Imps" and Gigue in G major (Scarlatti).

Among the guests of the afternoon were Edward Lang of Pekin, China, connected with the English Mission, and Charles Lagourgue, the popular French clarinetist.

Program:

RUSSIAN SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA HAS NEW PRESIDENT

With the belief that a better understanding of Russia and its people could be reached by a more general appreciation of its artistic resources, Colonel William Boyce Thompson has accepted the presidency of the Russian Symphony Orchestra. He will succeed Mr. Frank S. Hastings, who served in that capacity since its inception and who will remain as one of its officers in the reorganization which will follow.

It was Colonel Thompson's generosity that enabled the Russian Symphony Society to give its subscription concerts in New York last winter. While some contributions had been received there was still lacking $10,000 and this he contributed when the matter was brought to his attention. He took the ground that in every way the bonds between this country and struggling Russia should be strengthened and that Russian music should be encouraged in view of this object.

As head of the Red Cross mission to Russia, Colonel Thompson spent nearly a year in that country and gained a knowledge of Russian character and of Russian political affairs that should be an asset to American diplomacy in dealing with that bewildered nation. He obtained an insight into the psychology underlying the Russian revolution, and with it came a comprehension of the difficulties encountered by those remote from the scene, in understanding a social upheaval not only political, but economic in its character.

Colonel Thompson has been a director of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York since its organization in 1914. He is also a director of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and president of the Magma Arizona Railroad Company. This, in addition to his directorship in both the Utah and the Nevada Consolidated Copper Companies, and his presidency of the Inspiration Copper Company. It is due to his efforts as chairman of the Westchester County Commission of Safety that United States Senator William M. Calder introduced the Daylight Saving Bill, which became a law early in the year.

Colonel Thompson is vice president of the Rocky Mountain Club. He is also a member of the Union League, Metropolitan, Columbia University, Hudson River County, Sleepy Hollow, Republican and Ardsley Clubs, and a Fellow of the American Geographical Society.

His latest war work has been the institution of the "Home Paper" Service. At his personal expense he is now sending 6,000 copies of the Westchester county papers to the soldiers and sailors who came from that county. So appreciative have been the letters received from the men at the front over the receipt of these papers regularly, which has kept them in touch with their communities, that Colonel Thompson has been urged to bring the results of this work to the attention of the country generally. In order to do this a national organization has been formed, and one in the state of New York is now being perfected under the auspices of the New York Press Association.

The active interest of Colonel Thompson in the Russian Symphony Orchestra will serve to enlarge the scope of the activities of that organization, which will be placed on a more stable basis. A committee of prominent women is now being organized with this end in view. The Russian Symphony Society was founded by Modest Altschuler, its present conductor, fifteen years ago, to introduce and to give the right interpretation to the music of the Russian School of Composers. Colonel Thompson, through the medium of the Russian Symphony Orchestra, hopes to weld together more closely the sympathies of the two great countries through the universal medium of music.

SAN CARLO OPENS SEASON IN NEW YORK

Announcement of a splendid array of leading singers directs attention of music-lovers upon the approaching three weeks' engagement of the San Carlo Grand Opera Company at the Shubert Theater, opening one week from Monday. Tickets for the first week will be ready next Monday, and in this respect the immense throng that besieged the box office upon the opening night of the San Carlo engagement at the Forty-fourth Street Theater last season is recalled.

The first singers of the San Carlo forces are as follows:

Soprani—Mmes. Elizabeth Amsden, Marcella Craft (in three special performances), Estelle Wentworth, Ester Ferrabini, Queena Mario and Edvige Vaccari, the last two named being coloraturas.

Mezzo-soprani—Mmes. Stella DeMette, Marta Melis, Frances Morosini, Alice Homer.

Tenori — Messrs. Manuel Salazar, the Spanish artist; Leone Zinovieff, Russian singer; Giuseppe Agostini, Romeo Boscacci, Luciano Rossini.

Baritoni—Messrs. Joseph Royer, Angelo Antola, Roberto Viglione, Luigi Dellemolle.

Bassi—Messrs. Pietro DeBiasi, Natale Cervi.

Prima Ballerina—Mlle. Clara Tosca.

Musical director—Sig. Gaetano Merola.

Assistant Musical Director—Signor Amedeo Barbieri.

The second and third weeks of the engagement, announces the San Carlo management, will see a number of new and splendid artists added to even this formidable array of talent, forming a roster of leading singers quite beyond anything ever heard here in grand opera at regular theater costs. The first week operas are: Monday, "Aida"; Tuesday, "Rigoletto"; Wednesday matinee, "Tales of Hoffmann"; Wednesday evening, "Cavalleria Rusticana"; Thursday, "Carmen"; Friday, "Faust"; Saturday matinee, "Romeo and Juliet"; Saturday evening, "Il Trovatore."

Yung—Mme. Marie Yung, director of the European Ballet School, will resume classes in dancing Tuesday, September 3, the formal opening of the Fall Term. Larger and more beautiful studios have been engaged for the coming season on the fourth floor of the Fine Arts Building. Hours may now be reserved for the coming term upon application at office.

Stead—Franklin Stead, President of the Peoria Musical College, and Mrs. Stead are spending the Summer at their fine place at Miltona Lake, Minnesota. They have in their fine cottage there a fine music room, and Mrs. Stead is spending each morning in ardent preparation for her concert work of next season.

GRAY-LHEVINNE FOR THE NAVY

Out upon the Pacific Coast the Gray-Lhevinnes are finding themselves as popular with the boys in blue as they were up and down the Atlantic.

Mr. Lhevinne is now giving a series of original recitals for the Marines and Navy men. So well liked is this picturesque pianist that the mere announcement that he is coming back packs the auditoriums and halls.

Lhevinne gave a recital in San Francisco on August 11 and the 8th also.

During September there will be several important Gray-Lhevinne recitals in Washington state.

The accompanying cut shows the Gray-Lhevinnes dressed for the beach, standing outside their studio, which is practically on the shore of the Pacific.

EFFA ELLIS PERFIELD SYSTEM

Any "growing" thing must have many expert helpers if the world is its chosen field.

Effa Ellis Perfield's Music System not only chose the world for its field, but has made the world, especially our "United

FELICIA TURNER
Assistant to Effa Ellis Perfield

States World," recognize Effa Ellis Perfield as the first pedagogue to spread a gospel of teaching that is based on scientific pedagogy and that develops the Three Educational Senses; ear, eye and touch, and eliminates the apparatus by enabling the pupil, young as well as old, to do the real thing. In order to establish nearly 4,000 teachers it has been necessary for Mrs. Perfield and her devoted husband to travel the greater part of the time. How can Mrs. Perfield attend to her headquarters in Chicago and New York and be away? The solution of the problem is this: She has helpers that have been "raised" on Mrs. Perfield's philosophy of Inner-Feeling, Reasoning and Drills. They know how to apply it to everything from mailing supplies to developing teachers. One of her best helpers is Felicia Turner, who has been with Mrs. Perfield about nine or ten years. She is one of three teachers in the United States to have the title of "Examining Normal Teacher," which means that Mrs. Perfield issues a pedagogical certificate to any teacher passing the pedagogical test under Miss Turner.

She has charge of the teachers' work and manages the school when Mrs. Perfield is away. Miss Turner has individuality back of her pleasing personality, and her work with teachers has developed a confidence which makes for efficiency along all lines. Her pupils' tests at the Summer School demonstrated that her work had been constantly scrutinized by Mrs. Perfield until there is no criticism that can be made.

Special mention must be made of one little 11-year-old girl, Martha Atwood, who started her music lessons July 3 and went through a "test" July 27, at the closing Perfield Summer School session.

It hardly seems proper to relate the work this child did, because only those who heard her will believe that she read notes as rapidly as Miss Turner placed them on the board; she wrote three chords containing any note placed on treble or bass staff; she took rhythmic dictation on quarter notes, eighth notes, sixteenths, triplets, half, whole and dotted half notes. She improvised to rhythm patterns. She sang major and minor chords. She spelled, sang, played and wrote any major chord called for by the audience. One small boy who is a pupil of another Perfield teacher asked Martha to spell the B twenty-four flat chord; this did not bother Martha, but it was puzzling to the audience, whereupon Miss Turner explained that because the Perfield System based everything on principle, it was no more different to spell chords on any number of sharps or flats than to walk so many blocks east, when the principle of east is understood. Rapid definite reasoning is one of the strong points in the Perfield work.

Miss Turner also demonstrated advanced work with Gordon Looney, 12 years old.

He played chord sentences and created modulations from any key into any key called for. First he used one chord, then two, and finally three, four, five, six and seven chords. He spelled and played dominant 7th and diminished 7th with all resolutions. He spelled and took dictation on German, Italian, French and American 6th chords. He spelled 144 chords in three and one-half minutes. He demonstrated musical memory, intellectual memory, and showed how these applied to the memorizing of music.

HADLEY CONCERT CO.

Music News is in receipt of a letter from the Hadley Concert Co., in which they report a very pleasant and successful summer. The company is touring Wisconsin, Illinois and Minnesota. Their list of bookings includes more than eighty towns.

The following well-known Chicago musicians make up the personnel: Florence Caro Lindley, soprano; May Pfeiffer, contralto; Thomas Fannell, tenor; Grant Hadley baritone; Lela Lowe-Pierson, violinist; Bernadine Dimond, cellist, and Carl Coleman, pianist.

Rydstrom—Jean O. Rydstrom, director of music at Olivet Institute, Chicago, writes from Glenview Park, Ill., where he is spending his vacation, that he has there 8,000 square feet of land under cultivation and that he is raising vegetables enough so that (canned) they will furnish entire provision for his family the coming winter. That is surely a fine, patriotic way for a musician to spend his vacation period.

###

Correction—It has been called to the attention of Music News that Charles Gilbert Spross was the accompanist for Anna Case in her recent successful Ocean Grove, N. J., engagement, and not the pianist mentioned in this paper.

What the Music of the Coming Season Should Stand For, What It May Include, and What It Should Not Include

Music News has spoken in no uncertain terms again and again in reference to its beliefs and policies as regards German music and its influence in America.

The time is ripe, however, to make a restatement and to say even more emphatically than before what we stand for during the coming season.

First of all, the definite plan of every program given in this country this season should be to include as much as possible of Americanism, both as regards artists and in the matter of compositions.

The make-up of all programs should be American, French, Italian, English and Russian, in the same order of preponderance, and if any of the older German works are permissible at all, they must come in secondary places and be used merely to emphasize the fact of their waning importance.

No program should be preponderantly German (Old School German, we mean), and none should be exclusively German under any circumstances.

German text songs, oratorios or operas have become, of course, unthinkable.

The former Chicago Symphony Orchestra opening programs, with their iteration of Bach, Beethoven and Wagner (and nothing else), are now intolerable, and the inclusion of any Richard Strauss at any time (or of any other modern German) has become an impossibility.

A movement is now on foot in New York to absolutely intern all German music during the continuance of the war, and we take pleasure in reproducing on the following page an article by Mrs. Jay on this subject, which appeared very recently in The Chronicle, although we do this without comment, allowing each reader to draw his own deductions and conclusions.

Music News does not, at present, endorse this article without reserve, but we do repeat that if the German classics be not absolutely tabooed during the coming season, they must be put secondary to American music and the music of Our Allies.

Music News has lost many subscribers and advertisers (if you will look through our Directory Columns you may discover some of them through their absence) because of our outspokenness in these matters of loyalty, but we are proud of the distinction, even as we are proud also of that other splendid list which includes the names of those who have gone into war service.

We would be untrue to the latter did we not glory also in the fact that the names of the former list are no longer in our advertising columns.

INTERN ALL GERMAN MUSIC!!!

By Mrs. William Jay in the Chronicle (New York)

No American woman has done more, individually, than Mrs. William Jay in exposing German propaganda in this country. German opera, German theaters, Irish-German plots, and the German tongue, have all been shown up by Mrs. Jay as the intellectual and political weapons of the German militarists. Her most eminent campaign was directed against Doktor Karl Muck, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is now a prisoner at Fort Oglethorpe—a "dangerous enemy alien." One can predict confidently that German music will go the way of other German influences under the guidance of Mrs. Jay's logic

Long ago—it was in the last November issue of The Chronicle—there was published an article by me on the subject of German Opera, and I advocated strongly the elimination of the operas of Wagner, Strauss and Mozart from the repertoires of the Opera Houses of the United States at that time. It was my claim that the sound of the German language was especially unwelcome. However, I then stated that I saw no reason why the music of German composers should not be played in our concert halls and parks and lyceums. I was actuated throughout by a desire to be utterly fair and to keep all prejudice against the enemy in its proper place. I intended to go to all concerts in New York and to accept the compositions of Beethoven and Bach as if there were no such thing as the world war.

It became impossible.

Since that time so much has developed and so many treacherous and malignant plots on the part of enemy sympathizers have come to my knowledge that an explanation an apology—is necessary, in justice to whomever may have been so kind as to have read my article.

My mind is completely changed because I know that which I did not know then.

The very interesting and exciting developments leading up to the arrest of Doktor Karl Muck brought into bright light the fact that the agents of the Kaiser had arranged through music and through musicians the most stupendous propaganda, aimed to become a scourge to this country, as well as a paramount achievement for the cause of German Kultur.

Undoubtedly, before von Bernstorff left the United States he had given his instructions and had outlined his campaign along what he perhaps thought very clever, as well as safe lines. That arch-conspirator no doubt mused, "Was not Muck backed by a very rich and powerful gentleman to say nothing of his adoring Boston and New York public? Hadn't German music become as much a part of American routine as our own native breakfast foods? Could anything break the spell of German music and German artists? Would anyone suspect that behind the beautiful music of the classic composers there lurked the malevolence of German intrigue?" But this band of spies did not realize that there were men and women in America with loyal hearts, who would fight for their beloved country at home, although they could not do so in the trenches.

The existence of German musical propaganda has been established not only through the material imprisonment of countless enemy musicians but through the emotional influence which music, in itself, exerts over the hearts and the minds of the listeners. In view of this situation, it is purely selfishness on the part of anyone who places his own pleasure before the clearly definite duty of having done with everything German and his willingness to disregard a real danger in order to gratify his personal desire is an act of cowardice or culpable ignorance. When one thinks of the millions of American men who are making the supreme sacrifice, how little it seems to the stay-at-home American to give up Beethoven and Brahms during these terrific times! It is my contention that all German music must be interned for the duration of the war. A few still argue—but their patriotic spirit is lacking—that music is without nationality and that, being a very high form of artistic expression, it can be readily disassociated from war. Why have national anthems to express the soul of a people if music and the national life are separate and apart? Music is perhaps most conspicuously the national expression of Germany because it has penetrated so far beyond the German frontiers and has been received in the past with so much more welcome than the discordant painting, the hideous brutalizing literature of the people with whom we are at war. Every music lover who is a true American will take upon himself a great responsibility if he encourages German music, if for no other reason than the subjecting of Americans of German extraction to a severe test. It is very much the task of all of us to do what we can to attract our neighbors of German antecedents to a citizenship, bereft of the hateful hyphen, and to this end it is wrong to provide for them German music, which by the very nature of its subtle fabric would most certainly recall memories of the fatherland and shake them in their allegiance to the country opposed to everything for which Germany stands. Winning over this element to democracy is almost like curing a person of an unfortunate love affair, and how well we know that deep suggestion of a fragment of melody and how it awakens thoughts and yearnings. German music can only stir in the brains of the listeners who know Germany, the recollection of the Prussian seaports whence U-boats issue, the Bavarian barracks teeming with bloodthirsty ruffians, and the Saxon villages now dotted with aerodromes from which fly instruments of death. It has been said that German music is played both in France and England. This is true, but it does not alter the fact that owing to our large population of German origin we are confronted by a situation which in justice to these citizens must be handled with caution and wisdom. The French and English people may listen dispassionately to the music of Teutonic composers without running the great danger of alienating the loyalty of many who are fighting against earlier associations. Contrary to this musical condition in France and England, I can set forth the statement of an Italian officer in this country who says that since Italy declared war on the Teutonic Allies none but Italy's music has been played in his country. Italy's part in the war is so profoundly significant that this evidence of her understanding of musical propaganda should be given the utmost consideration.

It is also noteworthy that suppliants for the retention of German music are usually of that type of mind which condoned the Lusitania sinking, and saw no outrage in the occupation of Belgium.

Another argument set forth is, that by putting an end, even temporarily, to the playing of the German classics, the American people would lose artistically more than they would lose were the works of art by all German masters to be supressed. This cannot be true. Great music is immortal, but all music must cease to be art when it is degraded and utilized for economic and political advantages, as we know that all German music has been used. Just as we of the Allies use poisonous gases to meet our savage foe, so must we regretfully retaliate and suppress the works of her composers. Each day as the news from France becomes more vital and more terrible, I find myself with the strengthened belief in my heart that to listen to one note of music by any German composer, dead or living, is a traitorous act against everything for which our government, our navy, our army, and our people are fighting. Therefore, I do ask the Hoffmans and the Heifetzes, and all who aspire to their consummate level, to intern all music of Teutonic origin until America and her Allies have accomplished their task—winning the war.

(Signed) LUCIE JAY.

TWO LETTERS

The First

France, July 12, 1918.

To Mrs. Archibald Freer.

My Dear Friend: No news has come from you for some time, and life has been so agitated here the past few months that I have not had a moment in which to write to you.

Since 1914 I have been sent all over the country by the Minister of Fine Arts to play to the soldiers at the front and the wounded in the hospitals. I have been at least twenty times near the battle front and once was not more than ten miles from the German lines. We have been at times so showered with shells that our concerts had to be given underground. These are unforgettable souvenirs for us, and we have seen the war before our eyes. My hatred for the Germans has steadily increased—if that is possible. Seeing all the useless destruction and these ruins shows their actions to be a return to primitive barbarism. This people of bandits have proved themselves unfit to count among nations of honest and intellectual people. Everything that is ignoble, cruel, underhanded and disgusting they have done. One can never know of all the atrocities they have committed in these devastated regions. There are things which I can neither write nor talk about.

But glorious America has come to help us chastise this race, and we now have hopes that the moment of victory is not far distant. They must be made to atone for all they have done and all they are doing. The bombardment of Paris is another act of stupidity on their part. What does it prove? The Parisians complain of nothing and endure everything. We have continued our usual pursuits as far as possible. We artists do suffer—our pupils not forced to remain in Paris have gone, and those remaining are artist-students as badly off as the teachers. But there is no complaint. We merely help one another as best we can. I returned to Paris to see the 4th of July celebration. What wild enthusiasm over your compatriots, my dear friend! They must have been gratified with their reception. Then, I came back to the country for a short but much-needed rest. In September I shall return to Paris. We are anticipating a new enemy offensive, because the Germans are anxious for victory before the arrival of your vast army. Defeat awaits them. If my brother, Benjamin, had lived, he would surely have found some means of serving this great cause, because he took part in the war of 1870 and thoroughly detested the Germans and everything that came from their country. One great service this war will have accomplished is the reuniting of America and France. How happy I should be to go to your country and play my brother's works for your people. You must be very busy with all your present war duties. When in Paris I rarely find a moment my own. Let me hear from you soon, dear colleague and friend, and believe always in my lasting friendship.

(Signed) MAGDELEINE GODARD,
(Violinist, and sister of the distinguished French composer.)

Mr. Daniel Mayer,
Aeolian Hall, New York.
My Dear Mr. Mayer:

Referring to your co-operation with the War Camp Community Service, I wish to express the great appreciation of this organization, as well as my own personal gratitude, and beg to assure you that as Secretary of the Music and Entertainment Division, I accept your generous assistance with the greatest pleasure.

Your previous hearty co-operation when I was with the Mayor's Committee of National Defense must have made you realize what a vital force music is in maintaining the morale, not only of the men in the camps, but of the civilian population, which is so quickly reflected by men in the service. You will be interested to know that a British officer recently in this country made the statement that the morale and hygienic condition of the American troops in France had never been equaled by any armed force in the history of the world, and that he attributed this largely to the influence of music and other agencies affecting the environment of training camps.

I assure you that it will give me great pleasure to call upon you whenever the occasion arises and that I thoroughly appreciate your patriotic service.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) KENDALL K. MUSSEY,
Music and Entertainment Division,

HELEN LEVY ENTERTAINS

Helen L. Levy, the Chicago manager, who is spending some time in New York, entertained several celebrities and managers at a dinner party Thursday evening. Those present were: Florence Macbeth, Constance Balfour, Ida May Odelin, Mischa Levitzki, Captain Whitwell of the British Ministry of Munitions, Dr. Louis Levine, professor of economics, University of Missoula, Montana; Carlo Liten, Modest Altschuler, L. E. Behymer, Lawrence Lambert and Daniel Mayer. A delightful evening was spent, and the artists discussed pro and con the topics of the day.

The inimitable Carlo Liten read "Le Drapeau Belge" and several other poems by Belgian authors. Daniel Mayer entertained the party with his memoirs of the many noted artists that came under his management during the twenty-eight years of experience in the managerial field of London, England. Then Levitzki played. He was asked to play one of his own compositions, and after a little persuasion accommodated his listeners. Mr. Behymer was very attentive, and after Mr. Levitzki had finished he said: "Levitzki, can you tell me if, along in that middle part of the piece where that murderous spasm took place, it had anything to do with the end of a perfect day of a mosquito? I could hear you walloping someone or something." His humor ignited immediately with Levitzki's, who replied: "You have spoiled an ideal I had formed. While I knew it wasn't an original theme, I was undecided whether it was Wagner or Sousa; but since it is a spasm, you make me feel it must be something of Stravinsky or Schoenberg."

That closed the end of a perfect night.

MME. AMELIA CONTI

Mme. Conti, harp virtuoso, who appeared so successfully at Orchestra Hall last week and who has won much fame for her splendid playing as a member of the Chicago Grand Opera Orchestra, was formerly a member of the Boston Opera Orchestra and a very great concert favorite throughout the East.

She is a distinguished artist and has appeared as soloist with scores of the great orchestras of the world, playing under the direction of Toscanini, Weingartner, Mascagni and Perosi, as well as many others.

In ensemble and in solo playing she is equally fine and has won renown throughout Europe in both branches of the art.

In Chicago Mme. Conti, besides fulfilling many fine concert and orchestra engagements, has established herself as a teacher of the harp with no superiors.

She understands the orchestral aspects of the instrument equally as well as solo requirements, and she insists not alone upon breadth and beauty of tone, but also upon the attainment of a fine musicianship.

This is an outlook upon the harp which is shared by very few teachers and it is one that makes Mme. Conti invaluable.

LUCY J. HARTMAN

A handsome little brochure which fell into my hands recently was so indicative of the successes of Miss Lucy J. Hartman, Chicago contralto, and so corroborative of the opinion formed in my mind long ago and very often expressed in print, that it was read with unusual eagerness. Miss Hartman proved to my satisfaction long ago that she has one of the best contralto voices ever developed in Chicago, and anyone would not need to have heard her half so many times as has been my fortune to be thoroughly convinced that not alone has she personality, presence and poise, but also a choice intelligence and skill in interpretation.

The little book about Miss Hartman is interesting in the detail of facts about her public work. She has gone quietly about her singing with but little blare of trumpets and the long list of successfully filled engagements of the past few seasons comes as a surprise. Probably no young singer in Chicago has had a longer list of appearances with orchestra. One that comes most readily to mind is that of last winter, when, in conjunction with three other sterling young Chicago artists, Miss Hartman was soloist in Houseley's difficult "Omar Khayyam" when it was given its Chicago premiere and at the same time a rousing good performance by Butler Brothers' Choral Society, under the direction of George L. Tenney at Orchestra Hall. Reference to the Press at Large in this issue reveals the fact that she received the endorsement of the Chicago critics. Another successful appearance of the last season was with the Edison Symphony Orchestra. Others of recent seasons were: Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Chicago Concert Ensemble Orchestra, Elgin Choral Society, Ripon (Wis.) School of Music, Angola Choral Society, Irving Park Woman's Club, Birchwood Country Club, Bay View Chautauqua Assembly, Millard Avenue Woman's Club and many church concerts, oratorios and cantatas, besides a long list of miscellaneous concerts.

A notable thing about Miss Hartman's record is the unusual number of engagements she has had for the contralto solos in "The Messiah." Having heard her personally in a number of these, it is a surprise to the writer that she has not appeared as "Messiah" soloist with the Apollo Club. It is easy to predict that she will yet do so.

The "Messiah" appearances listed on Miss Hartman's booklet include Minnesota College Oratorio Society and Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, Handel Choral Society (Chicago), Haydn Choral Society (Chicago), Topeka Choral Society (Washburn College), Cornell Oratorio Society (Cornell College), Angola Choral Society (Angola, Ind.), Church of the Covenant (Chicago) and Buena Memorial Presbyterian Church (Chicago).

She has sung "Elijah" also a gratifying number of times, and the many special festival services at New First Congregational Church, Chicago, in which she has taken part are further proof of her predilection for religious works and her aptness in oratorio. Return engagements in these oratorios testify the satisfaction given.

Miss Hartman does not confine her art entirely to religious works. Many appearances have been marked by proofs in plenty of her ability to compass the best musical literature, ranging from grave to gay. She knows how to color the different songs and to invest each with its correct mood values.

Miss Hartman is singing this week at the great American Festival in Lockport, where she will, during that time, make six appearances. Unquestionably she will there repeat the successes she has achieved in Chicago and elsewhere, again proving herself one of that worthy list of young American singers who are able to meet public requirements and whose presence in this country makes it immaterial whether we have further visitations of foreign artists or not.

RICHARD N. MANN

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Mann (Ellen Kinsman Mann) are receiving congratulations on the commission of their son, Richard N. Mann, as Second Lieutenant in the United States Army.

Mr. Mann graduated from the Engineer Officers' class at Armour Technical Institute last June and was the first of three going to Camp Lee to receive a commission, which came to him on the very day that he was 21 years of age.

Mr. Mann has inherited musical talents and a good voice, and has sung baritone in the Male Quartet at Armour for four years, being also for two years the leader of the Glee Club, and further, during the same time, has been a member of the Sunday Evening Club Chorus, under direction of Gordon Erickson, and of the choir of the University Congregational Church.

FRANCES PAPERT

Frances Papert, the popular Chicago mezzo-contralto, has returned from New York, where she spent a large part of the Summer and where she had a number of fine appearances.

She had many flattering offers to make her home in the Eastern city.

At present she has been engaged in Chicago for special services each month at the Ravenswood Congregational Church and has a number of club engagements to fulfill.

Miss Papert will resume teaching at her home studio, 223 Fifty-fifth place.

RENE S. LUND

Rene S. Lund, baritone soloist of Grace Episcopal Church, has been engaged to appear as soloist with the Apollo Musical Club in its part-song concert September 30. Mr. Lund will sing two groups of songs by American composers. This will be Mr. Lund's second appearance as soloist with the Apollo Club.

Clippinger—The Musical Monitor is to be heartily congratulated on the fact that D. A. Clippinger of Chicago has just accepted the position of associate editor on that paper.

LOUIS KREIDLER

Louis Kreidler, the well known baritone of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, has discontinued his private studio in the Fine Arts building and joined the faculty of the Lyceum Arts Conservatory in the Lyon &

LOUIS KREIDLER

Healy building, beginning his teaching with the opening session, September 9.

Mr. Kreidler will teach voice and coach advanced students in grand opera roles. In announcing Mr. Kreidler the catalogue calls attention to the fact that he is the product of all-American training, thus demonstrating that European study is not necessary in order to reach the topmost rung of musical success.

Mr. Kreidler has a repertoire of more than forty operas, many of which he has sung in two languages.

Miranda—Max Miranda, formerly of South Bend Conservatory, is now located at Beloit, Wis., where he has been elected associate professor of music and assistant professor of biology in Beloit College. He will there be college organist and head of the piano and organ departments. Mrs. Miranda (Erma Hoag Miranda) is to be head of the voice department and director of the college vested choir of about forty voices.

THE PRESS AT LARGE

In this division of Music News there will be printed, week by week, comments on various concerts and artists which have appeared in the daily and weekly press of the country. ## Lucy J. Hartman

Miss Lucy J. Hartman, contralto, found instant appreciation for her rich, beautiful voice and her remarkably fine diction.—Herman Devries, Chicago Evening American.

Of the soloists Miss Hartman deserves special mention. . . . Possessed of good vocal material . . . made much of part.—Maurice Rosenfeld, Chicago Daily News.

Lucy J. Hartman sang the fragments for solo and sang them well.—Frederick Donaghey, Chicago Tribune.

. . . Gave great delight.—Henriette Weber, Chicago Herald and Examiner.

. . . Solo parts were in the capable hands of four of Chicago's most reliable singers, one of whom was Lucy J. Hartman, contralto.—Chicago Examiner.

. . . Sang well and read words with understanding.—Karleton Hackett, Chicago Evening Post.

Brought about good results. . . . Evidently paid the composer the compliment of giving adequate rehearsal to his work.—Felix Borowski, Chicago Herald.

Something About the New Concert Tax

Twenty per cent tax on musical entertainments is considered as rather exorbitant by the general public which finds pleasure in music, and by musicians who delight in pleasing the public. Prominent musicians are of the opinion that this big tax will practically kill many forms of musical entertainment that have been popular, and especially in small cities and towns, where grand opera has generally been a losing venture, and where special guarantee of the sale of seats for big concerts has formerly been asked in advance. People who are interested in music, which has been found to be a great comforter to the country, and without which the nation would lose much, are protesting against what they consider an unjust tax.

In response to an urgent request, Mrs. Minnie C. Hubbard of this city sent the following telegram to Senator Knute Nelson at Washington, D. C.:

"This is an appeal for you to protest against the twenty per cent tax on musical entertainments. Unselfishly, I speak for the public, which, in its craving for sympathy, craves for music in its sorrow and lonesomeness. I beg you to give this matter your serious consideration."

Senator Nelson immediately responded by telegraph, promising to do what he could. That he took action on the matter is seen from the following clipping, taken from the New York Sun:

"Even in these days of constructive recess Congress responds to calls for the consideration of subjects of great importance, although it is supposed to meet only to adjourn. On one of last week's meeting days Senator Nelson, who never bothers with matters of minor consequence, presented a petition by Mrs. Minnie C. Hubbard of Mankato, remonstrating against the tax on musical entertainments. The remonstrant—and mark well the words, the lady does not even pray, as do male petitioners—started something, the end of which no Congress may ever see. Senator Blankhead, presiding, deftly gave the first sidetrack impetus to the petition by referring it to the committee on finance. Futile! Suffrage and prohibition may boast their tons of petitions, but will carload lots be able to carry to Washington the petitions against this poorly concealed conspiracy to use the taxing power to kill music? If the musical instruments survive they will know they have been in a 'fight.'"—Mankato (Minn.) Daily Free Press.

Oak Park Organ Opening September 20

An event of great interest in Chicago organ circles will be the opening of the large organ in the First Congregational Church of Oak Park, which has been set for September 20. William E. Zeuch of Boston, formerly of Chicago, will give the dedicatory recital.

This magnificent organ is the product of the factory of the Ernest M. Skinner Company and the forces of Mr. Skinner have been in Oak Park a good part of the summer installing it. It is the largest church instrument in or near Chicago. The complete specification was published in The Diapason at the time the contract was let. Mr. Zeuch when he left Chicago was the organist of this church. The edifice in Oak Park was destroyed by fire, with the large new Cassavant organ it contained. The new church is one of the most beautiful and costly in the United States—The Diapason.

We extend hearty congratulations to the Gray-Lhevinne Company. We just have a new daughter ourselves. Both mother and father are doing well.—The Platform.

In New York now at our concerts one can see by searching at least five or six of the greatest of the musical exponents of our time scattered through our audiences. No city in Europe can boast of audiences as intelligent and as intellectually appreciative of music as ours are, permeated as they are by an atmosphere of real knowledge and expert criticism.

The spell has at last been broken which hypnotized all Americans for so long, the belief that a musical education could not be obtained at home. It has been forced on us by a great calamity, but the good results for students will be far-reaching.—Elinor Comstock in Musical Monitor.

Mme. Hanna Butler in Michigan

Mme. Hanna Butler of the Mary Wood Chase School closed her fourth successful season at Epworth with a recital given by her pupils, Monday afternoon. The recital hall of the conservatory was filled to capacity with a most appreciative audience, who received each number with generous applause.

Each pupil sang with pleasing tone quality, and the distinct enunciation which always gives so much pleasure in Mme. Butler's own singing and is always remarked in her pupils.

Great credit is to be given teacher and pupils for the fine work done in the short session of five weeks. Every year the presence of Mme. Butler at Epworth draws many families from distant states who come for some member to have the benefit of her fine training. Also many of her Chicago class follow her here, who wish to continue their work through the summer.

The following program was given:

Hear Ye, Israel.....Mendelssonn
Miss Fay Hanshett, Sioux City, Iowa
Great Peace Have They that Love Thy Laws..Rogers
Mrs. Rathje, Chicago
Aria from Louise.....Charpentier
Spring.....Clark
Mrs. Garett, El Dorado, Tex.
Perhaps.....Forester
Her Rose.....Coombs
Dawning.....Cadman
Curtis Crellen, Pittsburg, Pa.
By the Waters of Minnetonka.....Lieurance
Brother Sunshine.....Lehman
Daddy's Sweetheart.....Lehman
Serenata.....Tosti
Mabel Smith, Little Rock, Ark.
I Hear a Thrush at Eve.....Cadman
Sky Blue Water.....Cadman
Rosalie.....De Koven
Florian's Song.....Godard
Ouvre Tes Yeux Bleu.....Massenet
Mary Lee Strader

At the conclusion of this program Mme. Butler sang in response to many requests a group of English songs which were enthusiastically received.—Ludington Press.

"I am thinking, before I pay that fine, of letting the musicians' union whistle, and going to work in a munitions factory," quoth Frank Kryl, in lofty dudgeon last night. Mr. Kryl was fined $50 by the trial board of the Chicago Federation of Musicians yesterday because he called Albin Steindel, another member, a pro-German, and poked him while they were in the alley back of the Garrick Theater.

"Yes, sir, I took him by the hair on the top of his head and poked him on the snoot," said Mr. Kryl, who is a Bohemian and plays the French horn in the Garrick orchestra. "My son Frank is in France with Pershing, and he wrote me the other day he had won the war cross.

"He carried a message across a place under fire and filled with gas, running and crawling on all fours, with his gas mask on. And my brother, Lieut. Bohumir Kryl, is to the army what Sousa is to the navy of the United States.

"I called this Albin Steindel, who is a nephew of Bruno Steindel of the Symphony Orchestra, a pro-German, and I hit him in the alley, and the trial board fined me, not for hitting him, but for calling him a pro-German, which I think he is.

"Mr. Steindel didn't have to come out when I invited him to, but he did. And then he goes to the trial board with a lawyer. Well, I went to Mr. Clabaugh."

Alma Colgan

Miss Colgan is a popular member in local musical circles and has been heard on many programs in Little Rock. Her last number, a Beethoven Concerto in C minor, with orchestral accompaniment, was an attractive closing number. It was played last Sunday in New York by Joseph Hoffman, with the Damrosch Symphony Orchestra.—Arkansas Democrat.

A large and cultured audience greeted the young artist and much applause was acceded her. In introducing Miss Colgan, Professor Baars spoke beautifully of her past work in Little Rock, and predicted for her a successful career as a concert artist. Perhaps the best, technically speaking, were the Bach and Liszt numbers, etc.—Little Rock Daily News.

###

Andersen—A composition for string orchestra, "Sea Pictures" by name, written by Miss Helen Dallam of the American Conservatory of Music, was given a reading by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at Ravinia Park on August 29. Miss Dallam is a pupil of Arthur Olaf Andersen, whom she assists in theory work at the above named school.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS

William Phillips, baritone, will resume his teaching at the Cosmopolitan School of Music and Dramatic Art in the Kimball building, early in September. Mr. Phillips has had the advantage of study under Oscar Seagle, the eminent American baritone, in Paris, London and New York; with Allen Gill, London, one of the foremost English authorities on oratorio, as well as such American instructors as William Beard, Chicago, and Frank Waller, assistant conductor of the Chicago Opera Association.

Mr. Phillips specializes on the development of vocal power and control through bodily posture and action, using natural calisthenics which promote absolute freedom of throat and tone, give placement and control, and stimulate physical and mental vitality.

He is prepared to offer thorough instruction in the diction of the "singing languages," in which he has made an intensive study of the vowel and consonant values. His wide experience as a concert and recital artist enables him to gain tangible results in coaching and to give to his pupils eminently practical instruction for public appearances.

———♯♯♯———

Craven—Carl E. Craven, the tenor, had a four days' engagement in Michigan City, Ind. On Saturday evening he sang for a benefit for Belgium babies, under the management of Mrs. Shaver, and on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday sang duets with Ruth Mills, soprano, and directed community sings under the management of Harriet Oming at the Starland Theater.

EASTLAKE-KEIRNAN

Eleanor Eastlake and Kathryn Keirnan will be heard this season in a most varied group of programs. This summer has been one of arduous work on their part, but the result has been a most gratifying one, as these young artists are able to offer concerts of duets that run the gamut of old period songs, the best of the modern and delightful excerpts from "Butterfly," "Aida" and "Hansel and Gretel." They have spent much thought on the costuming of their operatic scenes and period songs, working out every detail so as to please both eye and ear. The period songs—Irish, French chansons, Old English and American songs of the past—were collected only after much research; some of them dating back to the seventeenth century. They form a program of much individuality, manners, style, customs and expression entering into the well-thought-out detail. Undoubtedly the French group will be one of their best, both Miss Eastlake and Miss Keirnan speaking French fluently and being members of the exclusive Le Cercle Francais.

Working with them all summer has been Helen Campbell, chosen by the duettists from a large group of possible accompanists because of her very sympathetic playing and dependable pianistic support. Many hours of work have accomplished an ensemble of great smoothness—a quality absolutely necessary in concerted work.

Their voices blend beautifully, both having been carefully trained by Mme. Ragna Linne. Backing their musicianly qualities is mentality, broad education afforded by the best of American private schools and world-wide travel. When one has seen the sun rise in nearly every land, speaks the language of several of them, has made an exhaustive study of native music in its own country, one can but expect, with such a backing, only programs of the highest order.

———♯♯♯———

HAZEL EDEN

The career of Hazel Eden reads like one of the Grimm fairy tales. It is the story of a gifted artist who refused to be spoiled by the flattery of friends and to whom success only served as an inspiration for harder work and greater achievement.

Hazel Eden first came into public prominence with the Chicago Opera Company, where, although handicapped by the fact of being an American, she, by dint of sheer merit, forced recognition from Campanini and was freely accorded the credit of being one of his most valued artists. But being "one of," however, was not part of the "Eden creed," so she left the Chicago company to accept the post of leading soprano with the Boston English Opera Company, and it was here her real opportunity came. On the famous forty weeks' tour with that organization she time and again demonstated, by her brilliant voice, by her beauty and by her unusual dramatic sense, that here was an artist such as looms but once in a decade. Offer after offer came to her from the big companies, but Hazel Eden remembered that opera in English gave her her first chance, that it was in this field the world first acknowledged her, and when she was tendered the position of prima donna with the Century English Opera Company she accepted it.

In this organization she has found her big opportunity and Hazel Eden stands today acknowledged a truly fine lyric soprano.

SHERWOOD MUSIC SCHOOL

Miss Anna Tomlinson, who has had full charge of the summer normal classes for the Sherwood Music School in Chicago for the past two seasons, is conducting a normal class this week and next in Minneapolis for the benefit of the teachers doing branch work there.

Miss Tomlinson will supplement the Sherwood Music School work with her own course in hand development, tone and technic with teaching material. She has had very successful classes, both in July and August, at the main school, teaching all day and every day except one. The teachers who attended are unusually enthusiastic about Miss Tomlinson's normal work and eager to begin imparting their new ideas among their own classes.

MARRIAGE OF HELEN EDITH PETERSON

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Helen Edith Peterson, well known contralto, to Mr. R. Summerville Barth of Rochester, N. Y., on August 17. Music News extends heartiest congratulations.

MARGARETE MATZENAUER IN WAR SERVICE

Mme. Margarete Matzenauer, prima donna contralto for the Metropolitan Opera Company, has added to her already long list of war gifts, both of money and of service, in the following letter:

August 18, 1918.

Mr. Kendall K. Mussey,
War Camp Community Service.

Dear Sir:

I wish to place my services at the disposal of the United States Government through the offices of the War Camp Community Service and shall be happy to assist in any patriotic concerts whenever it may be possible.

Mr. Frank La Forge will be associated with me and I enclose our itinerary so that the proper bookings can be made.

Yours with patriotic greetings,
MARGARETE MATZENAUER.

Ever since the United States entered the war Mme. Matzenauer has been lavish in her work for the enlisted men. She has presented the entire proceeds of her Boston and New York recitals to war charities and has sung many times for the men in service.

The War Camp Community Service has already booked many appearances for Mme. Matzenauer in New England and other sections of the country, and her generous offer will result in at least twenty concerts, with a total of at least 50,000 persons.

That the War Camp Community Service is able to present such a great artistic opportunity to the men in the service, many of whom have never heard great artists from the East, is a striking example of the diversity and value of the work of the service.

Frank La Forge, besides his part in the musical program, has enlisted in the W. C. C. S. speakers' bureau and will tell the public and the uniformed men what the service is doing for their welfare.

Mme. Matzenauer's itinerary is as follows:

October 3—Denver.
October 13—Chicago.
October 21—Rochester.
October 22—Syracuse.
October 24—Philadelphia.
October 28—Utica.
October 29—Detroit.
October 31—Hamilton, Ohio.
November 4—Springfield, Ohio.
November 6—Rockford, Ill.
November 8—Washington, D. C.
November 10—Boston, Mass.
November 19—New York.
November 22—Cleveland, Ohio.
November 25—Chattanooga, Tenn.
November 27—Houston, Tex.
December 3 and 7—Los Angeles.
December 8 and 15—San Francisco.

WARREN PROCTOR ENGAGED BY CHICAGO OPERA COMPANY

Warren Proctor, the well-known tenor, has been re-engaged for special guest performances by Cleofonte Campanini, general director of the Chicago Opera Company, for next season, and will appear as Don Ottavio in "Don Giovanni," Cassio in "Otello," and also assume the leading tenor role in Massenet's "Griselidis" and in "The Barber of Seville."

This popular young tenor was unable to accept an engagement for the entire season, owing to his numerous concert and recital dates.

PUZZLING QUESTIONS REGARDING MUSIC ANSWERED

[Letters addressed to this department will be answered by Mary Bower, B. M., who has made an exhaustive study not only of piano playing but also of music, and both the psychology of music and the psychology of teaching.]

Question. I am a commercial artist; I do my work in a studio, where a part of the time each day I can hear an orchestra playing. I have thought that what they play greatly influences my work. Is this due to my imagination, or can you tell me of similar incidents?—B. W. S.

Answer. In the Chicago Public Library I found on record a scientific experiment tried by scientific men, as follows:

"With the thumb and finger grip, the greatest pressure I can exert during silence is eight pounds; when someone plays the giant's motive from the 'Rheingold' my grip shows eight and three-fourths pounds. The slumber motive from the 'Walkure' reduces the power to seven and one-half pounds."

Pitch, it has been proven, has an effect on the greatest strength of grip. The effect of martial music is well known. The "Marseillaise" was a force in the French Revolution. In the Ravenswood Citizen recently I found the following lines: "Singing makes the daily work easier of accomplishment. Sailors were among the first to recognize this, and they sang as they stored away their cargo, keeping time with the music as they pulled on rope or windlass, changing to presto when the work demanded it."

Q. Could the study of music have a prenatal influence on the disposition of a child?—L. M. B.

A. Among my own pupils was a lady who took piano lessons and practiced them until three days before her little girl was born. She called the little girl Mary, but she is of such an unusually happy disposition that the name has been changed to Sunshine. She is now four years old, and within the last few months has sung little songs in public a number of times. Thought was given as to the nature of the music given little Sunshine's mother to practice.

Q. I have taken lessons and I have practiced faithfully, and every time I play for anyone I realize the listeners think my practicing and taking of lessons have been in vain. Would it, do you think, be more sensible to give it up?—L. F.

A. There never was a cause worth struggling for that was not purified and developed by every rebuff it got.

Find out why you cannot play in an interesting manner; what it is that your music lacks, and take up the technical points later. I one time heard two pupils play at an examination given by several teachers; one was a boy about sixteen, who had studied at least two years with the same teacher. He did not like the composition he was playing and had been taught by a narrow-minded teacher, who was pleased to say she "had never studied outside of one certain institution." She had made a terrible exertion to teach the boy to play notes, notes, and then notes, correctly, and it was torture to listen to him. The other pupil was a girl about the same age, who played the same composition. It was terrible indeed, the number of technical mistakes she made and the interpretation she gave this composition, but she thoroughly enjoyed playing it and no one could help listening. Any thoughtful teacher could see great possibilities in this girl. She had been a pupil of the teacher present at this examination only a very few months and she had not been discouraged by her. Three months later I heard her play this composition again, and the improvement was very marked. But the boy was just where he was three months before. No one wants to hear him play.

RALPH MICHAELIS

Mr. Ralph Michaelis, artist and teacher of violin, will after September 1 be found in the Jennette Loudon studios at 614 Fine Arts building.

Mr. Michaelis is also opening a studio on the South Side at 2638 East 75th street, where he has a large following of devoted and interesting students.

CARRIE LOUISE DUNNING

Unobtrusively, each August, Carrie Louise Dunning slips into Chicago and, in some out-of-the-way, but always comfortable and quiet place, she meets those who have arranged to study her method at first hand, and for five weeks devotes herself unreservedly to their interest.

And, in spite of the fact that there is no blare of trumpets and no sensational announcements, Mrs. Dunning, year after year, draws large classes of the most serious-minded musicians in the country, and each member of each class goes away to extol the virtues of the system and to advise every acquaintance to take the course the "next summer."

CARRIE LOUISE DUNNING

Mrs. Dunning lives in New York and does some winter class teaching there, and in the early summer of each year goes to Portland, Ore., where she owns a beautiful place and where her prestige is something remarkable.

Every college and university on the Pacific Coast demands a teacher of the Dunning System, and it has become impossible to supply as many as are asked for.

This year Mrs. Dunning has had her hands and her heart full of personal matters, for she has twin sons who are twenty-eight years of age and at the moment they are both in the war in France, one being major of a motor truck division and the other captain of a tank brigade.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Dunning came to Chicago as usual and has just finished a very successful term of five weeks at the Christ Church in Woodlawn.

There were pupils from Chicago, Virginia, Ohio, Tennessee, Oklahoma and other points.

On last Thursday morning it was my good fortune to be present at a session where one of the young women of the class was acting as a practice teacher and, assuming that all the other young ladies were little girls, gave them the lesson of the Key Circle as it has been developed and perfected by Mrs. Dunning.

This brainy teacher never allows any idea of "pouring into pupils" to develop among her teachers, but always insists that true pedagogy consists of the art of "drawing out" of the pupils their innate possibilities.

Thus she allows each pupil to "discover" for himself all truth and, giving merely basic principles, she insists upon and encourages the pupils to build all around these principles.

The Key Circle as taught by the practice teacher on Thursday morning proved to be the most logical thing this writer has ever seen and, unquestionably, in a class of children it would result in the fact that after a very few lessons each would know every major and minor key and scale perfectly, and that any one of them would become as easy and familiar as any other, simply because each pupil would have the basic principle in his mind, whence all were evolved.

The Dunning apparatus is simplicity itself, but it is absolutely convincing in its usage and in the results obtained.

Mrs. Dunning believes that all pupils should handle the facts—feel them, as it were—and therefore she gives them articles to hold in their hands and to work with in the developing and proving of all principles. Then, she believes equally in visualizing everything and,

To Our Readers:—

Maud Powell will be in the very territory covered by this magazine. That she is an American whose position is unquestioned is known to the world and need not be retold here. What is more to the point is the fact that her terms are set with reason, insuring a profit to any local manager or music club. Her advertising equipment is unsurpassed.

therefore, every fact is presented and proven on the blackboard.

And then, as a natural sequence, everything is taken right to the piano, with the result that each fact is thus driven home through the senses of feeling, seeing and hearing, and thus become a part of the child himself.

Class work is the only proper teaching, according to Mrs. Dunning, and she believes that everyone, young and old, is stimulated and invigorated by contact with fellow students who are doing the identical work that he is.

Few women have ever made so exhaustive a study of piano playing as has this bright-eyed and rapid-spoken Mrs. Dunning, and she is a firm believer in the Leschetizky method of piano techinc.

Not, however, the usual stunts which are called "Leschetizky" by the rank and file of teachers, but the real development of a piano playing apparatus as shown and developed by Leschetizky himself in many years of study with that great master.

And every class lesson given by Mrs. Dunning or any of her assistants includes a liberal amount of time spent upon actual development of piano playing.

Thus, not alone do the Dunning pupils gain real musicianship, including the most intimate understanding of scales, modulations, melodies, transpositions, ear training and a hundred other details of musical development, but also, they emerge from the Dunning classes with a thoroughly developed piano hand.

It is fascinating to watch Mrs. Dunning supervise a teachers' class such as that of last Thursday, for she is so logical, so clear-cut and so altogether (but pleasantly) insistent upon thoroughness and scholarliness.

But it is much more fascinating to talk to her afterwards and to get her more intimate ideas of music in general and her thought and feeling about the work with children in particular.

An absolute believer in the value and the influence of music and an enthusiast in the thought that the greatest possibilities in the world lie in the child brain, she has evolved a system which she knows to be correct and logical, and she is enthusiastic to the full in promulgating her theories.

One of the notable things about her work is the fact that she has been able to draw about her such a wonderfully fine class of associate teachers, and the fidelity of this class is something for further remark.

A notable example of this is Mrs. Harriet Bacon MacDonald, the Chicago representative of the system, who is a fine musician and a great accompanist per se, but who also is a Dunning enthusiast and whose demonstrations of that method have several times been spoken of in Music News as events of transcendent interest.

WHITNEY TEW

On page 8 of the last issue of Music News there appeared a very remarkable article on "Various Vocal Vagaries," which was not properly accredited to its author.

The picture of Herbert Whitney Tew accompanying the article was, perhaps, sufficient index to most readers to show that he was the author of it, but his name should also have been added specifically at the end.

Music at RAVINIA PARK

Friday Afternoon

Friday afternoon closed one of the most brilliant seasons of Student-Artist concerts ever given at Ravinia.

Through the conscientious efforts of the Committee who selected the various soloists, the results have been entirely satisfying from beginning to end. All of the young artists have been admirably fitted and well prepared for the appearance.

Just here it is no more than fitting to tender a word of gratitude to Mrs. J. H. Bullen of Glencoe (a niece of Dr. George T. Root), whose untiring enthusiasm and work have made these concerts possible. For besides notifying and holding communication with dozens of applicants, she has heard each of them on trial, and together with the other members of her committee has in every case attempted to make the most just decision possible. She says this has often been very difficult as so many of the applicants proved equally worthy of choice. Besides this she has made all the arrangements with each soloist in connection with the actual date of appearance and the information to appear each week in the printed circulars with the regular programs. It is a summer's work of which Mrs. Bullen may well be proud, and this is the second season in which she has served in this capacity.

The soloists on Friday afternoon were Mrs. Winifred Cass Vail, soprano, and Miss Blanche Bonn, pianiste. Mrs. Vail was a pupil of Marion Mason Peter until 1916, since which time she has been studying at the Chicago Musical College. She sang a group of three songs, "Il est doux, il est bon" (Massenet), and two songs of Cadman, "Thou Radiant Ocean" and "The Fount of Bimini." Mrs. Vail's voice appeared to best advantage in the Cadman songs, the first seeming a trifle too ambitious for her. On the whole, however, her voice was pleasing and possessed dramatic quality. She was accompanied admirably by Miss Priscilla Carver.

Miss Bonn, who presents an extraordinarily youthful appearance on the stage in view of her wide experience, is an American Conservatory product. She holds an organ position in the city, is an admirable accompanist, and has a large teaching class on the South side. Her performance of the Grieg A minor Concerto was noteworthy. In it she disclosed a dash and vigor which was remarkable and her whole interpretation was thoroughly fearless, as if she knew what she was about from beginning to end.

The orchestra concluded the program with the overture to "The Secret of Susanne," two Borowski trifles for string orchestra and "Slavonic Dance" (Dvorak).

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

The Elderly Person

Somebody has written a group of verses about "passing on" to others any particular pleasure or benefits that you have enjoyed; that, instead of saying "thank you" too often to the donor of the pleasure, you add to the goodness of the deed itself and make it press down and run over, if you repeat it, in some measure, for the pleasure of others. One of the best things to so pass on are the good stories, or what you think are good stories. Stories are so much in their telling that no one can be sure his yarn is "good" until he hears the laugh come. And there is always a danger that from out the hilarity, if it ensues, will sound the dry comment, "That always was a good story." But, braving such dangers, the Elderly Person opens his pack herewith. They rather run to the musical:

At a church, on Lincoln's birthday, the service list revealed that either the parson or the printer was determined to be up to date. This church has several choirs, and on those occasions when all of these sing they are spoken of and set down as "The United Choirs." But this is what stared up from the page:

"Anthem, 'From Egypt's Bondage Came the United States.'"

As Elihu Root has just been telling the country that the problem of our bondsmen from Africa was far from solved, there might be something prophetic in the statement.

In a recent choir experience a young chap was admitted to a chorus. His voice was not his largest asset. He was always so slicked up that one wanted to quote the song about being all dressed up and no place to go. One Sunday morning he presented himself, immaculate, but the director met him, whispered to him, and he did not participate in the singing. Asked why he was not in place, he replied:

"The director said that that was a difficult anthem and I wouldn't be needed!"

At a concert a youth who was new on the job (it goes without saying) undertook to raise the lid of the grand piano. He tried it in front and then at the rear, and then one of the orchestra men told him to try the side. When he got the lid up he tried to persuade it to stand alone—which it wouldn't. With another suggestion he found the supporting rod, hesitatingly placed it and then cautiously let loose of the lid to test the efficiency. It wobbled some, and so he supported the lid until he got to the rear of the piano, where he searched hard for another supporter until relieved by the friendly orchestra player. He came then to the front, carefully raised the music rack upright, turned the chair sideways so that the pianist could face the audience instead of the piano, and retired—successfully!

One man behind the counter of a music store has a sense of humor to lubricate the daily grind. Of course he is taken into the confidence of some of those who do not know this. Therefore a woman was rather startled one day at a reply she received. She confided that she had a wedding musical service to arrange. That, of course, she was supplied by "Lohengrin" with the prelude, and Mendelssohn had a fast hold upon the retiring couple, but an anthem was also required and she could think of nothing appropriate. But Murphy knew, all right, and suggested "Taste and See."

He is the same chap who was ready for the funeral anthem. He said if the person to be buried was of average standing the exactly right thing was "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning."

Did you ever get mixed up on twins who looked alike as two peas? The Elderly Person went down the aisle and clapped the shoulder of a baldheaded man in an aisle seat, saying familiarly, "Hello! how are things?" There was only a half-hearted response. The next concert, as he passed the same head in the same seat, the Elderly Person clapped his cap on the bald pate, saying, argumentatively: "Why don't you speak politely to me?" "Because I don't know you," was the tart reply. "You think I am my brother." Apologies. But who ever heard before of twins both being bald-headed in the same way and of the same town?

Which recalls the little girls who looked so much alike that here's what happened:

"Mother told Susie to wash the dishes. Susie's my twin sister. She don't like to wash dishes, and she broke a plate. Mother heard the noise and Susie ran. But I was there. Then she punished me till she found out I was Nellie. She felt so badly about the mistake that she went to her purse to get a nickel to give to me. But Susie was back by that time and mother gave the nickel to her!"

Down at one end of the table at a monthly dinner of the Organists' Guild there were some mighty shouts of laughter, and the fun came about in this way:

The stories one young fellow had been telling were so pat that when he began another one with special eagerness and excitement the Elderly Person suspended other operations and became intensely interested. Said the story teller:

"I had a remarkable experience the other day. With a friend, a good baritone, we boarded a train to a nearby town where we were booked for a recital together. Finding the regular coaches crowded, we went into the smoking car, and Frank lighted that bulldog pipe of his and curled up for a period of oblivion while the train performed its mission. But in a few minutes a woman entered the car, deposited her dog and bundles in two seats and proceeded to make herself at home."

"But it was the smoker," interrupted the Elderly Person.

"Didn't she know any better than that?" said the canonic musical director in his quick, impulsive way.

"We wondered at her action," went on the narrator, smilingly, "but men don't dip into such things in real life, you know. They only make such palpably irrelevant remarks, indignantly, when a fellow is spinning a yarn and thus interrupt his steady flow of well-chosen language. She probably found the other cars full-up as we did. Anyhow, she adjusted herself all comfy. She was quite personable, by the way. All at once she began to sniff and presently turned to Frank, my friend, and said, shortly: 'Will you be good enough not to smoke in this car?' 'But it is the smoking car,' he answered, hotly. 'The car isn't smoking, but you are,' snapped back the reply. 'If you don't like smoke, go into the other coach,' was the answering fire. 'I don't want to go into the other coach. I want to ride in this one, and intend to. If you don't quit smoking I will complain to the conductor.' The brakeman happening along, she complained to him, but he answered that the gentleman was privileged to smoke in that car. Encouraged by his attitude, two traveling men also lighted up cigars, and she went through the same arguments with them. Finally the conductor was appealed to, but he replied that the coach was furnished for those who wished to smoke, and if she did not like the surroundings she must go to another car. As soon as he gave forth this dictum she took the reins of law into her own hands—went to Frank, jerked the pipe from his mouth and threw it out of the window."

"The nerve!" muttered the Elderly Person.

"Women are the only creatures who attempt such things," said the unmarried canon. "She must have been a queer sort. What did he do?"

"He was equal to it, for he pounced on her dog quick as a flash and heaved it, yelping, out-o-window! Then ensued a thunderous war of words such as I never heard before or expect to hear again. They even got the brakeman and conductor tangled up in it, and comparative quiet came only by an agreement to stop at the next station and hire a man to go back and get the dog and pipe—complete or in fragments—damages to be paid for the article most injured. They got off at the station, continuing the quarrel acrimoniously, and we were glad to be rid of the racket. Just as they reached the telegraph office, where they proposed to wire for a search at the other end, one of the traveling men said: 'Well, look what's coming down the track! What do you know about that?'" (Pause.)

"What was it?" said the Elderly Person, all agog with interest.

"Had the dog hung on to one of the cars?" ventured the canon.

"No. But the dog was walking down the track, composedly and enjoyably smoking the pipe," said that sinner of an organist.

Kind of mean to pass that on, not?

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

THE CENTURY ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY AND AMERICA

We Americans are getting more natural every day; we are laying aside false pride and price prejudice; we are getting down to earth and demanding real values and real facts.

We are good spenders, but we are demanding more than bluff for our money. Fine theories and unpronounceable names no longer constitute excellence in operatic performances.

The Century English Opera Company has done more to dispel the illusion that good opera cannot be given without foreign names, high prices and unintelligible language than any one factor in our musical history.

The Century English Opera Company has proven that American artists are the equal of any in the world; it has further proven that many of the greatest artists singing under foreign names are in reality American born, bred and educated; it has brought together a force of the greatest artists singing in the English language, it has surrounded these artists with a chorus of forty young fresh voices, it carries its own orchestra of selected musicians.

Its productions are the equal of any given by the large opera companies and, what is of the utmost importance, its performances are given in good understandable English, so that every one not only enjoys the beautiful music and exceptional voices, but is also able to follow the story and enjoy the performance as a whole.

Its appeal to the public has been on the basis of honesty and fair dealing, no fake names and imaginary fame are foisted on the public.

Its artists have all won their laurels by merit alone in competition with the best Europe affords. Its chorus does not consist of worn-out old men and women, but of young artists anxious and able to progress.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.

The Ann Arbor Concert Series has just announced an unusually attractive list of artists for the coming year.

Enrico Caruso, the greatest tenor of all time, will open the course Saturday evening, October 19, in a song recital. Hill Auditorium has been the scene of many brilliant musical entertainments, for practically all of the world's great artists have been heard there. Caruso's coming, however, is expected to eclipse all previous attractions, and at this early date orders for tickets are pouring into the office of the University School of Music from all parts of the country. The fact that the concert occurs on the evening of the day of the annual M. A. C.-Michigan football game is of special interest to friends and alumni of the two great state institutions, who are delighted at the opportunity of witnessing both events.

On Monday evening, November 18, Anna Case, the renowned American operatic and concert artist, will appear in recital. She has distinguished herself as a shining light among the Metropolitan Opera's many stars, and her splendid artistry has won for her a host of enthusiastic admirers. The fact that her abilities have been so substantially recognized, in competition, as it were, with the greatest of foreign talent, reflects great credit upon American artistry and is a refutation of the charge that America demands and will bow only to foreign-made music.

Monday evening, December 16, Leopold Godowsky, the famous Russian pianist, will make his Ann Arbor debut. He is one of the few great piano virtuosi who have not been heard in this series. Born in Russia, in his early career he appeared in concert and held many important musical positions in continental cities. In 1885 he was first heard in America, where he was heralded as one of the greatest. Since then he has toured the country several times and has made it his home. He is referred to as "the most American of foreign artists." His playing is brilliant, virile and appealing and possesses that artistry which can be apparent only in maturity. Aside from his brilliancy as a performer, he has made a substantial reputation as a composer and writer on musical subjects.

Tuesday evening, January 21, Joseph Bonnet, the distinguished French organist, will make his second appearance in Ann Arbor. His triumph as a festival artist last May was so pronounced that his immediate re-engagement for a second appearance before his return to France was necessary to satisfy the insistent demands of Ann Arbor concert patrons. His absolute command of the varied artistic resources of the "king of instruments" portrays musicianship of the highest order and affords a rare treat not only for those who are lovers of organ music especially but for the general public as well, for under his magic touch the great instrument seems almost human in its responses.

On Tuesday, February 18, Toscha Seidel, the latest of Auer's violin sensations, will appear in the final pre-festival concert. Like Heifetz, his artistry is flawless, but, unlike his renowned colleague, he shows the results of great and conscientious effort in his attainments. The Boston Transcript has aptly illustrated the different processes of these two remarkable young men by the phrase that "Heifetz plays like an angel," whereas "Seidel plays like a devil." In other words, the great perfection which is attained by the one with almost uncanny ease and apparently without effort is secured by the other as the result of conscientious and dogged persistence, a quality which wins and strengthens the bond of sympathy between performer and listener.

A preliminary announcement, giving details regarding the schedule of prices for the series and the conditions under which tickets may be secured, is now in press and will be distributed in a very few days.

At this early date it is impossible to make specific announcement regarding the Annual Festival other than it will be given about the middle of May and will follow the same general lines as usual. In addition to orchestra, choruses and organ, a list of superior artists, both instrumental and vocal, comparable with those announced for the pre-festival series will be engaged.

HAROLD B. MARYOTT

Harold B. Maryott, director of the Department of Public School Music in the Chicago Musical College, is deeply interested in the study of descriptive astronomy. He has spent a part of his vacation this summer in preparing a lecture on the subject and in making a collection of stereopticon slides, with the idea of contributing something of interest to the men in the various camps near Chicago. This illustrated lecture was given at the Y. M. C. A. headquarters at Great Lakes Naval Training Station on August 27 and will be repeated at Paul Jones Hall on Monday evening, September 9. On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings of that week Mr. Maryott will lecture at Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Mich. It was expected that the lecture would be given at Camp Grant, but the recent rapid movement of troops there has interrupted the educational work of the Y. M. C. A.

During August Mr. and Mrs. Maryott spent two weeks at Lake Geneva and visited the Yerkes Observatory, where they secured some stereopticon slides made from photographs taken through the great telescope, the largest of its kind in the world. During their stay at Lake Geneva Mr. and Mrs. Maryott were entertained one delightful evening at the summer home of Albert Cotsworth, alias the Elderly Person.

The American Society of Singers

Those who believe that war has been detimental to musical life in America will ave to throw away that impression when hey read the announcements of the various nusical organizations for the next season. Music knows no obstacles. Whether in joyul times or hours of distress, it has been he most potent tonic for furthering our ivilization.

The metropolis opened its musical season s early as Labor Day, September 2, with he San Carlo Opera Company, to be folowed shortly by the American Society of Singers, whose aim is to present opera omique for several weeks. It is a most audable enterprise, especially now; but, as said, music patrons—music lovers—do not mind the obstacles. On the contrary, they eem to derive more pleasure when times re not just as one would desire. The perormances will be given at the Park Theaer, on Columbus Circle; and it may be dded that this house is not located in the eart of Broadway, where all entertainments are condensed. It may be that this ocation is a bit away from the "atmosphere," but he who seeks pleasure will go arther than that.

Last year's performances at the Lyceum Theater, on Forty-fifth street, were successful from an artistic point of view. This ear the artistic contingent has been trengthened, while the adminstration has liminated the pro-Germans.

This organization should be permanent, nd to this end the public must give its suport. Opera comique is one of the most ducational and most entertaining of all ie amusements. It surpasses grand opera n the educational line, for the stories of ie opera comique depict the costumes, habs, faults and fancies of the past, while ney are also quite applicable to our present ociety. The music of the opera comique t times surpasses in beauty that of grand pera.

We have nothing but words of praise for Messrs. Bispham, Witherspoon and William Vade Hinshaw for the furthering of an ntertainment which has been sadly neglectd in the past. The writer will endeavor to eview all the performances in due time.

Supplementary to the above subject, it ill be necessary to add other important points concerning the coming season and its artists. The officers of the organization are: William Wade Hinshaw, David Bispham, Charles Triller, George Hamlin and Herbert Witherspoon. The artists who will take part in the performances as interpreters are supposed to appear gratuitously, but they will benefit by certain sums should the enterprise, which is co-operative, be a success. Those who have offered to appear are: Maggie Teyte, Edith Mason, Marguerite Sylva, Bianca Saroya, Lucy Gates, Yvonne de Treville, Kathleen Howard, Dora de Phillippe, Riccardo Martin, George Hamlin, Herbert Witherspoon and Henri Scott. More artists will join, and their names will be printed before the season opens on September 23 at the Park Theater.

If the plans of the society are carried out, the following works will be presented: "Bianca," the prize opera by Henry Hadley; "Mignon" (Ambrose Thomas), "Fra Diavolo" (Auber), "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame" (Massenet), "Carmen," "La Navarraise" (Massenet), "Les Dragons des Villar" (Planquette), "La Fille du Regiment" (Donizetti), "Tales of Hoffman" (Offenbach), "The Chimes of Normandy" (Planquette) and "The Impresario" (Mozart).

John McCormack, Anna Fitziu and Amato Sing for the Police Carnival

More than 200,000 New Yorkers participated in the second day of the Police Carnival on Saturday, August 31—perhaps because of the appearance on the musical program of John McCormack, Anna Fitziu and Pasquale Amato. Besides these artists, Enrico Caruso also sang, and Nahan Franko, now a police captain, conducted the orchestra. Aeroplane exercises, games and other attractions were programmed. In the audience some soldiers, returned from France, watched with interest the great offerings.

The Pittsfield Festival

Under the leadership of Mrs. F. S. Coolidge of Pittsfield, Mass., a chamber festival will take place on September 16, 17 and 18. The Berkshire Quartet, of which Hugo Kortschak is first violinist, will offer the musical program. The festival will take place at the Berkshire Music Temple of that city.

Children's Twilight Concerts by Young Men's Christian Association

The National War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association is contemplating a series of five weekly Children's Twilight Concerts, to include community singing for the young folks and also solo features by prominent vocal and instrumental artists. The first public hearing of the series was on August 22 at the gymnasium of the Columbia University. Five weeks in succession will be consumed by these concerts, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Song Leaders' Training School. It is unnecessary to add that this enterprise is philanthropic and requires no admission fee to lovers of music. The community singing will be led by Robert Laurence. Among the new lights for the furthering of music is Ellmer Zoller, pianist-accompanist. The Training School for Community Singing is aiming to promote leaders who will entertain our boys overseas, a work which is most laudable.

MILON R. HARRIS

Milon R. Harris, who has been conducting Music Institutes through the summer, is this week in Columbia City, Ind., for his final Institute of the season. He writes of the success of his work as follows:

"While at Greensburg and Shelbyville, Ind., I conducted a 'Community Sing' in the park, having 100 soldiers with me as leaders, and an audience chorus of 2,500 people, also my choir will sing next Sunday in first service since June, at Calvary Presbyterian church.

"My Institutes are full of interest, enthusiasm and patriotism. At Rockford, Ill., particularly was the interest in music most earnest. Five hundred teachers and visitors sang the 'Star Spangled Banner' most thrillingly and beautifully. I shall open my fall term at the studio, 929 Kimball Hall, Monday, September 9th. Prospects are good for the first term. Yours,

"M. R. HARRIS."

Williams—Dr. Carver Williams, who has returned to the city after a successful Chautauqua tour, will resume his teaching at the Cosmopolitan School of Music, of which he is president, and also his position at the Kenwood Evangelical Church, where he is bass soloist.

EMPRESS THEATER

A very handsome, as well as spacious theater is the Empress at Sixty-second and Halsted Streets, and it has a big clientele which it is endeavoring to supply with an attractive grade of vaudeville.

The bill witnessed the other evening was notable only in two respects, the first being an exhibition of the myriaphone, a very unusual and distinctly pleasing musical instrument, and the second, and by far the best act of the bill, was Jane English in "Songs of Yesterday."

This writer dubbed Mrs. English "The Chicago Jenny Lind" a year or so ago, for the very definite reason that her voice is such that she sings with absolute ease and great effect the entire repertoire of the famous Jenny.

But, at her appearance at the Empress, she disclosed another resemblance, and that was in the matter of costume.

In hoops and a befrilled gown, with her beautiful black hair combed closely to her head and in the decolette of the old mode, she was exactly the counterpart of Jenny Lind as we have seen the famed songstress pictured in old magazines and old collections of theatrical and operatic pictures.

Seated on a couch, singing "In the Gloaming," with an imitation moonlight drifting over her, Mrs. English presented a picture which will linger in memory and her vocalization of the fine old song was no less attractive.

Of course, Mrs. English gave also "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark," in which she discloses exquisite coloratura qualities, and she sang further several other old songs, ranging through many moods and considerable color, but, after all, the picture that remains and the moment which will make this singer famous in vaudeville circles is that when, posing on the divan, she sings "In the Gloaming."

Ethel Rice is responsible for this booking at the Empress, and with it she has clearly proven that the public likes good music, and the better it is presented the better they like it.

Congratulations go to Mrs. English and Mrs. Rice, no less than to the Empress itself, and the engagement at this house will be but the forerunner of many others for "Songs of Yesterday" as given by Jane English.

GREAT NORTHERN HIPPODROME

At the Great Northern Hippodrome last week Saida Ballantine presented a quartet of well-known concert singers, who modestly masqueraded under the nondescript title of the Artists' Quartet. From their first entrance the followers of the second-rate variety were impressed with the absolute poise and adaptability which these artists sported. The names all count for something in Chicago's music circles. The soprano, Ethel Tamminga, has gained great prominence among the younger set for her finished performances of "The Secret of Suzanne" at the Blackstone Theater. The contralto, Ruth Simmons, is not only a singer, but an accompanist of the first water, and has appeared as soloist with the Apollo Club. The tenor, Stuart Dykema, appeared last season with the Boston English Opera Company at the Strand, and the baritone, John Rankl, has lent his voice as soloist with all the leading local singing societies and is this week singing at the American Composers' Convention at Lockport.

Their repertoire was chosen to appeal to the music lovers and to those who do not appreciate the finer things in life, opening with the quartet from "Rigoletto," followed by the old faithful sextet from "Lucia," then the southern folk song, "Kentucky Babe" (Geibel), closing with songs the boys throughout the training camps sing after their day's duties are done, "Pack Up Your Troubles" and a patriotic version of "Long, Long Trail."

The operatic excerpts were smoothly rendered, save in Mr. Dykema's case. He was badly off key and constantly made it very difficult for his associates to give a good account of themselves. In the southern melody he regained his customary voice, and for the balance of the turn was excellent. The welcome accorded these young artists was remarkable, and no vaudeville manager would err in booking this unusual act.

The players, who change their bill weekly, indulged in the best farce of the engagement—"Her Own Money"—and again did the company, Misses Phillips, Smith, Boland and Walters, assisted by Messrs. Ellis-ton, Taylor and Kauser, demonstrate that they are popular with the Hippodrome clientele. The balance of the bill was decidedly cheap and inferior. ALLEN YORK.

PRINCESS THEATER

Margaret Illington, she of the ailing larnyx, the hay fever and the catarrhal school of actresses, has this season come forth in a new play to this western metropolis that affords her ample opportunity to emote through three distinct characters, aside from the modest maid she originally portrays. Every actress more or less dreams of "the" part, and the role of Gina would seem an ideal one for any actress that can encompass the demands of the manuscript. A great many of them, however, are misguided in their ambition. Miss Illington is not. She is of the material from which great dramatic moments are made.

The creator of the part was Marjorie Rambeau (she originated more Broadway heroines than any other New York actress in the short time she has shone on the Great White Way), who came unknown and unheralded from out of the west with her actor-husband, Willard Mack, and captured the wily Manhattanites. Then Jane Grey tried her hand at the crystal-gazing heroine, and now we have Miss Illington as the girl who hesitates between duty, love and ambition before she decides as to which road to travel.

Shakespeare said, "The play's the thing," but we wonder if this applies to this particular instance. Not having seen her predecessors, it would be difficult to say how she measures up to their idea of the tearful, emotional Gina, but it is a safe wager that she suffers none in comparison. Therefore, judging the play's value and the share that Miss Illington takes in making it "relishable," it is quite safe to say that the play to get across needs Miss Illington's personality and actress ability just as much as Miss Illington needs "The Eyes of Youth" to register another success in her book of "memories," for hardly in the course of an evening's entertainment is an actress called upon to delineate three characters of so great a variety, the attainment of which will argue well as to her versatility.

First, we discover her living with her father, brother and younger sister in a small town near New York City, loved by three men, all of whom wish to marry her. These we will label, "Rich Man," "Poor Man" and "Wise Man."

To further add to the complications, she has a very remarkable voice that prompts the Impresario Salvo to offer her an engagement at his opera house. The call of "Ambition" is strong, yet Gina hesitates, for her father has told her she must choose marriage (a moneyed one) to help him out of his difficulty.

"Poor Man's" hold is strong, yet "Rich Man" is not far behind in the running, closely followed by "Wise Man." As the dubious Gina sits alone, pondering, from out the night comes a Yogi, worn and hungry. After he is refreshed, seeing that she is in trouble, he offers to help her, but she declines, saying the only help lies in being able to penetrate the invisible curtain of the future, whereupon, from the bag he carries, the Hindu takes a crystal ball, in whose magic rainbow circumference lies the power to project the gazer's life in three directions five years hence. Or in other words, he points out that through the medium of the crystal ball, and the belief and workings of the mind, the panorama of the gazer's life is paraded as in a vision. Struck by the Yogi's story, she concentrates till we see her as a schoolmistress, a wretched object of humanity plodding along, subject to the jeers and jests of her pupils, her sister and the dupe of the "Wise Man," who is playing with her love, only to be secretly betrothed to her sister. This is the pathway of "Duty." Next we have her gazing toward "Ambition." The scene changes from the morbid schoolroom to the dressing room of a successful opera star—the lady with many lovers, who bow to her many temperaments and shower her with gowns and costly baubles. Gina enters a little late, a little the worse for wear, and in a capricious moment refuses to sing. Entreaties are in vain. "Cancel the show," she insolently advises the incensed manager. Instead he cancels her contract, and when Salvo upbraids her in the presence of her brother we have the crucial moment of the play, great in its dramatic onrush, superbly written, sanely acted and excellently culminated, that sends its message deep into the hearts of the hearers. Next Gina is seen as the wife of "Rich Man," who has trapped her in a room with an unknown man (a charge she is innocent of) to obtain a divorce and drags the poor woman through relentless prosecution of a fiendish divorce trial, till in the next scene we see her a woman broken in spirit and health and the victim of the habit (not a pleasant scene, yet realistic in content). And now that Gina has seen the three roads, she reverts to "Poor Man" and the curtain descends on the inevitable "clinch."

Sterling performers are engaged for the Chicago company. Among the most talented is Robert Williams as the brother. This young man's idea of emotional values is keen and to the point. He is a valuable member of the trio in the "big scene."

makes the impresario a living, lifelike characterization. The three suitors were Leonard Ide, Roy Gordon and Judson Langill, while Macey Harlam is much at home in the role that Pedro de Corba originated, "The Yogi." The types in the courtroom scene and the children in the schoolroom were well chosen. In short, it looks as though "The Eyes of Youth" would easily establish a record run at the Princess.

ORCHESTRA HALL

For the final week of the Paramount-Artcraft season at Orchestra Hall an unusually excellent cinema program holds forth. "The Hun Within," featuring Dorothy Gish and George Fawcett and employing the major part of the cast used in "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love," is a story based on the present European hostilities. Pictured under the eagle eye of D. W. Griffith, and incidentally one of the best things he has done, no doubt this feature will enjoy popularity as long as the great war lasts, in spite of the unpretentious way in which it is projected, for not a battle scene is employed to bring home the sermon of "The Hun Within."

The story concerns a man born in Germany, who comes to America when a young man, makes his fortune and becomes an American citizen.

His son (Charles Gerard) falls in love with the girl from across the street (Dorothy Gish), who is also beloved by another simon-pure American boy (Douglas McLean). Time passes and the young men think seriously of a future life. Karl goes back to the fatherland to complete his studies in chemistry. He spends three years there, in the meantime absorbing the spirit of German patriotism, while Frank joins the Secret Service. The great war breaks out on the eve of Karl's return home, and while seated around the table merrymaking, the news filters through the open windows, carried there by the gusto of the newsboys' voices.

Opinions differ, and while Karl is betrothed to Beth, he allies himself with the Hun spy system, meeting secretly and planning dastardly deeds. When it is revealed that the son is not loyal to the land of his birth it nearly breaks the old father's heart, and the girl denounces him as a traitor.

In the meantime Uncle Sam has his men on the track of the traitors, and Frank is sent to hunt down the band of criminals. He tracks them to their lair, where they are planning to place a time-fuse bomb on one of our transports. This they accomplish by the aid of a Hun spy in the guise of a jackie.

Powerful suspense-interest is sustained in this scene. You see our soldiers in their bunks, happy over the opportunity to help in the big cause, and it seems almost a certainty that they will be blown to pieces as the clocks creeps around to 12 and no help at hand. The plot is frustrated with a second to spare; in fact, so close is the margin that it does go off just the moment it is cast overboard.

The Secret Service agent rounds up the criminals and then presents himself to the girl, and they decide to do the "I do—I do."

George Fawcett as the father was splendid, especially in the scene with his son, when he discovers his disloyalty. The father knocks the son down, and the boy shoots the father, wounding him.

Dorothy Gish was girlish and properly dramatic and played her role probably as well as any ingenue known to screen fame. Douglas McLean was good as the lover, and Charles Gerard was excellent as the son.

Fatty Arbuckle in "The Cook" was just the medium to send the audience home in a cheerful frame of mind.

Altogether the movie season at Orchestra Hall has been a profitable one and one that was built up to a standard and not down to a price.

will solidify and cement the sentiment of the country! Any mass meeting, convention, Patriotic Church Service, Liberty Loan or Red Cross meeting, etc., can sing the refrain of "Land of Mine" after hearing it once. Read the highest Chicago authorities on this popular song.

Chicago Mendelssohn Club Concert, Orchestra Hall

Frederick Donaghey in the Chicago Tribune: Another novelty was "Land of Mine" . . . went over with a smash. The men in the cantonments and the navy schools will soon be singing it.

Karleton Hackett in the Chicago Evening Post: James G. MacDermid set a patriotic poem . . . with a swing to the rhythm and a telling refrain that caught the feeling of the people . . . had to be repeated.

Felix Borowski in the Chicago Herald: . . . The public soul was stirred less . . . than by the rousing lyrics about war and the brave boys. . . . Thus the "hits" of the evening were made by . . . and Mr. MacDermid's "Land of Mine."

My Dear Mr. MacDermid:

No sooner had I clapped eyes on your song, "Land of Mine," than I realized its far-reaching bigness. It's a bully song, words and music, having all the essentials to make of it a great "go." You, yourself, must have realized this when you heard the wonderful acclaim given it by our Mendelssohn audience.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) HARRISON M. WILD,
Conductor, Chicago Mendelssohn and Apollo Clubs.

Herman Devries in the Chicago American: The chorus found their greatest success with . . . and James G. MacDermid's "Land of Mine," both of which had to be repeated.

Edward C. Moore in the Chicago Journal: . . . Those best received by the audience were . . . and James G. MacDermid's "Land of Mine," . . . a good melody and a stirring rhythm. It received an encore and it deserved it.

Henriette Weber in the Chicago Examiner: The most stirring of the patriotic numbers were . . . and "Land of Mine" in the setting of James MacDermid to a poem by Wilbur Nesbit.

LAND OF MINE (words by Wilbur D. Nesbit and music by James G. MacDermid) is published as a solo, 30c; octavo for mixed Men's and Women's voices, 10c; school edition, two or three parts, 10c; also for band and orchestra.

JAMES G. MACDERMID

Very seldom does it fall to the lot of any composer to reap such spontaneous and sincere success for any song as has been the case with James G. MacDermid and his electric "Land of Mine," which has been adopted by choral societies and solo singers from one end of the land to the other.

It was sung twice a day for a period of two weeks at the great Auditorium Theater, in Chicago, by Charles Gallagher with an orchestra of fifty players.

Twice at Billy Sunday's tabernacle, the famous choir of 2,500 sang it to audiences of 10,000 each.

Twice the combined Glee Clubs of the Swift and Armour companies sang it to audiences of 8,000, when addresses were delivered by Secretary Daniels and Henry P. Davidson.

It was sung by 800 school children with an orchestra of twenty-two players, also by a high school chorus of 150 with an orchestra of fifty.

We have received a church calendar in which it was programmed by one of the highest priced church quartets, consisting of Olive Kline, Adah Hussey, Paul Althouse and Arthur Middleton.

Twice the Mendelssohn Club (eighty men) sang it at its concerts in Orchestra Hall. Upon the latter occasion the audience of 3,000 arose to its feet upon the singing of the refrain.

The following unsolicited letter from John Philip Sousa shows in what estimation it is held by the great bandmaster:

My Dear Mr. MacDermid:

In my next rehearsal I am going to put "Land of Mine" out and hope that you may have the pleasure of hearing the band play it often during the coming summer. Wishing you every success with it, believe me,

Very sincerely,

(Signed) JOHN PHILIP SOUSA,
Lieutenant, U. S. N. R. F.

To read the poem, "Land of Mine," is itself an intellectual and a patriotic joy, for it is in the very best vein of the scholarly and emotional poet, Wilbur D. Nesbit; and it is in the perfect wedding of this text to music that Mr. MacDermid has proven his sense of proportion and his finesse of musical feeling.

TRIBUTE TO FLORENCE MACBETH

When the final meeting of the British Recruiting Mission took place at the Stadium on August 1 they paid Miss Macbeth the compliment of asking her to represent Britannia, in recognition of the fact that she was one of the American artists who had done more for the recruiting for the British-Canadian Mission than any other American artist.

On one occasion recently sixty-three young Britishers came forth after her stirring appeal through her rendition of "Your King and Country Need You."

Miss Macbeth has remained in New York the entire summer awaiting the many calls and demands upon her for this great cause, never faltering, always willing to do her bit. Call after call comes, and always the same answer, "My duty to my country and the boys over there." After giving several concerts in the Middle West Miss Macbeth will join the Chicago Opera Company on its preseason tour and the Chicago season, after which she will make an extended concert tour to the Pacific Coast, where she will be heard in all the large cities in that territory.

HELENA BINGHAM

Three appreciative excerpts from letters concerning the Helena Bingham songs are as follows:

Chicago.

They are so very musical and I shall be only too happy to use them on my programs when possible. The little lullaby, "Rock Him to Sleep," is a gem.
(Signed) KATHRYN E. BROWNE.

The Brokaw Studios, Wichita, Kan.

We are both interested in song productions of contemporary Americans, and I shall be glad to do anything to assist you. We found the compositions finely constructed.
(Signed) RALPH BROKAW.

Omaha.

I am especially fond of sacred music and have so much admired your work in the Beatitudes.
(Signed) SARA HOUGHTON SALISBURY.

———♯♯♯———

Butler—Mme. Hanna Butler, soprano, who has spent the summer in teaching and singing in Michigan, has been re-engaged for three Sunday recitals at the Green Briar Hotel at White Sulphur Springs.

American Music

"Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee."

Yea, verily—

It is not all Bad that will grow out of the World War.

And while we read of good changes various, growing out of it, and talk largely about Growth and Development, let us not forget that Music also will have its gain.

This gain is (1) Emancipation from the thraldom of the Foreign Yoke, and (2) Opportunity for the proper and sympathetic presentation of American Thought, as expressed in music.

The Festival of American Artists and Composers which has just closed its third Annual Session at Lockport, N. Y., is the Pioneer in the movement for Making American Music First in America and the greatest force yet extant in the country.

Questions of policy of all kinds are still in the formative stage, and Co-operation and Co-ordination of various National Forces are still to be obtained, but the Idea, big and vital, is now three years old, and at Lockport, under the persistent care and love of the man who conceived it—Mr. A. A. Van De Mark—has grown to gratifying importance.

Last week there were held at this Festival twenty-one sessions with a fine average attendance and a maximum far in excess of one thousand people.

The work of 162 American Composers was shown in a list comprising 506 compositions, not counting encores, and there were more than seventy American Artists and Speakers on the various programs.

Lockport (being near Buffalo) is about equi-distant from Boston, New York and Chicago, and while the second named city was in preponderance of representation last year, Chicago was far in the lead at the Festival of last week.

From this city there were present Carrie Jacobs Bond, Charles W. Clark, Lucile Stevenson, Frederica Gerhardt Downing, Mable Corlew Smith, Carol Robinson, Amy Emerson Neill, Winifred Lamb, Theodora Sturkow-Ryder, Harriet Case, Bertha Beeman, Edna Gunnar Peterson, Lacy Coe, Lucy J. Hartman, Isabel Cline, Gertrude Kastholm Darsie, Grace Brune-Marcusson, John Rankel, Jessie Comlossy and George Darsie.

> "Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee."
> Psalms 76:10.

Chicago Composers were well represented on the programs, though few were present.

Splendid short songs of scores of Composers were presented, the East predominating in the number of Composers.

There were present, playing their own accompaniments usually, Fay Foster, Hallett Gilberte, Wm. Arms Fisher, Carrie Jacobs Bond, Frederic W. Vanderpool, Harry M. Gilbert, John Prindle Scott, Harvey Worthington Loomis, Robert Huntington Terry, David Wendel Guion, Anna Priscilla Risher, Lacy Coe, Gaylord Yost, Mme. Sturkow-Ryder, Arthur Hartmann, Gertrude M. Rohrer, and probably a number of others playing encores and other special numbers.

Not because they were more interesting or better done (in kind) than the short works, it may be mentioned that the larger compositions presented at the Festival included an operalogue on "Shanewis" by Charles Wakefield Cadman (Pittsburgh-Los Angeles), his Piano Sonata in A Major, and his Trio in D Major (Piano, Violin, Cello); Trio Serenade (Opus 61), Adolph M. Foerster (Pittsburgh); Concerto (A Minor), MacDowell; Sonata, F. S. Converse; "Theme and Variations" (Piano), Ernest Schelling (Boston); Concerto for Violin (E Minor), Cecil Burleigh (of the West)); Sonata for Violin and Piano, John Alden Carpenter (Chicago); Sonata (Opus 28) for Piano, Arne Oldberg (Chicago); and Concerto (G Minor) and "Louisiana Suite for Violin," Gaylord Yost (Indianapolis), played by the Composer.

This is a great showing and the recapitulation not only will give some idea of the recent feast at Lockport, but also is a presage of glorious things in the future.

Some things at Lockport need revision, of course; improvements galore are suggested, and some of them are practical.

Next year there should be absolutely no encores.

The immediate repetition of a very successful number should always be permissible, but no performer should be permitted to return to the stage and give an extra.

The program, as arranged and printed, is too big to lend itself gracefully to this sort of thing.

Mediocrity, both as to composition and in performance, must, of course, be governed and curbed, but with the growth of the institution this can readily be cared for and it must never be lost sight of that Lockport is a "melting pot"—that everything should be heard in proper time and place.

And always—only the good will survive, and only the best will reach the top.

The desirability of Lockport as a place for the Festival was again emphasized. Among the speakers at the Friday night Banquet none were more logical and forceful than Mrs. Bond and Mme. Sturkow-Ryder. And each of them dwelt upon the natural loveliness of the fine old town and its social and cultural aspects, while its very size makes it ideal as the future American Bayreuth.

Other interesting speeches were made at intervals, as reported elsewhere in this issue of Music News.

Among them, the two addresses of Leonard Liebling of the Musical Course were glittering in style and delivery.

The editor of Music News made an address on Friday morning on "Commercialism," in which he announced that this paper henceforth will be champion of the American Musician in his effort to put his work into money valuations.

If the American Artist is now good enough to do the composing, teaching, playing and singing which have for so long been done in this country by a preponderance of Foreigners, then, indeed, is he worthy to be paid just as freely as these others have been paid.

A declaration of principles and a persistent fight against prevailing false business standards is now in order, and Music News hereby devotes itself to the propaganda.

So persistent and insistent was the request that "Commercialism" be printed in Music News, we have given a promise that it will be so reproduced, and our readers may look for it in the next issue.

ANN ARBOR CONCERTS WILL ASSEMBLE BEST MUSICAL TALENT

The Ann Arbor Concert Series has just announced an unusually attractive list of artists for the coming year.

Enrico Caruso, the greatest tenor of all time, will open the course Saturday evening, October 19. Hill Auditorium has been the scene of many brilliant musical entertainments, but Caruso's coming is expected to eclipse all previous attractions. The fact that the concert occurs on the evening of the day of the annual M. A. C.-Michigan football game is of special interest to friends and alumni of the two great state institutions, who will have opportunity of witnessing both events.

Monday evening, November 18, Anna Case, the renowned American operatic and concert artist, will appear in recital. She has distinguished herself as a shining light among the Metropolitan Opera's many stars and her splendid artistry has won for her a host of enthusiastic admirers.

Monday evening, December 16, Leopold Godowsky, the famous Russian pianist, will make his Ann Arbor debut. He is one of the few great piano virtuosos who have not been heard in this series. He was first heard in America, where he was heralded as one of the greatest. Since 1885 he has toured the country several times and has made it his home. He is referred to as "the most American of foreign artists."

Tuesday evening, January 21, Joseph Bonnet, the distinguished French organist, will make his second appearance in Ann Arbor. His trumph as a festival artist last May was so pronounced that his immediate re-engagement for a second appearance before his return to France was necessary to satisfy the insistent demands of Ann Arbor concert patrons.

Tuesday, February 18, Toscha Seidel, the last and greatest of Auer's violin sensations, will appear in the final pre-festival concert. The Boston Transcript has aptly illustrated the different processes of the two remarkable young men, Heifetz and Seidel, by the phrase that "Heifetz plays like an angel," whereas "Seidel plays like a devil." In other words, the great perfection which is attained by the one with almost uncanny ease and apparently without effort is secured by the other as the result of conscientious and dogged persistence.

The annual festival will be held during four days in May and will consist of six concerts, utilizing the combined efforts of orchestra, chorus, organ and a list of the world's greatest artists, both vocal and instrumental.

Those desiring further information may secure illustrated announcement by addressing Charles A. Sink, Secretary, Ann Arbor, Mich.

"SPECIAL SCHOLARSHIPS"

The Official Board of the Western Conservatory has issued 200 partial scholarships for the purpose of enabling earnest pupils to study under superior advantages at reduced expense during the present war conditions, rather than be compelled to resort to inferior instruction.

The only essential requirement is a pledge of earnestness and sincerity in study and practice. Failure in this regard will at any time forfeit the scholarship.

RESUME OF RAVINIA PARK SEASON

At this writing the season at the north shore resort, Ravinia Park, has passed into history that will surely repeat itself next year under the guiding hand of Louis Eckstein, who was recently elected as the head of the Ravinia Club for another period of five years.

The season passed as it opened—in a blaze of glory, with practically the same cast singing the story of the Flowery Kingdom, "Mme. Butterfly."

To be sure, there were off-nights and cool weather to mar the otherwise sereneness of financial success, but no one can deny that Ravinia today is an artistic monument to the ideal spirit of the idealists of Chicago.

Then, too, the management corralled the best talent obtainable. Temperamental Italians mingled with high-strung Frenchmen and ambitious Americans, showing that not only in war but in song we are allies.

The most notable newcomer was Claudia Muzio, whose rare dramatic powers and beautiful dramatic voice have placed her in the foremost ranks of the world's really great singers of today.

Her appearance was always the signal for hearty applause and capacity audiences. She appeared in a large variety of roles: Aida, Leonora, Tosca, Santuzza, Marguerite, Mimi, Nedda and Manon, and for some superhuman reason her personality and vocal equipment seemed to visualize each character she assumed.

Sophie Braslau, contralto, another singer new to Chicago, gained much prestige and will be welcomed back enthusiastically next season. This singer made her roles count for something, and the public was unanimous in her praise.

Leon Rothier, basso-cantante, the last of the three new Metropolitan favorites, by his conscientious singing and superb acting convinced the Ravinia clientele early in the season that there were good things in store for them, which he afterward lived up to.

Of the visiting artists, Mabel Garrison made a good impression. She is an old favorite, who renewed old acquaintances and formed hosts of new ones.

Then Lucy Gates—and for the last week or so Edith Mason—returned, causing a furore as Micaela in "Carmen."

Ruth Miller was heard with pleasure, though her roles were small; but next season we are promised this young singer in a wide variety of roles.

The regular staff of tenors was headed by Morgan Kingston, the best beloved of the men, who sang in excellent voice all season; Orville Harold, much improved; Millo Picco, as usual, up to a standard, while Louis D'Angelo and Francesco Daddi lent valuable aid.

Perhaps the time will come when even Caruso, Muratore and La Galli-Curci will raise their golden voices at this delectable garden spot of the West. Till then we will pack away our "memories" of the season just culminated, and when the golden sunshine of Summer spreads its warm rays and the silvery moon and stars shine again will the music-lovers flock to Ravinia and live over the bandbox operas, with the versatile directors, Richard Hageman and Gennaro Papi, at the helm.

Hammond—Jessie M. Hammond, harpist, of Lockport, N. Y., spent the Summer at Seal Harbor, Maine.

HERBERT WHITNEY TEW

To say that the following recital of songs, given last Monday evening in the artistic studios of Mr. Tew, was interesting is expressing one's sentiments moderately indeed, for the work of Mr. Tew's pupils has a fascination both for the ardent enthusiasts who are acquainted with the principles which he exemplifies and for those who merely come as casual listeners. The following pupils sang:

A Summer Night (contralto).....Goring-Thomas
Ah, forse lui (soprano).....Verdi
Mlle. Roxan D'Oex
O don fatale.....Verdi
Miss Dorothy Wood
Bible Songs, Nos. 1 and 2 (contralto).....Dvorak
Lo, Here the Gentle Lark (soprano).....Bishop
Caro Nome.....Verdi
Miss Verra Schuette
Morning Hymn.....Henschel
O That We Two Were Maying.....Nevin
Mrs. Elsie Melius
Recitative and aria—The People that Walked in Darkness (Messiah).....Handel
A Farewell Song.....Maude Valerie White
John Alcott
The Cuckoo (More Daisies).....Liza Lehmann
Robin Adair.....Old Scotch
Miss Emma Berg
Lament of Isis (contralto).....Granville Bantock
Micaela's Song, Carmen (soprano).....Bizet
Mrs. John Alcott
Shadow Song (Dinorah).....Meyerbeer
Polonaise (Mignon).....Thomas
(Interpolated cadenza, 3½ octaves)
Mlle. Roxan D'Oex
First Love Dream.....Liszt
Prelude.....Schutt
Miss Lucy Levy
Misses Harriet Cartwright and Miss Lucy Levy at the piano

Soon after the beginning of the program Mr. Tew gave a short talk on the principles with which he works and explained something of the way in which he was enabled to discover them. Mlle. D'Oex, who is perhaps his most advanced pupil, sang with a great deal of style. Her presence is charming and her voice of very pleasing quality. Her range, like that of so many of the Tew pupils, was amazing. It is very rarely that one hears the same soloist sing a soprano and a contralto number in the same group. This, however, is one of Mr. Tew's specialties, and in developing range he is certainly most successful. Another interesting example of unusual range was given by Miss Verra Schuette, who sang a three-octave arpeggio to the height of A flat in altissimo, a feat which this writer never before heard accomplished. Besides this demonstration of her ability, Miss Schuette sang one contralto and two soprano songs with great fluency and clearness of tone.

Miss Dorothy Wood, who sang Verdi's "O don fatale," demonstrated clearly that Mr. Tew is no less successful in training a voice of the heavier quality.

Mr. and Mrs. John Alcott both made worthy contributions to the program. Mr. Alcott sang first the aforementioned bass aria from "The Messiah," followed by a tenor song. Mr. Alcott's voice shows careful training in both ranges, though the caliber of the voice is essentially high and light. Mrs. Alcott's voice was full and built along heavier lines, though her rendition of Micaela's Song from "Carmen" showed that she was capable of doing justice to the lighter work.

Mrs. Melius and Miss Emma Berg also proved themselves commendable products of the Tew system, giving scholarly attention to matters of interpretation as well as to the more technical aspects of the method.

Mlle. D'Oex's cadenza of three and one-half octaves must have astounded any listener, though it was not heard by this writer, who, unfortunately, had to leave early. We only know that a high F sharp taken in the Verdi aria came as a pleasing and unexpected surprise to some of the listeners as well as to Mr. Tew.

Mr. Tew may well look back upon this evening as a great success.

MARY CARVER WILLIAMS.

RUSSELL STUDIOS

The second annual banquet of the Russell Choral Club was held at the Capitol Tea room, Republic building.

The management furnished a very commodious private room, with piano for the entertainment of the young ladies.

Between courses, toasts and riddles served to pass the time pleasantly. At the close of the banquet Miss Clara Lindland, chairman for the evening, presented the Russell Trio, Miss Louise Trietz, Leah Gehri and Mabel Hatton. Their singing of "Morning" (Speaks) and "Murmuring Zephyrs" (Jensen) was heartily applauded. Lucile Hayley and Louise Trietz added solos to the program.

The chorus will commence the season's work next Monday, Sept. 16th, at Mrs. Russell's studio in the Lyon & Healy building.

NEIRA RIEGGER

Neira Riegger, who met with splendid success during last winter and who appeared at many important concerts, is engaged for next season as the head of the Vocal department at the Knox School in Tarrytown, N. Y. Mrs. Riegger will be very busy with her new duties and with the various concerts which have already been booked by her manager. She will appear at a number of return dates in New York state and will also take part in a great many charity affairs. During the last few weeks she has given her services to entertain the soldiers in the camps.

KARL B. STEIN

Mr. and Mrs. Karl B. Stein of the Auditorium Conservatory have returned from a month's vacation, motoring through the Rocky Mountains of Colorado, and are beginning their regular season at the newly furnished and completely renovated studios in the Auditorium building. Large classes are already booked, and more are being added daily. Plans are already under way for the production of the light and grand operas, plays and general recitals, for which the students of this school are noted. Though the service flag of this institution boasts of thirty-two stars, there has been no slackening of its splendid musical activities.

ALLEN RAY CARPENTER

Allen Ray Carpenter, teacher of singing, announces the reopening of his Kimball Hall studios for the season of 1918-1919.

The past season has indeed been the most active in his experience, with a weekly average of eighty-five lessons.

Mr. Carpenter's musical activities are not confined to teaching, singing and lecturing in Chicago alone, for Bloomington and Springfield, Ill., make heavy demands upon his time. He has organized in both cities large classes in singing and choral bodies which are rapidly becoming the center of musical influence in both communities. Surely an instructor more competent could not be chosen for this character of work, for his experience covers every phase of musical endeavor, having sung in all parts of this country with large choral bodies, festivals and orchestras, as well as in Europe. His former teachers are warm in their praise of his musicianship and sterling qualities, and no names in the profession rank higher than those of Jean de Reszke, Claude Debussy, Dousset-Sicard and Frederick Woodman Root, with whom he was associated for years.

Prominent among the long list of artists now under the guidance of Mr. Carpenter is Harriet Mertz, mezzo-contralto, who, for many years, was a leading church soloist of St. Louis. She will sing for Camp Grant next month. George Stump, tenor, who has been filling engagements throughout the central states, has returned with press reports unstinting in their approval of his art. Katherine Strehman, dramatic soprano, writes of her early return from St. Paul and the west, where she has earned many distinguished successes. Mrs. Elizabeth Thornberry, coloratura soprano, one of Mr. Carpenter's very recent successful products, has joined the ranks of the Church of the Covenant, Washington, D. C. Mrs. Amy J. Black, soprano soloist, at Abraham Lincoln's old church in Springfield, will be the guest at the Amateur Musical Club of that city this month.

Many other promising singers are enrolled in his classes at this time or have engaged lesson time.

Mr. Carpenter has been engaged for the fifth consecutive year as soloist at Tenth Church of Christ, Scientist.

Parry—Mme. M. Barbereux Parry has returned from her third summer school in Asheville, N. C. Mme. Parry, whose work is the Barbereux System of Constructive Voice Production and Unified Diction, is associated with the Effa Ellis Perfield Music School and her National Conservatory. Her system is becoming widely known and appreciated; she is fast establishing associate teachers in all parts of the country, and these summer school centers offer an opportunity to teachers and students for intensive study of the system. Mme. Parry will open a handsome new studio, 506 Fine Arts building, Sept. 30. Students are already arranging hours, and many states will be represented in this season's class.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

The thirty-third school year of the American Conservatory opened Monday, Sept. 9, with a record-breaking attendance, especially of non-resident students. The outlook for a prosperous season was never more auspicious.
